That's Paramount SHOWMANSHIP!

TOP THIS ONE IF YOU CAN!

BORN TO BATTLE: Tom Tyler—I never did see a title fit like this one did. If he doesn't battle I have failed to ever see a battle, and to carry out the title the kid has a battle that absolutely sets the kids wild. Out of the 800 that is made every year I do not believe I could have selected anything that would have filled the bill as good as this one did. I used "Born to Battle" for the kids' Christmas morning, but I had oodles of adults ask me after the show if I wouldn't run it in the afternoon instead of "The Freshmen" which I was using. C. E. Longacre, Dixie Theatre, Dickson, Tenn.

"I SAW A WONDERFUL PICTURE TODAY!"

READ THIS!

—here's a valuable thought on "The Fire Brigade"

READ this interesting report on "The Fire Brigade" expressed recently by a guest at a dinner party. The opinion of an average group is the most valuable slant on a picture that a showman can hope to obtain. Therefore, we print this conversation as reported. It is typical of many similar tributes paid to "The Fire Brigade."

IN advertising this picture to patrons, remember that above all, the public loves a love story and "The Fire Brigade" is one of the greatest ever told on the screen!

"YOU must see 'The Fire Brigade'—it's a real picture," said the dinner guest. "Not only for the thrills which are marvelous, but even more for its beautiful love story.

"There are few romances on the screen that really have moved me so much. I think the public will rank it as one of the greatest of all love stories."

David Schaefer Wins First Prize For Laugh Month

Scates Wins the Second, Mumson the Third

At a luncheon at the Hotel Lorraine, New York, on March 1, the members of the Laugh Month Committee entertained the trade press, Gordon White of Educational presiding, and after the luncheon the editors went over the entries in the Laugh Month competition and awarded the prizes.

After considerable deliberation the first prize of $200 went to David Schaefer of the Central Theatre, Jersey City, who not only made an elaborate and far-flung campaign but was about the only one to sell the month rather than some section of that period.

Second prize of $100 was awarded C. P. Scates of the American Theatre, Butte, Montana. He used two contests and a number of general stunts, but he made his drive toward the end of the month, centering his efforts on a four-day "Karnival."

Third prize of $50 went to Clark Mumson of the Robey Theatre, Spencer, W. Va., who offered an extensive campaign.

Four prizes of $25 each were awarded Frank V. Kennebeck of the Grand Theatre, Omaha; A. C. Raleigh of the Coliseum, Seattle; W. B. Franke, Strand Theatre, Humboldt, Iowa, and Bud Silverman, Arcadia Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Three prizes of $5 each were awarded H. A. Giles, Royal and Pastime Theatres, Garret, Ind.; Guy Bayes, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Va., and S. N. McGregor, Walton Theatre, Walton, N. Y.

Late Chicago News

Lubliner & Trinz new Belpark Theatre opens March 12. The house seats 2,000 and represents twenty-fifth in the twenty-fifth house in the circuit.

Henry Atkinson and George Webb, theatre robbers, face long sentences for robbing the Desplaines, Elmhurst and Palace theatres.

Rutgers the Third

The publicity ranks received a lively addition last Saturday morning when young Rutgers Neilson, 3rd, arrived to greet a popular couple, Mr. and Mrs. Rutgers Neilson of Pathe. The young publicist reported at St. Ann's Hospital in New York where both mother and babe are doing right well.

Brown Buys Two Reeler

Colvin W. Brown, vice-president of F. B. O. in charge of foreign distribution, has purchased the United States, Canadian and United Kingdom rights to a two-reel subject entitled "Nothing But the Hours." A sample print is being shipped to New York.

Sue Over W. C. Fields

Philip Goodman, musical comedy producer, is suing Famous Players for $100,000 damages for "enticing" William C. Fields into breach of contract. Fields recently was sued by Charles Walton on a similar allegation. Walton, a casting director, asked $151,950.

A Clean Slate

The Oregon Legislature proposed bills on a 10 per cent. tax admission, a theatre seating tax and censorship, but none of them had passed when it adjourned on February 25.

Stanley Co. Gains Control Of First National Pictures

Wall Street Ticker Carries Report of Deal Between Two Powerful Banking Firms

By Sumner Smith

WALL STREET has information to the effect that the Stanley Company of America has gained control of First National Pictures Inc. The news of a secret meeting last Monday night in Philadelphia, which is said to have resulted in the change of power, came over the ticker. The banking firm of Hayden-Stone, which is interested in First National and West Coast Theatres, has relinquished control of the former to E. B. Smith, the Philadelphia bankers who are interested in the Stanley company.

However the change of ownership may affect the production policy of First National, which will spend between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000 on product this year, one probable result will be the development of a chain of theatres from coast to coast.

with the Stanley company dominating in the East and West Coast Theatres in the West. Spyros Skouras, the St. Louis magnate, attended the secret meeting and it is probable he will have much to say about the development of the chain in the Middle West.

The Stanley company now dominates the theatres of Harry Crandall, Moe Mark, Walter Hays, the Fabians, Nate Gordon, Jake Wells and Rowland & Clark. It is acquiring new theatres probably at a faster rate than any other theatre circuit.

The contract of Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National, has a year to run after next August.

It's known that most of the members of First National have been in New York over a week. Some of them were to leave town this week on a trip to the South and the West Coast. Among them are John J. McGuirk, Moe Mark, Col. Fred Levy, Harry Crandall and Walter Hays.

Mr. McGuirk was not in New York today (Thursday) and could not be reached in Philadelphia. No statement was forthcoming from the First National offices.

Shallenberger Manages New Plaza Pictures, Inc.

Plaza Pictures, Inc., is the title of a new picture producing and distributing corporation just organized under the laws of the State of New York with temporary offices located in Loew's State Theatre Building, occupying Suite 1202. W. E. Shallenberger, one of the best known motion picture executives, has been appointed general manager.

For the first year Plaza will produce at least six comedies with well-known stars, directors and authors. Each will be over six reels in length. In addition, for the first year, two super specials will be made.

Paramount Will Concentrate Feature Production in West

In the future Famous Players will concentrate all feature production in its big new studio in Hollywood. The Long Island studio will become available for Publix Theatres, Inc., as space for the rehearsal of the unit shows which feature the weekly presentations throughout the country. The Paramount Short Features Department, now being organized for release next August, will be located here.

The announcement was made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production. Transfer of activities will be effected as each unit finishes its current picture. About 25 per cent. of Paramount pictures have been made in the East. It is felt that all can be made in Hollywood, and made better. No reduction in the production schedule is anticipated, Mr. Lasky said.

One picture is now in production in the Long Island studio, W. C. Fields' next starring subject, and preparations have been completed for four others. As they are finished the units will be sent west.

The executive forces of the Long Island studio will be transferred to the West Coast.

To Handle Sales

Fred C. Quimby has been appointed to handle sales for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Short Subject Department, under the supervision of Felix F. Feist, general manager of sales and distribution. For two years Mr. Quimby has supervised the Short Subject Department of Fox Films. The M.-G.-M. "shorts" will include a novel, ambitious news reel, the Hal Roach comedies and many novelty reels.

Some Bad Spots

The M. P. T. O. A. announces, after a survey, that business depressions exist in certain parts of the country, as follows: New England is suffering a curtailment of the textile trade, the hard coal fields of Northeastern Pennsylvania are "just staggering along" and a bituminous coal strike is threatened, and California is in the throes of a "terrific business depression, the worst in ten years."

French Film Exports Decrease During 1926

Exports of motion picture films from France during 1926 totaled 4,823 metric quintals, valued at 123,912,000 francs, as compared with exports of 5,210 metric quintals with a value of 187,560,000 francs in 1925. The 1926 exports included 3,310 quintals of impressions, or developed film, valued at 108,443,000 francs, and 1,513 quintals of sensiblisés, or raw film, valued at 15,469,000 francs. In 1925 the exports of the two classes of films were not reported separately.

710 Placements Daily

Seven hundred and ten placements a day have been the average maintained by the Central Casting Bureau for extras in Hollywood during the first year of its operation. More than 259,000 placements were made during the year. The supply of extras, however, far exceeds the demand. There are approximately 18,000 registered and of these only 710 can be used a day.

Admission Price Wasted

Twelve policemen stopped hundreds of people last Sunday as they tried to enter the Carlton Theatre, Red Bank, N. J., to attend an advertised performance. An open Sunday fight is raging in the city.

Mysterious Wealth

A box neatly wrapped and found to contain $6,442 in bills, was received in the mail by Tom Arthur, manager of the Cecil Theatre, Mason City, Ia. The return address was a vacant lot in Dubuque. "Please accept this in payment of a debt of many years" is the way a note read lying on the cover of the cedar chest in which the money came. Mr. Arthur is "dumb" as to what it is all about.

Sings For Films

Raquel Meller, famous Spanish artist, who made a Movie-tone production, both record and voice, in the Fox-Case Laboratory before returning to Spain.

No Babies in Lobby

Baby carriages can no longer be parked in the lobby of any theatre in Troy, N. Y., as the result of a recent ruling on the part of the city authorities. All theatre owners and managers were notified last week by the chief of the fire department. One theatre is now using the rear room of a restaurant next door to accommodate the mothers.

Donald Keith Marries

Donald Keith, leading man, last Sunday married Kathryn Spicuzza, 21-year-old Los Angeles girl. Miss Spicuzza, a graduate of Manual Arts High School, Los Angeles, has never appeared in pictures nor seen her husband upon the screen.

Withers in Portland

Lee Marcus, general sales manager of F. B. O., announces that W. T. Withers has been made manager of the Portland exchange of Film Booking Offices, succeeding H. F. Moore, resigned.

Swanson Co. Renamed

Gloria Swanson has changed the name of her independent unit releasing through United Artists Corporation from the Swanson Producing Corporation to Gloria Swanson Productions, Inc.

McNamara Signed by F.B.O.

Tom McNamara, cartoonist, writer and globe traveller, has signed with F. B. O. as scenarist.

Roxy Opens March 11

The date of March 11 has been set for the opening of the Roxy Theatre, New York City. Tickets are very much at a premium.

Jean Dupont Now Scenarist

Jean Dupont, chief reader in F. B. O. scenario department, has been promoted to scenarist.

Ontario Abolishes Tax On Tickets to 25 Cents

Hon. J. D. Monteith, Provincial treasurer of Ontario, has abolished the amusement tax on theatre tickets up to 25 cents as collected for ten years, because of the prospect of a Provincial surplus during the current year. The cut in the tax means a loss to the Province of $600,000 a year. The tax abolished had been one cent on tickets up to 15 cents and 2 cents on an admission ticket from 15 to 25 cents.

In Quebec the Legislature has adopted measures to provide for the collection of the tax on regular theatre passes and complimentary tickets which have largely escaped the levy.

Premier John Bracken of the Manitoba Government has announced at Winnipeg that important changes are due in the Manitoba Amusement Tax to afford relief for theatres and patrons in Manitoba cities.

Seven N. Y. Incorporations

Motion picture companies incorporating these days in New York State are holding up well, with each week showing an average of about seven and with capitalization substantial. Companies incorporating in the business this week included: Meyer Golden, Inc., capitalized at $10,000, with Meyer Golden, Maurice Golden, Dorothy Lefkon, New York City; Lyons and Lyons, Inc., $6,000, Arthur B. and Samuel T. Lyons, New York City; Frank J. Friedman, Brooklyn; Pearschal Theatrical Corp., $5,000, Henry Pearlman, Emma Dresdner, Cora Fitzgerald, New York City; Lew Cantor, Inc., $5,000, Sidney Kalfus, New York City; Frank J. Friedman, Bertha Safier, Brooklyn; Windsor Terrace Amusement Co., Inc., $20,000, Hyman Winograd, New York; William W. Kapell, Milton B. Barnett, Brooklyn; Cortstate Corporation, capitalization not stated, Gloversville, Peter T. Dana, E. P. Keiner, J. G. Selmsler, Gloversville; Alldeno Incorporated, capitalization not stated, Anthony P. Uihlein, Frank Martocci, James V. Hayes, New York City.

No Title Change

Again companies are having trouble in avoiding duplication of titles. Johnny Hines' latest film, "All Aboard," will, by special permission, retain the name of Matt Taylor's story, though Fox used the title for a two-reel picture and P. D. C. had registered it for future use. Matters were straightened out through the courtesy of William Fox, Cecil B. De Mille and John C. Flinn.

Phil Dunas Promoted

Phil Dunas, sales supervisor of Reginald Denny productions for Universal, has been appointed to the sales directorate of that company and will headquarter at Cleveland. The following exchanges come under his authority: Cleveland, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Detroit and Indianapolis.

Willat Succeeds Reynolds

Carl Laemmle has selected Irvin Willat to complete "Back to God's Country," the James Oliver Curwood picture which was in production under the direction of Lynn Reynolds at the time of the latter's recent death.

COMING and GOING

Cresson E. Smith, general sales manager, Middle Western Division, of United Artists Corporation, left on February 20 for a fortnight's sales' trip through the Middle West. He will visit Chicago, Detroit, Indianapolis and other cities in his territory.

Moxley Hill, general sales manager, Eastern Division of United Artists, returned on February 21 from a two weeks' New England sales trip. Mr. Hill not only visited New England centers, but Philadelphia as well.

Wallace Beery will go to Hollywood next week.

Morris Safier, head of Warner Bros. Extended Run Department, after returning two weeks ago from a three weeks' trip, hit the trail again last week headed for Cleveland, Chicago, Indianapolis and St. Louis. He returned this week.

Lya de Putti, signed by Cecil De Mille, has arrived in New York.

Max Reinhardt sails this week for Europe.

Alice Joyce leaves shortly for the West Coast.

Owen Davis, who conferred over a story with Thomas Meighan in Florida, has returned to New York.

Jack Cohn, treasurer of Columbia Pictures, left this week for the company's West Coast studios, where he will remain for several months. Harry Cohn, vice-president in charge of production, will, upon Jack Cohn's arrival in California, close options on several books, stories, stars and directors to be used in the company's production plans for the season 1927-28.

F. W. Murnau has finished editing "Sunrise," his first American motion picture, and he plans to leave Hollywood March 8 for New York. He will sail for Germany later in the month. His colleagues in Hollywood gave a farewell luncheon in his honor on March 3.

Olga Printzlau, who did the scenario on United Artists' "Camille," has returned to New York from Hollywood.

Samuel Goldwyn left with Mrs. Goldwyn for Los Angeles on Thursday. Gilda Gray, whom he has signed, will follow him westward the first week of April.

C. C. Pettijohn of the Hays office has returned from a tour of several cities.

M. H. Hoffman, vice-president of Tiffany, left last Saturday for Miami, and after a few days there will proceed to Hollywood via Chicago.

Ed J. Smith, general sales manager of Tiffany, left last Wednesday for an official visit to the Tiffany exchanges in the Middle West. He will also make a detour to the South.

Film Review of Motion Pictures Vastly Improved

National Review Board Makes Changes

Following the suggestion of Moving Picture World and other publications, the National Board of Review repeated, in more permanent form, its historical compilation, "Thirty Years of Motion Pictures" at Carnegie Hall on February 28. This was a benefit performance designed to raise the funds to make this a permanent record of motion picture progress.

The picture shown was largely different from the original fourteen reels, amplifying many features and correcting many errors. Fuller credit is given the real developers of the cinema and misplaced credits made in the earlier release have been withdrawn.

The section devoted to the earlier short subjects has been greatly amplified by Jean A. Leroy, one of the pioneers who includes the French cavalry picture that was the earliest "knockout" of the Lumiere Cinematograph and the Black Diamond Express; the Edison equivalent of the Biograph's original hit, the Empire State Express.

Throughout the long showing there have been many changes to make even stronger the photographic record, but the selections have not always been made with the best judgment. For example, the cuts from "Moana" are far from being from the most interesting phases of that picture, and the "Nanook" section runs a little too long.

Brandt Names A. Schneider

Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures, has promoted Abe Schneider to the position of assistant secretary to the company. The appointment makes Mr. Schneider the youngest executive in the company. Six years ago he was graduated from high school.

Goldwyn Signs De Sano

Samuel Goldwyn has signed Marcel De Sano, 28-year-old Rumanian director, to direct a series of four Samuel Goldwyn presentation for release through United Artists Corporation. Mr. De Sano's last direction was done for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Royster Manager

Nat L. Royster, well known theatre manager, will be general manager of a chain of picture theatres being formed in North Carolina by the Southern Amusement Company. Mr. Royster has completely recovered from his illness of several weeks. He recently resigned from the Auditorium Theatre, Charlotte.

Quits The Shimmy

Gilda Gray, signed to a five-year contract by Samuel Goldwyn, will play a nun in a film of Edward Knoblock's play, "Marie Odile," when her husband and manager, Gil Boag, completes negotiations with David Belasco for the screen rights. Gilda will be starred in one Goldwyn-United Artists picture each year for five years.

E. B. Hatrick Explains M-G-M's New Newsreel

The statement that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will issue a newsreel and that this newsreel will be made by the Hearst organization has caused some confusion in view of the fact that International Newsreel, released by Universal, is made by the International Newsreel Corporation, owned by William Randolph Hearst.

A statement issued by E. B. Hatrick, who has full charge of all Mr. Hearst's film interests, clears the atmosphere.

"The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer newsreel," said Mr. Hatrick, "will be made by the Hearst News Service, Inc., and will be operated as independently from the International Newsreel as it will be from any other newsreel in the field. The M.-G.-M. newsreel will have an entirely separate camera and editorial staff. It will, of course, be organized along the same lines as International Newsreel, as these lines have proven to be the most successful."

New York Legislature Delays Action on Picture Measures

No action has yet been taken on the part of the New York State Legislature on the two bills of much interest to exhibitors. The bill seeking to amend the general city law in fixing daylight saving time in cities and villages of New York State is still dormant in committee. This bill would not allow daylight saving to start earlier than May 15, nor later than September 15.

At the present time, daylight saving in New York State can begin as early as the last Sun-

Fox Will Erect Big Theatres Wherever Poorly Represented

Grainger Leaves on Survey of Greater Part of Country—To Rush Building Plans

WILLIAM FOX has sent James R. Grainger, general sales manager, on a tour of southern, middle western and western territory with the avowed purpose of learning the exact strength of Fox pictures in key cities and of planning to immediately build Fox theatres in any weak spots that Mr. Grainger may discover.

The statement is made that "in those key cities in which Fox Film Corporation is now receiving adequate and fair representation from existing theatres, Fox will not build in opposition to those theatres, no matter how tempting a proposition it might be to put a Fox theatre into operation against such theatres."

Opens New Home

With the opening this week of his new home, the Casa Grande del Monte, one of the most magnificent estates in the Beverly Hills film colony, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, definitely established his permanent home on the West Coast. This does not mean that the Universal chief will not spend considerable time each year in New York, in Europe and elsewhere, but that he plans to spend most of his time where he can keep his finger-tips on the studio.

Naked Truth Dinner to Boast Many Celebrities

A host of screen celebrities will attend the Naked Truth Dinner, acceptances for the annual film frolic on April 2, at the Astor Hotel, have already been received by Walter Eberhardt, president of the A. M. P. A., from Richard Dix, Ben Lyon, Lois Wilson, George Walsh, Robert Kane, Sam Hardy, Ruth Dwyer, Forrest Halsey, Leland Hayward, Joseph Boyle and Andre De Seguro.

Abie the Agent will be a distinguished guest and right now he is doing his bit to make the affair a success. Harry Hirshfield, famous cartoonist, creator of Abie, is making some special drawings.

"Second, that in those first-run centers in which Fox product is unable under existing conditions to secure adequate representation, Fox Film Corporation will build the most modern theatres of the largest seating capacity as quickly as it can formulate plans and put them into effect—and this despite any existing combinations or theatres, chains of theatres, producer-exhibitors, or like conditions."

Action on this policy, announced by Mr. Fox two years ago, is forced at the present time by the various competing theatre combinations and by the block-booking of product other than Fox pictures.

Mr. Grainger's tour will take three or four weeks, possibly even longer. His objective is the West Coast studios where he will consult with Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager, who for more than a year has been in Hollywood in charge of production. It is now probable that Mr. Fox will join Mr. Sheehan and Mr. Grainger in the West during April.

Mr. Grainger's itinerary will take him through the South, where he will visit Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas and other points before going to Hollywood. There he will spend a week in conference with Mr. Sheehan, then make a general tour of first-run centers west of Chicago, especially visiting those points in which Fox is building theatres or where he contemplates building in the near future.

The trip will have nothing to do with selling. Mr. Grainger said specifically that he will do no selling while on it. He will study first-run conditions and prepare a last-minute report for presentation to Mr. Fox upon his return east.

Pommer in M-G-M

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has signed Erich Pommer, prominent German film executive, to serve as associate producer under Irving Thalberg. Pommer came to this country last year and has been studying American methods of production. His first unit assignment for M.-G.-M. has not yet been decided upon.

Try Bus Service

A theatre bus service has been inaugurated in Watertown, N. Y., in order to bring additional business from the surrounding territory to the theatres in that city. The idea originated with the Schine brothers, who recently took over three theatres in Watertown and who now have about seventy-five houses in New York State. The theatre excursions are to run into Watertown from ten nearby villages each Sunday and Thursday nights, with special rates, including a ticket, as an inducement. Theatre parties will be arranged in these villages each week.

Charge Misrepresentation

Representatives of various social agencies in Minneapolis last week sent a telegram to Will Hays protesting the continued showing of "It," which was being exhibited at the State Theatre, Minneapolis, a Finkelstein and Ruben house. The telegram, which was signed by the president of the Minneapolis Council of Social Agencies, the general chairman of the Community Fund and the presidents of several other social organizations, declared that "picture misrepresent social workers" and that it contains scenes which "undermine the support which the unfortunate of the nation must have."

Chicago Forms League

The Balaban and Katz circuit has organized a basketball league. There will be eight teams from the B. and K. houses and four from the Lubliner and Trinz circuit in the league. W. J. Dubach, manager of the Service Department, is in charge and Roy Bruder of the Chicago Theatre is coach. A team will also represent Balaban & Katz in the Chicago Industrial League tournament.

Join F. P. News Reel

In his building of a strong organization for the production of Paramount News, Mr. Emmanuel Cohen, in charge of Paramount's short features production department, has appointed Albert J. Richard news editor of the semi-weekly service and William C. Park, make-up editor.

Last Minute News Flashes

Union Theatres, Ltd., Australia, has contracted with First National, P. D. C. and F. B. O. for 24 of their first-runs a year for three years. The price is put at $1,250,000.

Taylor Holmes will quit the stage to play leads in two-reel domestic comedies produced by Gaiety Pictures. Amedee J. Van Beuren, president. Leander de Cordova will be in charge of production.

Rembusch Broadside Sent to Atty. General

Frank J. Rembusch, president of the Indiana M.P.T.O., is continuing his fight against motion picture producers and distributors, inaugurated when House Bill No. 341 was introduced in the Indiana Legislature, by writing letters to Attorney General John Garibaldi Sargent of the United States and Senator Hodges and Representative Fabius Gwin of Indiana.

His letter to Attorney General Sargent says that "we are amazed that the Government now seems to approve of the despotic, unfair dealings" of the producers and distributors, since "your department concurs in the practice of inflicting penalties, cash deposits, etc., by the film companies on their buyers" and "even prescribes the amount."

Mr. Rembusch adds: "You surely do not understand, or else Mr. Hays' influences your department very well. Why need a billion dollar trust be given security by the government when every picture that we use must be paid for before it leaves an exchange?"

Mr. Rembusch cites only one or two specific instances of alleged procedure.

Miss Griffith With United

Corinne Griffith has been signed by United Artists as an independent producer of her own films. She is now en route from Europe to begin her first United Artists picture, which will be made in Hollywood. This will be her next film, as she has completed her First National contract. Probably it will be "The Garden of Eden," a European stage success now playing in Berlin and soon to be opened in London. It will be produced in New York City soon after the return of Arch Selwyn from Europe.

Pola Negri to Travel

Immediately following the completion of her next Paramount vehicle, "The Woman on Trial," which has just gone into production under the direction of Mauritz Stiller, Pola Negri is planning to take a vacation trip to Europe. The star expects to leave Hollywood the first week of April.

Ahead of Schedule

Twelve of the eighteen feature productions distributed by Sterling Pictures for the production year 1926-27 have been completed, according to Henry Ginsberg, president of Sterling, who is now in the West conferring with I. L. Walestein and other production officials.

Transfer Bailey to Boston

Tom Bailey, formerly branch manager at Paramount's San Francisco branch, has been transferred to the Boston territory as district manager. John D. Clark, supervisor of the Western division, has promoted J. J. Patridge to manager of the Golden Gate office.

Signs Long Term Contract

Metropolitan Pictures has signed Marie Prevost to a new long-term contract by the terms of which the popular comedienne will star in a new series of pictures for release by Producers Distributing Corporation.

M-G M Stockholders Elect Officers and Directors

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation, the following directors were elected: Marcus Loew, Nicholas M. Schenck, David Bernstein, J. Robert Rubin, David Warfield, Edward Bowes, Arthur M. Loew, David L. Loew, Messmore Kendall, F. J. Godsol, Leopold Friedman, Edward Schiller, Felix Feist, E. M. Saunders and William Braden.

The directors met subsequently and elected the following officers for the ensuing year.

President, Marcus Loew; executive vice-president, Nicholas M. Schenck; vice-presidents, J. Robert Rubin, Louis B. Mayer, Edward Bowes, and Arthur M. Loew; treasurer, David Bernstein; assistant treasurers, Charles K. Stern and David L. Loew; secretary and general counsel, J. Robert Rubin; assistant secretaries, Jessie T. Mills, Leopold Friedman, S. S. Braunberg and Hattie Helborn.

Celebrate Silver Wedding

M. H. Hoffman, vice-president of Tiffany, and Mrs. Hoffman celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding on February 25 by giving an informal dinner at their residence in Midwood Manor, New York, to relatives and friends. The executives and office force presented the couple with a magnificent pair of antique Sheffield silver candlesticks.

Consolidate Branches

The New York and New Jersey branch offices of Pathe Exchange, Inc., located at 1600 Broadway, New York City, have been consolidated as the "New York Branch," under the management of W. E. Raynor. Charles Stombaugh, who has been manager of the New Jersey branch, has been appointed special representative at the home office.

M.-G.-M. Signs Shrock

Raymond Shrock, formerly general manager at Universal City and well known as a scenarist and associate producer, has signed a contract to write for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. He will adapt a story he recently completed in collaboration with Edward Sedgwick. It is a starring vehicle for William Haines and will be directed by Sedgwick.

Arthur Convalescent

Johnny Arthur, star of Educational-Tuxedo Comedies, underwent a successful nasal and throat operation at the Manhattan Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital, New York City, February 28. Arthur probably will leave the hospital in a week or ten days.

To Star Billie Dove

Billie Dove will be starred by First National Pictures next season. It is probable that her first starring vehicle will be titled "The American Beauty."

Miss Morris With Warners

Virginia Morris, who for four years has been director of advertising and publicity at Preferred Pictures, has joined the publicity department of Warner Brothers.

Our Stock Market

Little change can be noticed in the general condition of the market. The talk is still very bullish and every effort is being made to attract public participation. The railroad shares are still going strong, and if one only knew the right stock to get into and then out of in a hurry a nice little profit might result. However, the thing to watch in this kind of a market is that you don't get in at the peak and then find the entire market condition changed over night.

You have one of two choices if you get caught in such a mess. Either hold your stock for a long time if you can or sell out at a loss. Neither is very agreeable, especially when the prime object of buying was to make money. Just now it is wise to be cautious. All the so-called big business men seemed to agree around the first of the year that 1927 would not be as good as 1926.

American Seating was active this week and made a new high for 1927. Trading in this stock has been fairly heavy this year with a fluctuation of between 42% and 46%.

Famous Players held the rise made last week.

Previous to the meeting of directors, Loew's, Inc., eased off. The turnover was good but all offerings seemed well taken. Of course, the recent rise in the stock was based upon the belief that the directors would raise the dividend rate. This they failed to do, declaring only the regularly quarterly dividend of 50c a share, payable March 31 to stockholders of record as of March 19.

Warner Bros. showed no activity again this week, either in price changes or amount of turnover. The trading in these stocks has dropped off greatly. It is most likely being allowed to drift for itself for the present.

Universal Chain Theatres declared the regular quarterly dividend of 2 per cent. on the first preferred payable March 15.

More Promotions

Harry Scott, general sales manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces additional promotions in the Sales Department. S. C. Jacques becomes Central Division sales manager, R. V. Nolan becomes assistant branch manager at Chicago. W. A. Aschmann becomes manager at Milwaukee and Henri Brunet and J. E. Cashman divide the former duties of L. S. Diamond in the Sales Statistical Department, as head booker and manager, respectively.

Everything But The Picture

The Universal Invention

WITHIN the memory of a man not yet past his biblical three score and ten, there have come into use the most vital inventions which make our modern life so different from that of the cave man. Within this period there have been developed the telegraph, telephone, electric light, phonograph, motion picture and radio.

Each has served its purpose in the betterment of mankind and the development of civilization, and not the least of these has been the motion picture, which has carried in its most assimilable form the developments of civilization to those least civilized.

And now, in the talking picture we have an assemblage of practically all but two of these mighty forces.

Without the electric light the motion picture never would have attained its far-flung appeal, though the picture, of course, would have been possible with the calcium or other illuminant. The arc lamp and the cinematograph are of one flesh.

But in the talking picture other factors are added—the phonographic sound record and the telephonic transmission of the vibrations to the radio amplifier—so that in one single device are blended five of the world's greatest inventions.

No other development embodies into a single whole so many basic inventions as the Vitaphone. Even the elimination of the phonograph in some forms of the talking picture still leaves this device the child of more master minds than have been required in the perfection of any other machine.

Every perfection of the inventor seems to find some useful purpose in cinematography. And it is not wholly implausible that further developments eventually will permit audiences in theatres throughout the country to watch the battles of some future world war. To not only see the actual conflict, but to hear the roar of the artillery, the rattle of machine guns, the hum of the airship propellers and all the other sounds, at the moment of happening.

And having carried imagination thus far, it is not without the bounds of possibility that color may be added to complete the illusion. The cinema seems to be the most catholic and adaptable of all great inventions, since it swallows each in turn.

QUITTING

Coming to the End Of a Campaign Of Wilful Circulation Camouflage

A. B. C. Audits are not merely perfunctory statements that a newspaper prints an announced number of copies, "more or less," nor even an official assurance that an announced number of copies actually have been printed. A. B. C. Audits are an analysis of the circulation that goes deep below the surface. They assure to the advertiser—the purchaser of circulation—a guaranteed distribution of a definite and positive value. No imposition or evasion is tolerated, and shifty, lying, padded circulations are detected and exposed. The A. B. C. Audit bears the same relation to advertising that the English hall-mark does to silver. If the Audit says "sterling," it means that the circulation has stood the analytic inspection of men specially trained to detect and expose all subterfuges. It is 100 percent true.

That is why MOVING PICTURE WORLD is pleased to announce that its own audit has been checked up without a single rejection. MOVING PICTURE WORLD does not have to lie about its circulation. The truth speaks more eloquently for itself.

Announcement is made that Motion Picture News has resigned from the Audit Bureau of Circulations as of April 7, 1926. This was officially announced by the auditor's report just issued, covering the six months' period ending June 30, 1926.

If you are a buyer of circulation, it might be interesting to know the history of the participation of the trade papers in the A. B. C.

For many years it was not necessary for MOVING PICTURE WORLD to use the A. B. C. It was so manifestly alone in its field that there was never any question nor room for questions, since it was practically the only publication.

But the inevitable competition, attracted by the prosperity of MOVING PICTURE WORLD, was bound to come, and it did come. Today there are three weekly papers in the field. That is by no means the number of weeklies, but the others are such negligible factors that they do not count.

Naturally, competition brought in its train that other inevitability—boosted circulation figures. It was as easy to claim 10,000 circulation as to announce 5,000. It would have been as simple a matter to claim 50,000 had any been found to credit this absurdity.

For its own protection, and for the assurance of its advertisers, MOVING PICTURE WORLD took the only step that would assure absolutely truthful reports. It joined the A. B. C., forcing the others to follow suit.

Motion Picture News did this, after a fashion. For a time they qualified in the audit, but in 1924 the News was "suspended" from the audit, "for lack of adequate circulation records" for the year 1923.

The News had been a member of A. B. C. long enough to know precisely what was required. It knew that for every subscription claimed, proof of proper payment must be presented. It knew from experience certain names would be taken for a check-up.

For reasons best known to its publishers, these records were not presented by Motion Picture News.

The inference is obvious.

The suspension was continued in 1924 for the same cause. The News, for some reason, could not face the situation.

It was not until the last half of 1925 that the auditors were able to obtain material from which to work.

UNDER FIRE

That audit showed an exhibitor circulation of 6088.

This was more than two thousand less than the circulation which they had been claiming while unable or unwilling to face the audit.

Before the resignation of April 7, 1926, could become effective, under the rules of The Bureau it was necessary to file a final report.

The News waited until both the reports of MOVING PICTURE WORLD and Exhibitor's Herald were published for the first six months of 1926, before they filed their statement claiming an exhibitor circulation of 7114.

This was done in the period immediately preceding the merger proposition, which now has passed into history.

The Audit just made has reduced these figures to 6585, or 752 less than MOVING PICTURE WORLD. Once again the News was proved to have less exhibitor circulation than they had claimed.

Furthermore, their percentage of subscription renewals, certainly the truest test of readers' preference, was the lowest of the three papers.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD's renewals are easily the highest in the field, proving that subscribers feel that MOVING PICTURE WORLD has delivered the goods.

And in this period the circulation records of MOVING PICTURE WORLD were proven by audit to be correct as submitted.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD stood behind every name on its list with authentic documentary proof. For three years not a figure in the Audit has differed from our own submitted figures.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD can face its advertisers. It can point to the largest and best exhibitor circulation in the country. It goes to the greatest number of exhibitor readers and it is read by them because it is truthful, dependable and always fair.

It does not have to resort to resignation to evade the truth.

It does not have to wait for the other statements to learn the figures in order to doctor its own to seek to make a little better showing.

It has been; it still is, delivering to the advertiser the greatest paid circulation of any paper in the field. It puts that circulation where it will do the advertiser the most good. It does not mail out free copies in the faint hope that this will pass unnoticed. It does not surreptitiously cut its rates below those permissible.

It leads the field in Paid Exhibitor Circulation

It leads the field in Paid Renewals

It leads the field in Exhibitor Confidence.

It can face the issue squarely because it is delivering the goods.

It has readers who have been constant subscribers for periods up to nineteen years of its existence;

Because it is honest and reliable;

Because it does not have to resort to subterfuge;

Because it is MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

Luxury Theatre Follow Films

By
*Epes W.
Sargent*

"HOWDY, STRANGER"—Little Billy Butts meets Dale Fuller, through William Beaudine, directing them in Thomas Meighan's Paramount production, "The Canadian."

WHILE scientists are still engaged in research to determine whether the first hen was hatched from an egg or the first egg was laid by a hen, thus establishing the question of priority, there seems to be no room for argument as to which came first, the luxurious film or the film in luxury. In this instance the honors clearly go to the film and the splendors of the Paramount Theatre, the luxury of the Roxy, the magnificence of the Saenger house in New Orleans and the hundred and one other palaces of the cinema are all directly to be traced to the pictures which have made their erection possible.

Before the coming of the modern photodrama the mere fact of motion was sufficient to interest the public, but that interest was waning when the discovery was made that the amusement public would absorb films of greater length than the fifty or seventy-five feet of the early days.

Around 1903 the pictures had progressed to the point where a moderate production of drama—any drama—sufficed, and even in 1910 the play was still the thing.

In the one-reel days, costs had to be kept down. Until the coming of the General Film Company; the exchange phase of the Motion Picture Patents Company, the once-hated "trust," all film was sold outright. The price was ten cents a foot, less ten per cent. discount, which brought it to nine cents flat. A full reel sold for $90.

The market in those days ran from 16 to about 40 prints, which meant an income of from $1,440 to $3,600 per subject, and it was customary to figure that anything above twenty prints represented a profit; though that did not necessarily mean that the sixteen print order represented a loss, since the companies with so small an order generally trimmed their expenses to meet the condition.

Ordinarily, however, the average company figured on spending between $300 and $400 on a release, and the difference between that sum and the gross income represented the cost of the mechanical departments, the overhead on the general studio work, sales promotion (largely confined to trade paper advertising) and the net profit.

Now and then Biograph would spend as much as a thousand dollars on a single reel, and the officials declared that they were always glad when Griffith announced he was going to spend that much, since it meant a better seller. Vitagraph also went over the top now and then, but the others generally reprehended this scandalously spendthrift policy. Most of them got a bulk of their profits from the foreign market sales at six cents per foot.

Things got a little better with the advent of the two-reeler, but the initial idea of the two-reel picture was that it sold for twice as much as a single and cost only half as much again.

Probably it was Cecil De Mille who first realized the cash value of sumptuous settings. He realized that the picture patrons were hungry for glamor as well as romance. They wanted to lose themselves in the darkness of the theatre and to visit, for a brief hour, society as they imagined it.

The more discriminating critics scoffed at the over-lavish De Mille sets, at the wicker birdcages, the chaise longues, the twenty-foot ceilings and all the rest, but about eighty per cent. of the picture patronage reveled in the luxury of the surroundings, and marble bath tubs, retinues of servants, the wonderful lingerie and all the rest was food for their starved souls.

It is to be questioned whether the first elaborate theatres were built with a full understanding of the real reason for their appeal. Probably no owner consciously reacted to ornate pictures. The suggestion, if any, was purely subconscious.

Their success led to others, even more ornate, until the last word seems to have been reached in the Paramount with its gleaming marble staircase, its art treasures in paint and marble, its luxurious lounges and smartly uniformed service corps.

Many persons go to the Paramount purely for these features, and without particular regard for the film features; many of which have been of no unusual strength. They go to steep their souls in luxury, to feed their starved minds on the splendor, the magnificence, the atmosphere denied them in their daily lives. For less than a dollar they can put drab existence behind them and revel in the luxury of both the house and the screen productions.

E. F. Albee could have told the picture managers all this, for thirty years ago he brought into existence the Keith Theatre in Boston, which for long stood in a class by itself. The pronoun is used advisedly, for while the house bore the magic name of Keith, it carried in its every aspect the stamp of the Keith general manager.

To have gone to Boston in those days and not to have visited Keith's was much the same as to have visited New York without

Roxy Shows The Roxy To The Press

By C. S. Sewell

S. L. ROTHAFEL, "Roxy," is apparently oblivious to the Friday hoodoo, for on Friday, February 25, he was host to representatives of the press at a luncheon in the Hotel Manger and a personally conducted tour of the new Roxy Theatre from "cellar to garret," and Friday, March 11, has been set as the date on which it will be formally opened to the public with "The Loves of Sunya," a United Artists' picture starring Gloria Swanson.

In building his own theatre, Mr. Rothafel has embodied every improvement that his years of experience in successfully and successively managing several of the leading motion picture palaces has suggested or that the skill of architects, engineers and other experts in their respective lines could devise. It therefore stands unique in many respects, and so much has already been written about the Roxy that we will only refer to a few of the most striking features pointed out by Mr. Rothafel.

Apart from its size, with a seating capacity of 6,200, probably the most extraordinary feature is the stage construction. Instead of being square or rectangular with the back wall parallel to the proscenium, it is built in the form of a triangle with the two side walls coming to a point in the rear at the centre of the stage. This effect, which is as if the stage had been built across a corner of a five-sided building, is designed to increase the acoustics by eliminating the sound pockets at the sides. To further improve the acoustics a parabolic cyclorama resembling a section of an oval wall has been built of special compo-board covered with linen, this construction permitting it to be raised up into the flies when not needed. With this arrangement, ordinary conversational tones can be heard in the top balcony.

The orchestra pit which can be raised and lowered by means of an elevator will accommodate 110 musicians, and the three consoles of what is said to be the world's largest organ; and the only one to be played simultaneously by three musicians. This is accomplished by means of a main console with five manuals and an auxiliary console of three manuals on each side. In addition, there is a three manual solo organ in the grand foyer, a special broadcasting organ in the broadcasting studio and a concert grand piano playable from the organ console. A distinctive feature of the big organ is the fact that the organ pipes have all been placed under the stage instead of at various parts of the house. In addition, there is back stage a sound effect room in which is stored a motley array of every conceivable kind of sound producing apparatus, completely indexed, for use in connection with the orchestra for simulating various noises from a lion's roar to a clock's tick. In charge of the orchestra will be a staff of conductors consisting of H. Maurice Jacquet, a noted French conductor and composer, Charles Previn, Erno Rapee and Frederick Stahlberg.

Deserving of especial mention is the enormous switchboard said to be several times the largest ever constructed for a theatre. It has over 1,000 switching levers. It is 22 feet long, weighs over fifty tons, uses current sufficient to light 2,000 homes and is operated by four men. It is equipped with a periscope enabling the chief operator to at all times see exactly what is going on on the stage. The manipulating levers on the switchboard are so arranged that the operation is similar to that of a pipe organ. This is the remote control board and the heavy currents are operated from a fireproof enclosure in the basement.

At each side of the stage in another unique feature, a series of boxes and smaller balconies at different levels, resembling the usual proscenium boxes. These, however, will be used by the performers for ballet and tableaux effects in connection with presentations, and are reached by a choral stairway in the back. Another unusual feature of the proscenium is the fact that the stage apron is depressed so that the feet of the performers can be seen at a distance of eight feet in front. The stage itself is about two stories below the street level and from all points of the house, even the orchestra pit, the audience looks down on the stage.

The projection room is equipped with a battery or Simplex projectors and in addition is fitted with the requisite devices for presenting "talking" pictures by means of Vitaphone and also the Spoor Natural Vision or so-called "stereoscopic" pictures. There is also a projection machine in the rear of the stage for presenting panoramic and scenic novelties on a translux screen. The projecting room is located in a recess at the front of the balcony, and, despite the size of the house, the throw is only 100 feet at only a ten per cent angle. The screen is the exact size of the picture and will be surrounded by color effects in keeping with the mood of the picture, and this, together with the house lighting, will enable patrons at all times, except when dark effects are desirable for presentations, to read their programs with ease. This is also aided by the color scheme which is entirely in different shadings of dull gold with no clashing colors and the fact that there will not be a single uncovered light in the house.

Just one more of the many other points of interest is the grand foyer, which will accommodate 2,000 persons. An idea of its size may be gained from the fact that the carpet weighs six tons.

ONE of these days, perhaps, just before the millenium starts in, good will, common sense and principle are going to be among the important factors which will motivate the numerous business transactions that make up this complex industry from day to day.

BIG executives and men of affairs are slowly coming to the realization that the best way to develop this great business of ours and at the same time get their fair share of the profits, is not by gouging these profits out of their smaller competitors and each other, by means that often are questionable and methods which are frequently so unfair that there is no question at all about them, but by endeavoring to adopt a policy of live and let live.

THEY are beginning to see that the temporary advantage of one company, at the expense of the others, in the end operates to the disadvantage of all.

A FEW executives, whom we know, have already come to this conclusion, but the majority, it is to be feared, still think that the motion picture business is a "game" in which the only way to win is to "skin" or be "skinned."

THE responsibility for this brand of thought and practice, however, does not lie with any group of men or companies in this industry, but instead may fairly be said to be shared in by nearly all, in every branch of motion picture activity, who through selfishness, fear or kindred reasons, have tacitly, if not actually, accepted these rules as a guide for their own conduct.

THE State Right market, for example, has become so hazardous that only a bare half dozen companies remain, where a score or more existed and prospered a couple of years ago, while of the national distributors, only two or three are left, who have not been forced to enter the theatre field to protect themselves and insure an outlet for their product.

GRANTED that economic and legitimate competitive conditions have played a large part in bringing this about, it is no less true that fear of theatre competition by the larger companies and a shortsighted disposition on the part of many an individual exhibitor to take price advantage of the smaller competitors of these companies, in making their bookings, obviously a stupid and unfair policy, have also had much to do with the present situation.

WHAT the ultimate results are going to be, it is difficult now to predict, although the elimination of independent production initiative and creative ability, which has to date taken place is already sufficient to be seriously felt, for never yet have the great companies, themselves, been enabled to develop from their own organizations all the talent and producing brains, which their expanding activities demand and require.

HERE is a growing situation, which inevitably must affect all the industry to its hurt, and the exhibitor, first of all, to which all should give honest and earnest consideration.

More Good Will and Common Sense Needed, If Industry Is to Prosper

Responsibility For Present Practices Shared By All, Not By Few Only

M-G-M's "Big Parade" Heading For Brand New Record Broadway Run

$1,000,000 Profit For Warner Brothers Anticipated By August 31, 1927.

RECENTLY, at an A. M. P. A. luncheon, Mr. Edmund Goulding, then newly from Hollywood, expressed concern at the dearth of new brains and new talent in the production end of the industry, accentuating the fact that a few high-powered and over-worked big executives were carrying the whole burden and necessarily often slurring their work because of the great demands upon them.

MR. GOULDING did not mention — perhaps, because he did not know it — that practically every one of the really important production executives, now making pictures, came from the independent field originally, nor did he state where he thought their successors might come from.

WHAT we need is a little loosening up all around, more of a spirit of give-and-take and the realization that good will, common sense and principle applied to our everyday business of buying and selling pictures is good business and not mere phrasing.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S "Big Parade" ended its 67th week last Monday at the Astor Theatre, with a gross of slightly under $1,300,000, the evening performance on Monday last marking the 935th showing of this amazing attraction.

ALREADY the record holder among motion pictures for length of run on Broadway, "The Big Parade" now only gives priority to two legitimate attractions, "Abie's Irish Rose" and "Lightnin'", and it is freely predicted that the great M-G-M feature will eventually pass the latter, which has a record of 1,291 consecutive performances and give first place only to "Abie's Irish Rose," which on Monday, Feb. 28, passed its 2,050th performance and is still going strong.

WARNER Brothers' report for the first three months of their fiscal year, ending Nov. 27, 1926, shows an operating profit of $40,192, but a net loss due to interest and other charges of $109,085, a trifling sum, when it is recalled that their reported deficit for the year ending March 31, 1926 was $1,337,826, due to costs incidental to establishing their own distribution system and production.

RENTALS from Great Britain, alone, where Warner Brothers is distributing its own product, for the first two months of this fiscal year were in excess of $800,000, with a total of $2,000,000 expected for the year.

ALL of which makes it appear as if 1927 is going to be a big year for Warner Brothers, so that the recent announcement that a profit of not less than $1,000,000 is to be expected by Aug. 31, 1927 does not seem to be over-sanguine.

THE TALKIES IN TEMPLETON

by Eper W. Sargent.

TEMPLETON was what the Templeton Topics described as all agog. Templeton was the first city in the state, outside the capital, to have the talking pictures, and Billy McPherson, of the Grand, wore a smile as broad as his waist measure. He reserved his seats and sold them at a dollar a head, but even at that he was unable to supply the demand. He had played to good houses with a number of road shows at fifty cents top, but there had been plenty of kicks at the advanced price where they were fighting to pay twice as much for the privilege of saying they had been at the first night of the talkies.

Billy McPherson did not have to run after the Topics for space, for once in his life. Tim Bronson, owner, editor and star reporter, fairly lived in the theatre office, getting stories about the new device, and when the workmen came to install the apparatus, he had his lunch sent in. He was not missing a trick.

Naturally the stories fanned the excitement still further and had a Presidential Election or a referendum come along just then, either would have played to no quorum in Templeton.

The Independent Company of the state militia turned out to escort the first load of material to the theatre, escorted by the Templeton Fire and Police band, the Boy Scouts, the High School Cadets and the K. K. K., and to this parade was added a half dozen fraternal organizations when the first shipment of films was made, about a week before the opening.

Only Bronson, McPherson and Frank Farley, his projectionist, were permitted to remain in the theatre when the films were tried out. McPherson was not going to have the edge taken off the pictures by premature showings. Farley did get a few clippings of the film to show to his admiring friends, and he spent his leisure hours showing the narrow band of sound impressions that represented the voice. He early learned all about it from the men who were installing the machine, and he could rattle off a complete lecture by the end of the second day. Mrs. Belding, with whom Farley boarded, declared that he even talked in his sleep, and that she had a dozen complaints from the other boarders.

Then came the big day. For a third time the paraders turned out, escorting half a dozen empty film cans all over town, and the Grand gave no matinee to take the attention from the night show.

By eight o'clock there were 1,100 persons in the 800-seat house and the Mayor, who was to be the orator of the evening, had to come in through the fire escape, since it was impossible to force a passage down the aisles. It was a clear violation of the fire laws, but the Chief had a seat in the front row and McPherson could have hung them from the rafters for all he cared.

Pompously the Mayor made the opening address, with spreadeagle allusions to "our distinguished townsman, William Farish McPherson, to whose unflagging energy Templeton owes its present proud position," and Billy blushed far below his collar line as the audience broke into thunderous applause.

He was followed by the technical engineer who had made the installation, with a brief explanation of sound photography, illustrated by a special reel of film.

Then the band struck up the National Anthem, with the entire audience coming in strong on "The land of the free and the home of the brave."

Then the lights were slowly dimmed, and the hush was so marked that when Deacon Stivers dropped a peppermint losenge on the floor the sound was distinctly heard in the lobby.

The light went up on the screen and the stillness was broken by a wild scream that scared the children and shook their elders. The selection was supposed to be a soprano solo, but it went something like this:

"Tis th wow rose of wheeeee lef wowwow ing alo wheerrr wow wheeeee aded and gon wheeeeeeee."

The picture stopped abruptly while Farley nervously rethreaded the film, thinking that perhaps he had it hooked up wrong, though it always had gone right at the rehearsals.

He tried it again, but the result was the same. The picture was steady as a rock, but the sound section was a total loss. Someone shouted "static," which brought a laugh from the radio enthusiasts, and someone else urged that the cat be put out for the night, which brought an even louder roar of approval.

By that time the engineer had made his way to the projection room, desperation giving him the energy to work his way through the dense crowds which packed the aisle.

The house was in an uproar. Half of those present wanted their money back and the other half demanded the delivery of the goods.

On one side of the tiny stage before the screen the Mayor begged for order. At the other McPherson vainly sought to make himself heard.

Neither was successful, and the riot grew until, without warning, the lights went out again and another picture flashed on the screen.

This time it was a jazz orchestra and the crowd looked suspiciously at the orchestra pit to see if the musicians were supplying sound for a silent picture, but the members of the band were as interested as the pay patrons, and not a single instrument was to be seen.

A soloist followed, entirely without "static," and McPherson slumped back into his corner, satisfied that the crisis was over.

Three more reels were run, without a break and then the lights went on for a moment before the feature picture, which was supposed to round out the program.

The talkies were over, and over like a load of brick. Everyone was enthusiastic and the Mayor was moved to make a second speech, in which he lauded the device, the inventor, the artists, "our enterprising manager," and congratulated the audience upon having been permitted to be present at "this epoch making incident in the fair history of our beautiful city."

Then he subsided once more and the feature and comedy went on.

Once more the lights went on, but this time it was the technical engineer who stood on the platform, and his raised hand commanded the silence of those who had already started to move toward the entrance.

"I feel that perhaps it is only fair to our device," he began easily, a smile playing about his lips, "to explain that the somewhat unfortunate results of the first reel are in no way attributable to any defect in the machine or its recording."

"Your young friend, Mr. Farley, the projectionist of this beautiful house, naturally feels an intense interest in this invention, and has communicated his interest to his friends. He tells me that last night, following the rehearsal, he took one of the reels to show some friends, and unfortunately did not return the film to its can, leaving it exposed overnight."

"These warm days naturally encourage insect life and I regret to say that the machine was playing—er—the flyspecks."

EVERYBODY has been writing so much about the Roxy that there is little more to say about this—for the year 1927 at least—greatest of motion picture theatres. Next Friday the Roxy will open its doors, the orchestra will strike up, Roxy's Gang will tell the waiting radio millions outside all about it and the big show will be under way for all time.

Those who will be on the inside by invitation will have cause to congratulate themselves, for Roxy, who always does things differently than most, decided that he will not follow the usual precedent and send out general invitations to Tom, Dick and Harry in and out of the trade. Why should he?

Instead, many were glad to have seats reserved for them at the fancy box office prices, which prevail for the opening night, for every one will want to be there and big as the Roxy is, there will be no trouble filling it for many weeks to come.

It has been said, that a lot of bets have been laid that the Roxy's first week will pass the $125,000. mark and by selling most of the seats for the first night at $10.00 top, plus war tax, this may easily be done.

In any event Gloria Swanson's "The Loves Of Sunya," which forms the piece de resistance of the bill, will undoubtedly break all first week grosses on any picture ever filmed.

Good luck to Roxy and Gloria, both—they're making motion picture history.

Charlie Chaplin is finding that troubles sometimes bring rewards. Everywhere he goes he gets an ovation and a sympathetic reception, that must make him realize how close he is to the hearts of the American public, no matter how a few fanatics may seek to cry him down and injure him.

The great comedian's screen popularity grows, seemingly, in the face of all the recent up-roar, instead of lessening. Witness the fact, that but for a last minute change in plan by one theatre, there would have been no less than three Chaplin re-issues playing at leading New York houses during the past week, to say nothing of the numerous presentations in neighborhood theatres all over the city.

The crowds at the Strand where "Shoulder Arms," newly re-edited, was presented with First Na- tional's "An Affair Of The Follies" and at the Fifth Avenue, where "Carmen," one of his oldest comedies, formed an important part of the bill, testifies that the Chaplin vogue is still as great as ever in spite of misfortunes, over which he had no control and for which no fair minded person can properly hold him responsible.

Evidently the American public seems to feel the same way about it.

Virginia Morris joins Warner Brothers publicity staff to help hold up the hands of A. P. Waxman, who right now is holding down one of the most diverse, not to say difficult jobs in this industry, more power to him, that of motivating the ideas and stimulating the activities of the advertising, publicity and exploitation for his rapidly expanding company.

And Paula Gould has rejoined F. B. O.'s promotional division, with Joe Schnitzer and Hy Daab counting on her to bring big results in her special field.

Tammany Young has hired a press agent. The champion gate-crasher was seen in close colloquy with a studious-looking young young man on Broadway last week and a little later items began to appear in various papers about the noted portrayer of Chuck Connors' parts. In one paper no less than three items about Tammany were noted in a single issue.

Next week, if Tammany can get the price of a high hat for his new press agent, we may expect the announcement of a lecture tour on "How to Crash the Gate Without Skinning Your Knees," or "Why Pay, When Your Face is Your Fortune?"

Arch Heath, who is directing "The Crimson Flash" for Pathe at the old Pathe Studio, now an accessory studio of the Cosmo- politan, didn't figure on taking any submarine "shots," when he started this picture. High tide in Harlem, however, nearly necessitated it recently, when the storm backed about three feet of water into the studio and he had to get the battalion fire chief of the district to bail him out. Now, it is said, he has placed an order for a set of diving suits for the company, against future contingencies.

Mordaunt Hall, of the N. Y. Times, has added a new and able writer to his staff, Paul Gulick, no less, who is now signing his stuff quite regularly in the Sunday edition.

Last week he narrated how "Praise Is Dangerous To Good Directors" and here, we cannot help but feel, Paul is getting upon ticklish ground.

Why, only the good ones, Paul? Are not the bad directors equally susceptible to flattery?

Again, if we didn't have any bad directors, how would we know the good ones? Coming from you, Paul, who have been passing out publicity with distinction for so many years the announcement about "praise being dangerous" doesn't seem to sound quite right.

Jay Shreck, of the Paramount publicity department writes to inform us that "Knockout Reilly" is spelt "Knockout Reilly" and while Mary Brian and Richard Dix are grieved because no two papers spell it alike, there is no reason for abusing a good old Irish name like that by spelling it otherwise. We quite agree with him.

"Reilly" it is, and a "Knock-out" it ought to be.

PRESAGING developments that will be truly revolutionary in this kaleidoscopic business, preliminary work began this week on the first "sound picture" feature at the Fox-Case Movietone studios in West Fifty-fourth Street, New York, and from now on more and more is going to be seen and heard of this remarkable new form of screen entertainment, which delights the eye and amazes and pleases the ear at the same time.

Courtlandt Smith is in general charge, E. I. Sponable, who spent many years of research with Theodore W. Case, the inventor, in perfecting the devices used in the Movietone process, is the scientific director, while E. H. Hanson, also a specialist, is the sound engineer. The last named job is one that is now distinctly new in this industry, but is one that, we predict, will be increasingly numerous as time goes on.

One old timer at least is represented in the galaxy of talent and scientific knowledge, which the Fox-Case officials have brought together to make their Movietone features, George Lane who has been with William Fox many years will be found at the camera.

Hollywood has had its inevitable effect on the Babe. No sooner does he finish his new First National picture, "Babe Comes Home," produced under the expert supervision of our old friend Wid Gunning, than he wires Col. Jake Ruppert, that he must have 100 grand for his next season's contract.

He didn't get it, but $70,000 a year for three years is not so bad at that and George Herman Ruth's debt to Hollywood—where the telephone number salaries started—is great.

Is somebody spoofing or do we hear aright? T's said that First National is broadcasting for the finest and most shapely pair of feminine legs to be found in forty-eight states and a couple of territories. Oh, yes, the legs are wanted for "The Golden Calf," a forthcoming picture.

Isn't there something subtle about this?

Close-ups Of Dolores Costello

THIS charming star of the Warner Brothers studios is rapidly becoming one of the most remarkable actresses of the screen. Here we present her in intimate poses at home with her mother. Miss Costello is very young, but already her ability and her ready intelligence have carried her into the top-most ranks. It is superfluous to speak of her beauty when pictures such as these speak for her.

M.-G.-M. Sales Convention To Be May Event

The annual national sales convention of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer executives Exchange managers and salesmen will be held in Los Angeles early in May, according to an announcement made by Louis B. Mayer, on his return here from the East. The exact date of the convention has not been set, but it is planned to welcome at least five hundred film men.

Mayer arranged for the convention with Nicholas Schenck and other executives and was highly enthusiastic over the final decision to hold the confab on the West Coast. Heretofore it has always been the custom to stage the annual fiesta in some eastern city.

United Building Los Angeles House

With the Egyptian now being advertised as a United Artists Theatre, that organization has just commenced actual construction also upon another theatre in the heart of Los Angeles. The Los Angeles structure will represent a total investment of more than $3,500,000, according to word reaching us. It will have a 150-ft. frontage and will be as high as the city's building laws permit. The ground-breaking ceremonies are of a most elaborate nature, with not only the Los Angeles mayor and city officials in attendance, but also officials and stars of United Artists present.

Plan New Contract

Negotiations may shortly be opened between Fox and Virginia Valli relative to a new contract. The actress is now recuperating from a serious illness and is convalescing in her Beverly Hills home. It is also understood that Paramount is anxious to have her sign.

De Mille's "White Gold" Is Hailed As Picture That "Made" Director

With De Mille

Lya de Putti

WHILE a few people out in Hollywood this week were saying that Lya de Putti might give up her free lance career and go with this company or that company, Moving Picture World, in its characteristic way, went to the bottom of things and found that the bottom ties up Miss de Putti's future for the next several years with the deMille organization.

In other words, Cecil B. De Mille this week signed Miss de Putti to a long term contract.

The cessation of Miss de Putti's contractual relation with Famous-Players-Lasky over a month ago was generally voiced on local boulevards as being that Miss de Putti was dissatisfied with certain stories assigned her and that she openly contended she had no desire for vamp roles. In view of this situation, it will be interesting to note the characterizations she will assume in deMille pictures.

William K. Howard Gets Credit At Hollywood For Remarkable Film of Human Interest With the "Little Points" Assuming Real Perspective

A PICTURE that has a cast of five people and took slightly less than five weeks to make has started all Hollywood talking. A picture that, with the exception of a few hundred feet of film, was made in its entirety inside of a studio, has just been booked as one of Roxy's opening attractions. The picture is Cecil B. DeMille's "White Gold," and, in the vernacular of the profession, it has unquestionably "made" its director, William K. Howard.

The "White Gold" which we saw on the screen of DeMille's Culver City projection room is a picture that only an alleged critic would attempt to "pan." Writers who know their stuff, and have a certain amount of consideration for their typewriters, will not be hesitant about such phrases as "essence of artistry" and "a bit of directorial wonderment" when they review "White Gold." That, in substance, is already what some of Los Angeles' biggest newspaper critics who have previewed the picture have had to say about it in their columns. Even some of New York's tabloids should concur with these viewpoints when "White Gold" makes its Manhattan debut.

"White Gold," as a matter of fact, should if released in its present form be a delight to the receptive point of any logical mind. It never once lets go in making the little things of life count and although one feels sure that the sheepherding father will finally open his heart to the loyal cabaret-bred wife of his son yet the picture closes with the old man's pulsation as stony as ever and the son by his father's side. In other words "White Gold" has one of those rare finishes considered revolutionary by most makers of pictures, and yet one for which American critics are constantly and consistently boosting on the ground that the American public wants more sulphur in the molasses of picture fare.

When the story was handed to Director Howard about two months ago, it was, according to the description we got at the time of this writing, "just another melodrama, with a big cast, and heroine leading sheep to a well through a blinding sand storm."

Like dogs sniff at a bleached bone until one of them decides to pick it up, so, it seems, was the status of "White Gold" in its original story form, when Howard first turned over its pages. The story remained on the shelf until one evening Howard, welcomed into the DeMille fold over a year ago, got the idea of a straight drama depicting the emotions of four people instead of attempting to run the gamut of characters prescribed by the script; a real drama and real people on a torrid Arizona sheep ranch, with sheep in the background rather than running through the entire picture; a squeaking chair, an oil-lit living room and a bridal chamber of a wooden bed and a stiff window shade.

Howard got this inspiration all in one night. The next day he got together Garret Fortt, member of the DeMille writing force.

"White Gold" Booked For Roxy Theatre

Realistic Highlights from "White Gold" Starring
Jetta Goudal

"WHITE GOLD" has been acclaimed the dramatic sensation of the season. William K. Howard's directorial masterpiece, adapted from J. Palmer Parsons' play, is the tale of a beautiful Mexican dancer, effervescent with the joy of life, suddenly transplanted by love to a mean, bitter existence on a stark, suffocating sheep ranch.—

Life transformed from a bounteous feast to a bitter hollow husk.—The bewildering tragedy of a warm-blooded, heart-hungry woman, starving for a grain of understanding and affection.—Kenneth Thomson is seen as the weak husband whom she loves; George Nicholl as the bitter, vindictive old man who hates her; and George Bancroft as the rough, scheming sheep-herder who desires her. Clyde Cook supplies comedy relief to slacken the tension of this powerful offering from the DeMille Studios, which is a mighty monument to realism, hewn from life.

Who's Who In "White Gold"

The Star
Director
Camerman
The "Extra"
JETTA GOUDAL

MANY of those who have pre-viewed her latest picture think Jetta Goudal does the finest work of her career in "White Gold." The writer heartily concurs in this respect, although he bases his opinion upon but the few, of many pictures in which Miss Goudal has made, which he has seen.

The interview with Miss Goudal was the most novel of the many that have taken place to fill this column. It was obtained practically in its entirety over the telephone. The telephone was necessitated by the fact that the writer called too early in the morning for a personal interview, and when he called again Miss Goudal was just finishing lunch and he was quite a few miles away.

"This is quite odd, isn't it? Being interviewed over the telephone," Miss Goudal exclaimed one time in the course of the several telephonic conversations. "In fact," she continued, "I think this is the first time in my career that I have ever been interviewed in this way."

We apologized for being so far away and yet our presence the first time would have meant an intrusion in the star's hour of repose, while the second would have caused us to break into that time of the day called "Hollywood's lunch hour."

Miss Goudal heartily agreed with us and consented to answer our one question about the picture.

"It requires a woman of decided emotions," she recalled. "I can be so exuberant and so depressed."

WILLIAM K. HOWARD

SIX years ago William K. Howard stepped out of army togs at Santiago. Before returning eastward he decided to take the trip six hours northward, which landed him in Hollywood. As a tourist he then visited the studios. He went to the East, but returned and now they are congratulating him at the DeMille Studio over his success in "White Gold."

We learned all of this and more from Howard in his Culver City office this week. He is a very likeable, keen, alert chap and he let us know in no uncertain terms that he is for realism in the making of motion pictures.

While a student at the University of Ohio, Howard spent one of his summers playing baseball with a small professional team. The team, it would seem, went on the rocks after a game in a little town in Oklahoma. Howard tells us that he had seen typewriters, but never believed he would have occasion to use one. In this town he found that he could pick up change best by working on the local newspaper, so he simply discarded his baseball uniform and became a reporter.

Howard broke in the film game on the Fox lot where for three and one-half years he was a director. Then he went over to Famous and from there to Producers Distributing Corporation on the Culver City lot, which he is rounding his seconding year. Howard has to his directorial credit also "The Thundering Herd" and "Gigolo."

LUCIEN ANDRIOT

LUCIEN ANDRIOT has been under contract as a cameraman to Cecil B. DeMille for the past year and a half. During that time he has worked with Director Howard on "The Thundering Herd" and "White Gold." The latter picture, in the opinion of Andriot, is Howard's finest production.

A remarkable thing in connection with the shooting of "White Gold" was that the total amount of exposed negative did not exceed 60,000 feet. In view of the fact that the release length of the picture will be in seven short reels, the superfluous footage is but a fraction of that wasted in the average feature.

That the story was more of an obsession with Howard than just a script being brought to the screen is one of the reasons why Andriot believes practically every other click of his camera registered on permanent celluloid.

One of the most expensive items in the shooting of the production, which occupied exactly four and one-half weeks, was the lighting of the huge sheep ranch set, Andriot told us. In order to obtain the atmosphere of an Arizona ranch and a blazing sun, every sun arc available on the DeMille lot was requisitioned into Howard's service. While a single electrician can take care of several Kleigs, operating a sun arc is a one man job, so between twenty and thirty electricians were engaged in this special work alone on "White Gold." In this production are some splendid examples of expert triple exposure photography.

CLYDE COOK

THIS time we have to put quotes around extra because in "White Gold" there are four characters about whom the story is all about, and a fifth who furnishes the four with laughs. Clyde Cook, as an assistant sheep herder, plays that fifth part. Because his years of experience make him gyrate his big bovine-like eyes in such a way that the emotion of laughter is as apparent as passion, lust, covetousness and loyalty which largely make up the portrayals in "White Gold," we want to show Cook's face and carry a little yarn about him. Rather than have this column go by the board then, in view of the fact that it is the first time we have encountered a picture without an extra, we are displaying Cook's wares.

On the screen in "White Gold," Cook's garb is so realistic that it seems to reek of sheep. And flies and lice in the bunkhouse are no encumbrance to one's imagination in this respect. However, with it all, there is nothing which could be even considered vulgar about any part of Cook's performance. Quite to the contrary. He hits a happy medium that the small towns will recognize and the city folk, who have ever vacationed in a country place, will welcome with roars of glee.

About "White Gold" Cook told us: "It is absolutely true to life and for that very reason it should go over very big. Director Howard has an uncanny knack of developing a chain of incidents into a story."

That is what he has done.

Nicholls The Man Who Does Things

By Tom Waller

WEAK SOS calls are now and then sounded for some actor or actress, director or writer whose success reached its peak in filmdom's yesteryears. Men and women who were then headliners seem suddenly to have submerged without having left so much as a broken bubble to trace their whereabouts and identities today.

About such calls, the new faces in the new years engrossed in new successes seem to soliloquize: Who cares? It is usually in the early morning smoke of a Hollywood cafe that there occasionally arises some need for an answer. New timers at a table sometimes recess the discussion of their hopes and ambitions when a solitary figure draws up a chair at a lone table nearby.

"Wasn't he so and so?" One will ask. And the reply: "He was a great fellow in his day."

Then the hope of their own day and the thought of its duration rehashes the problem unsolved by the majority of the industry's employees—permancy!

Twelve hours later. Out in the sunshine. Then a big open fireplace. A dog. A charming wife. And we started to talk with a man who first set his foot on the legitimate stage in New York City in 1889. A man who started in the movies at their beginning. Who acted in them and directed them. Certainly one of the oldest of the old timers, so frank in his talk with us that his wife exclaimed: "Why, Nick. Don't make yourself out to be an octogenarian!"

Dashing a huge piece of soft coal into place in the grate, George Nicholls' furrowed face took on a similarly vigorous expression. His wife caught it at the same time, it seemed to us, and, waving her hand with playful scornfulness in Nicholls' direction, she laughed: "The ages of movie stars hand me a laugh. I knew most of them when they started. When our boy was twelve, many of them were admitting they were nineteen. Now many of the same people are younger than our son."

Nicholls did not resent his wife's affecting an apology for the admission of years. Neither did Mrs. Nicholls intend that it should conceal over any of his iron grey hairs. Both are decidedly frank. Neither has forgotten their early training on the road and things ultra-ultra and bla-bla are to them nothing more than the ultra-ultra and

This characteristic perhaps may be more responsible than any other for Nicholls not being where he is today, but going stronger than ever today. He isn't under contract to any producer, either, but he could work all night as well as on week days and holidays if he so desired. Four ciphers are required to give an idea of what Nicholls draws on the sixth day, regardless of who the producer is or where the studio is located.

Since January 1st of this year, this man, who made his debut in the film game back in 1907, has essayed big roles for three companies. In Warner's "White Flannels" and DeMille's "White Gold" and Paramount's "Ritzy"—all in slightly less than two months!

In "White Gold," the entire story practically centers around Nicholls. His whims and moods govern the destinies of his son and the latter's sweetheart. In the opinion of the writer, Nicholls does the finest work of his career in this DeMille offer-

While in "Ritzy," Nicholls stood the gaff of blazing kleigs and studio murkiness until four-thirty one morning. This was just two mornings before we had this talk with him.

That's the Nicholls of today. One which he doesn't talk so much about except for the glint in his eye substantiated by pictures which are now just coming out of the cutting rooms.

About the Nicholls of yesterday we could write a book.

Nicholls got into the films as a five dollar per day man when the legitimate roadshow with which he was the leading man went on the rocks in Washington, D. C.

"My first picture was 'Lost in the Alps,' he told us, "and it was made at that time when the movies were so frowned upon that I was actually ashamed to be seen on Broadway. When the picture was released, I was directing at Poli's Theatre in Springfield, Mass., and to help matters along Poli booked it at his house. I stood in fear that I would be given the razzing of my life when it had its first run, but the funny part of it is not one of the theatre recognized me on the screen, though I had used no make-up."

Nicholls, who directed some 200 one and two-reelers and who says that he made the first successful three-reeler, "David Copperfield," recalls how he was actually "kidded out of directing" by Mack Sennett. The latter got him to set aside the megaphone and appear for a few weeks before the camera in "Mickey." The "few weeks" were eleven months, Nicholls tells us, resultant in the megaphone forever after being allowed to collect dust as far as he was concerned.

While a director, Nicholls also recalls having made seventeen one-reelers within a period of twelve weeks at the cost of $1,000 per picture. "Lubin had to get the negative every Saturday night regardless of whether the week had been one of rain or sunshine," Nicholls grinned. Then the man who had averaged big parts in five big pictures annually for the past five years pulled out his watch and had just time to posthaste it for the Paramount lot.

A DIRECTOR'S TRIBUTE TO AN ACTOR

Dear Mr. Lamson:

Your splendid effort of making it possible for me to secure George Nicholls for "White Gold" have been amply repaid.

At the DeMille Studio Mr. Nicholls' performance has been acclaimed as one of the finest contributions to screen history.

I sincerely thank you.

Cordially,

the bla-bla.

Nicholls can afford to be frank and independent. Few big actors in Hollywood are more in demand than is Nicholls right this very day. Nicholls not only has a background of experience equalled by few of those in his class today, but he has an ability which has improved with years. Instead of leaping into the night like a flame from a gas jet and going out just as quick when someone turned the cock, Nicholls has forged ahead. Rather than a silvered radiator cap and a perfumed atmosphere in his car Nicholls has been satisfied with an auto that moves. And he lives miles from Beverly Hills.

The finest work of a career that started in 1889!

During the production work on "White Gold," Nicholls suffered several times from ill health. We learn that not from Nicholls, but from executives connected with the production. They told us shortly before this interview that often times it was an extreme effort for Nicholls to drag himself before the camera, and that he was as sick as the role which he was portraying. The Nicholls on the screen in "White Gold" is a Nicholls of constantly changing expressions — expressions that place him on the celluloid record as one of Hollywood's great character actors.

The Story Of A Wonderful Career

Hollywood's Secret Service In Embryo Described To The World

New York Newspaper Story Is Labelled As Myth of Imagination, But There Is Foundation of Fact in Proposal For a Group of Arbitration

A SECRET service organization in the heart of Hollywood to watch the actor in his home and the actress in her boudoir, and then to decide by such observation whether a name should be smudged off the industry's payroll, is the text of a story copyrighted by a New York paper and appearing on the front page of one of Los Angeles' most prominent dailies late this week.

Just a few hours after this yarn was off the press, there was considerable buzzing in Hollywood's tourist circles, which cover a wide hemisphere of film-land at this time of the year. Members of the profession read it with interest and laughed, and then read it again. At the second reading it was recalled that one or two stories had seeped out during the past month about an organization headed by Louis B. Mayer and Director Fred Niblo, vice-chairman, with such names as Douglas Fairbanks, among others in the same class, attending meetings at one another's homes.

Efforts to glean much about these meetings resulted at the time in the World being told that the matter was purely embryonic and that if it developed into anything, it would be in the nature of a social club for the film elite. Again it was said that the purpose of the meetings was to form an organization which would act as an arbitral medium to attempt to iron out any disputes between actors and producers, scenario writers and producers, and so forth. In regard to the latter proposition, Fred Niblo then told the World:

"Such an ambition may be realized, but not for the present at least."

At the same time the objective of the embryonic club was given as being to create a "more tolerant understanding between all creative branches of the motion picture industry."

The newspaper story's "organization" is for the preservation of scruple, morals and what-not

Norma Talmadge Starts "The Dove"

Norma Talmadge has started work in "The Dove," her first picture for United Artists' release. The character she portrays in this is said to be different from any she has yet attempted upon the screen. An excellent cast has been gathered to support the star including Gilbert Roland, Noah Beery, Michael Vavitch, Eddie Borden, Harry Myers and Evelyn Selbie. Roland West is directing from a continuity by Paul Bern.

in the motion picture industry, and its membership is limited to "leading male actors." The yarn also recites that this "organization" was brought to light in an effort to submerge the Chaplin case and also to "check wild life in the motion picture firmament."

When the yarn was referred by the World to Fred Beetsen, secretary of the Association of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of California, Mr. Beetsen stated indignantly:

"The person who wrote the story must have had about ten minutes experience in the motion picture industry. Such an organization would be an absolute impossibility. The only people who could do anything are the people who hire the actors—the producers."

Inspectors To Call In Cutting Rooms March 1

Hollywood's Hallowe'en is on March 1st if what we heard one night this week in a Hollywood cafeteria is authentic. The word was just passed to us by an employee in the cutting room of a certain studio that on that date the State of California sends out inspectors to all cutting rooms in order to approximate the amount of negative film on hand. The State of California, we are told, then collects tax on the total amount of negative. This man informed us that if no film is found in the cutting room, there is no tax to be paid.

He told us that at one time Mexico and states other than California did a thriving business so far as housing negative film was concerned at this time of the year.

We checked up the report with another studio employee who is considered to be fairly well in the "know." He told us that at one time the March 1st boogymoo was correct, but that California's investigators investigated and now he believes, there is no further need for outside investigation.

Excepting for a meagre outline, they were able to put down in black and white practically nothing. But Howard had the inspiration. He knew just the types he wanted to portray the five roles in his recreation of the original story, "White Gold."

For the girl, Miss Jetta Goudal was selected. Miss Goudal, who has hitherto played roles of that type of femininity so exotic as to be almost unnatural. Miss Goudal for a few shots in a spangling costume of a Spanish singer, which was changed for the modest house dress of a farmer's wife in the ninety per cent. of the footage which followed.

For the father, the old man who crunched his cane as he swung back and forth for monotonous hours in a chair, the rusty hinges of which yielded the squeakings in accord with the movements of the pendulum of the old family clock, George Nicholls was chosen. Nicholls, as is told on the personality page in this issue of this department, was actually ill during a good part of the camera work on "White Gold." A sick man playing the role of a sick man, and yet commanding the additional spasms of hate, brewed by jealousy for a woman who was entitled to take his son away from his right side.

For the son, Kenneth Thomson. Debonnaire Thomson tending sheep on a dried-up ranch. A son who had only known a father until, in the course of a few months, a wife had come his way. A son who believed in his father even to the extent of questioning the loyalty of his wife.

As the wandering hobo, the man who the father framed that he might frame the wife, George Bancroft. Bancroft as lust; as the man who was to prove to the son that the father was right.

That the drab scenes of reality might be more drab, and yet furnish a well merited shaft of sunshine in laughter, Clyde Cook was finally selected as the herder who was the favorite of the sheep's flies.

Having assembled this cast, Howard went to work on a set depicting a sheep ranch in Arizona. This in itself occupied one of DeMille's entire huge stages. On the screen few experts would detect the set. There is not a suggestion of artificial atmosphere. The perspective and photography is so perfect that an audience feels certain they are gazing into a vast wasteland.

With the outline of a script and knowing that success was dependent upon his depiction of the emotions of five people, Howard picked up his megaphone. It was a matter of making big things out of little things by following religiously the daily routine on a sheep ranch, where the things which he had in mind might take place.

Night after night Howard and Fortt got together, and, upon what had been accomplished on the set that day, they would base the sequence for the following day. When the time came for the finish, there was considerable conjecture as to whether the son would stay with his father or go with his bride. Howard had the wife walk out of the house and cast in the mud the revolver with which she had slain the intruder. The father's story, that he had avenged the dishonor of his son with his own shot gun, remained intact because the motherless boy, in his unsophistication and sheepish stolidity, had only known one law—that laid down by the old man.

King of Kings To Charge Only $11 Per Person

When "The King of Kings," the longest picture ever made in the history of the film industry, makes its bow in fifteen reels in the Chinese theatre on March 17th, a precedent for the American box office will be established. This, Moving Picture World, learned in Culver City this week, is that eleven dollars per seat, or the highest top ever grossed at the world's premier of any picture in America, will be the tax to picture fans on the opening night.

That many are expected to pay eleven dollars to witness the "King of Kings" at its premiere is evidenced in one respect by the fact that only two hundred tickets in the 2,200-seat house have been placed at the disposal of Mr. DeMille and his associates.

"Laugh and the World Laughs," Says T. Waller

Little things happening on the inside that cause some of the biggest laughs, but do not get on the screen, were so numerous this week in our trip through the studios that we cannot refrain from mentioning just a few of them.

One was to see a big brawny cow-puncher walking on the cement side-walks on the F. B. O. lot with a pair of rubbers over his high-heeled boots.

Another was to watch a certain director on the Educational lot try to get a female cat to walk about like a full grown man. The cat had on its hind paws a pair of baby shoes, and the director had already spent an entire morning with it and had used the largest megaphone, all in vain.

On the same lot, on another stage, a company being directed by Steve Roberts had the thrill of working on the same set with a freed mountain lion. When the lion came too near the camera, the trainer warded him off with a small riding whip. This same trainer, about a year ago, was severely mangled by another lion.

Sign Miss Ralston

Jobyna Ralston, former leading lady for Harold Lloyd, has been selected to play the feminine lead with Red Grange in his next F. B. O. production, "The Motor Maniac."

Reynold's Suicide Leaves Job Open

The identity of the director who will take charge of "The Show Boat," Edna Ferber's great story to be produced by Universal, is now a matter for conjecture following the alleged suicide of Lynn Reynolds, popular "U" director. Officials at Universal were taciturn about making any statements other than that they were greatly shocked by the director's action in taking his life.

Shattered nerves following the strain of having been snowbound in the high Sierras, where he was filming exteriors of "Back to God's Country," and a dispute with his wife on his return home, are alleged by the authorities to have resulted in his committing suicide.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. White were guests at the Reynolds' home, 8281 Fountain avenue, Hollywood, on the evening of the unfortunate occurrence. Mrs. Reynolds, who was known on the screen as Kathleen O'Connor, attributes her husband's violent action to "snow madness."

District Attorney Asa Keyes, who personally investigated the case, is credited with having declared that "Reynolds thought he had shot his wife and then turned the gun upon himself and pulled the trigger." Mrs. Reynolds was on the verge of collapse following her questioning.

Reynolds has been associated in one way or another with the motion picture industry since 1913, and was 35 years of age at the time of his death. Born in Harlan, Iowa, in 1889, he was educated in Denver where he later entered stock. Coming to California, he entered the newspaper profession and from there went to writing stories and later to directing. Among some of the pictures he directed were "Brass Commandments," "The Road Demon," "Overland Red," and "The Huntress."

Following the completion of his current picture, he was to have handled the direction of "The Show Boat," scheduled to be one of Universal's big productions for this year. For this it is understood he would have received a salary superior to that of the majority of Hollywood directors.

Reynolds leaves two sons by a former marriage.

Production Schedule Is In Proportion With P.D.C. Interests

John C. Flynn Reaches Hollywood and Plans Are in Line for Advance Under Gigantic Merger With Keith-Albee and Pathe Organizations

A PRODUCTION schedule that will be in line with the gigantic merged interests of Producers Distributing Corporation, Keith-Albee interests and Pathe was quietly learned by Moving Picture World at the DeMille Studios in Culver City this week to be the obvious reason for John C. Flynn's arrival in Hollywood a few days ago.

Capra's Plans Not Yet Made Public

Future plans of Frank Capra, director for Harry Langdon during the past few years, are undetermined. Capra and Langdon have severed relations with the finishing of the latter's latest vehicle, "Long Pants."

There is a certain amount of credence in reports that Langdon will direct himself in future pictures with the services of a director to handle certain phases of the story.

Capra was a gag-man for Langdon before becoming a director. He was responsible for "The Strong Man," one of the comedy hits of the past year.

The regime of the merged interests, so far as production goes, will probably mean a considerably augmented schedule. We learned definitely that the one thing in this respect which so far has been officially decided is that Cecil B. DeMille will make one special picture during the 1927-28 season. This picture, it is said, will be equally proportionate to that of his recently finished "King of Kings." It was also gathered at this early date that present plans do not call for any radical changes in the present Producers Distributing Corp. production schedule, other than that of additional feature pictures.

Interview Impossible

Efforts of Moving Picture World to interview Mr. Flynn this week were unavailing. This can be appreciated in view of the fact that the home office of the merged interests is in New York, and, from what we previously gathered out here, official announcements in regard to the merged interests will be made in New York.

At the present time, the Metropolitan Studios working force has been cut down to less than one-half of what it is under normal conditions. This situation is not an abnormal one, as explained to us, being due to the fact that there is simply an intermission in production activities which will be resumed in the next few weeks when between two and four productions will get under way at these studios.

In connection with the merged interests and Mr. Flynn's appearance on the coast, it is also recalled that the production output of the Metropolitan and De Mille Studios together for the season 1926-27 was exactly forty-two pictures. That the new interests may cause this schedule to be nearly doubled for the ensuing year was a belief prominent in well informed circles late this week.

Veidt To Star In "Lea Lyon" For Universal

Conrad Veidt, German star, will be co-starred with Mary Philbin in Universal's "Lea Lyon."

Veidt was originally slated to play the lead in "The Chinese Parrot," being directed by Paul Leni, but was transferred to "Lea Lyon" to portray the role of the rabbi which is an exacting and powerful figure in the latter story. Veidt's successor in the Leni picture has not been announced yet.

As announced in the Moving Picture World, several weeks ago, Corinne Griffith is now associated with United Artists and her first picture will be "Sunny," to be adapted from the famous musical comedy of the same name.

John Considine, Jr., head of Feature Productions, Inc., has closed a deal for the screen rights, after heated bidding with rival producing organizations. Bertha Livingstone, chief of the editorial department at the Schenck plant, represented Considine in the negotiations with Regina Murnel, New York agent.

A wait New Director For "Uncle Tom"

Ray Coffin Heads The Wampas With Reputation As Writer

RAY COFFIN, personal representative for Hal Roach, is the newly elected president of the Wampas, nationally-known organization of West Coast motion picture publicists. He succeeds Pete Smith, who held the office during the past year.

In publicity circles, Coffin is well-known not only on the Coast but throughout the country as well, and his labors have earned for him deserved recognition. His genial personality and keen perception of his vocation have made him one of the most popular figures in the film industry.

Like a large percentage of the population of Los Angeles, Ray was born in Iowa. His newspaper career had its inception before he was out of short pants (not golf knickers), when he got himself a job as a printer's devil. It was but a step later on to the picture field, where a facile pen was turned to scenarios. That he was eminently successful in this line is evidenced by the fact that Tom Mix, the late John Bunny, Marshall Neilan, Lloyd Hamilton and other well-known screen personalities found his stories to their liking and subsequently transferred them from the typewritten page to the galloping celluloids. All told, Ray claims something like 300 stories to his credit.

Intrigued by the exhibitors' angle of the business, he went east, where he purchased two theatres, which he operated himself. This was followed by a period of free lance writing immediately preceding the World War, in which he earned his chevrons as a top-sergeant.

Following the war he became a film salesman for Fox and later went with First National as assistant-manager of that company's Omaha branch.

An offer from Richard Walton Tully resulted in his becoming publicity director for that gentleman when he was producing pictures. Bringing his career up to date, he later took Roscoe Arbuckle on a six-months tour; then returned to Los Angeles to become director of publicity for the West Coast Theatres; spent the following year with Samuel Goldwyn and then resigned to cast his lot with Hal Roach nearly a year ago.

Ray is an all-around good fellow and a member of several fraternal organizations. He is extremely popular with the boys in his own calling, which is the best test of a man's caliber.

Pete Smith, Coffin's predecessor, leaves the presidential chair with an enviable record. His term was one that saw the Wampas more firmly established than ever as a body of men that mean something in the community.

Phil Gersdorf, the newly elected treasurer, is one of the most popular of publicists both in and out of the Wampas.

The remainder of the incoming officers for 1927 follows: Bob Doman, 1st vice-president; Sam Cohen, 2nd vice-president; Joe Steele, sergeant-at-arms, and Joe Sherman, secretary. The new board of directors consists of: Howard Strickling, Tom Engler, George Landy, Mark Larkin, Pat Dowling and Ray Miller.

Nellie Revell, New York publicist, Martin Quigley, editor of the Exhibitors Herald and Neal O'Hara, noted newspaper humorist, were among the guests of honor at the recent meeting at which the 1927 officers were elected.

Bill Cody Back

Bill Cody is back in harness again, having commenced work on "Out of the Dust," a western for Pathe release. This is his second feature for Pathe since recently throwing in with that organization.

Johnny Hines "Comes Through" With Another Winner In His "All Aboard"

By V. M. Powers, West Coast Staff Writer

THERE are comedians and comedians—and then again there is Johnny Hines, the inimitable laugh-purveyor! His latest release, "All Aboard," which was previewed at one of the Hollywood theatres the other night, convinced a packed house that he had come through with another winner. Hines is excellent, the titles are very good and the entire cast does exceptionally fine work.

While there is not a great deal to the story, a great deal of plot was unnecessary with Johnny streaking through the picture in his usual dazzling style. From the opening "shot," where Hines as a shoe clerk finds himself in a maze of difficulties, until the final fadeout, where he annexes himself a bride, there is action and humor galore.

Edna Murphy did very well as the feminine lead despite the fact that she was offered but scant opportunity to display her talents as an actress. The opportunity she had, she handled well and made a charming heroine for Johnny to save from the toils of the villainous desert sheik, played by Frank Hagney.

Dot Farley, as the girl's aunt, ran Hines a close second for laughs. She lends just the touch needed to keep things moving and made a perfect foil for the star.

Henry Barrows and Babe London also did well with the small parts entrusted to them. Miss London made a rotund desert belle, and her attempts to vamp Hines resulted in causing the latter much discomfiture that appealed to the risibilities of the audience.

Most of the action is laid on the north African desert, where Hines finds himself in the role of a guide for a party of tourists. With Miss Murphy as one of the travellers in his party, he quite naturally finds work a pleasure.

"All Aboard" should add to the already established popularity of Hines. It lives up to its promise as a comedy and should prove pay-dirt for exhibitors who show the pictures.

John Gilbert and Greta Garbo Not Married, They Tell The World

Persistent reports in Hollywood film circles that Greta Garbo and John Gilbert, stars of "Flesh and the Devil," were secretly married are tabbed as just so much "hokum" by the principals involved.

Gilbert, who is now convalescing from an illness that kept him confined in a local hospital, seconded Miss Garbo's denial of their marriage or even their engagement, which has been rumored since the pair started work in their recent exotic production.

Miss Garbo was emphatic in her declaration that there was nothing of a sentimental nature between herself and Gilbert other than that she harbored profound regard for his talent as a screen actor.

Mayer Corroborates World Report Of Affiliation With Hal Roach

Last November this department, in an exclusive interview, published the fact that Hal Roach would release all of his productions through Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. This week an official announcement of the alliance was made by Louis B. Mayer at the M. G. M. studios.

Through his new distributors, Roach, during the next season, will release ten Our Gang comedies, ten comedies featuring Charlie Chase and ten comedies featuring Max Davidson; also, six western comedies and six straight comedies with well-known names in the cast.

At the same time it is made known that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will establish in conjunction with the alliance, a M. G.

Star's First Picture To Be "Garden of Eden," Berlin Stage Success, Shortly To Open in London and New York

CORINNE GRIFFITH has been signed by United Artists Corporation as an independent producer of her own films it was announced yesterday by Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the Board of Directors of United Artists, who arrived from Hollywood Thursday.

Ford Praises Murnau's Film

"Sunrise," F. W. Murnau's first American production, is beginning to loom large on the motion picture horizon. Reports and photographs filtering through from Hollywood indicate that the distinguished German director has created an unusual picture.

The latest word from the West Coast was brought by John Ford, director of "The Iron Horse," who stopped in New York, en route to Germany.

After seeing rushes of "Sunrise," Ford declared that he believed it to be the greatest picture that has been produced. Ford said he doubts whether a greater picture will be made in the next ten years.

A Famous Team

Mary Carr and William Walsh, mother and father of "Over the Hill," are together again and playing the same type of roles in "Paying the Price," the Columbia production now nearing completion at the company's West Coast studios.

Mr. Schenck said that Miss Griffith is now en route from Europe to the United States to begin work on her first United Artists picture, which will be made in Hollywood. This will be the next film which Miss Griffith produces, Mr. Schenck said, as the star has completed her contract with First National Pictures.

June Mathis, woman producer and screen writer, has been signed to prepare Miss Griffith's first United Artists story, Mr. Schenck said, adding that this story very probably will be "The Garden of Eden," a present European stage success by two German playwrights, Rudolph Bernauer and Rudolph Oesterreicher.

"The Garden of Eden" is now playing in Berlin and is soon to be opened in London. It will be produced in New York City soon after the return of Arch Selwyn from Europe.

The screen rights to this comedy drama have been purchased by Mr. Schenck for Miss Griffith, he said. One of the objects of the star's trip abroad was to see "The Garden of Eden" in Berlin on the stage, Mr. Schenck declared.

Corinne Griffith, by the terms of the contract announced yesterday, joins the ranks of Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge, Gloria Swanson, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, John Barrymore, Buster Keaton, Samuel Goldwyn (whose stars are Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky), Morris Gest, D. W. Griffith and Joseph M. Schenck, independent producers for United Artists.

Interpreter Is An Actor, Now

From interpreter for Greta Garbo, Swedish star, to a role as a United States cavalry officer is the new status of Svend Borg, former Swedish consular attache.

Borg has been added to the cast of "The Bugle Call," Jackie Coogan's forthcoming Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle. He was an actor on the stage in his native land, then became a consular attache, being sent to the Orient and later to America, where he was drafted to act as interpreter when Greta Garbo was brought to this country.

Rich-Frazer in Banner Picture; Starrett's Story

"Wanted—a Coward," the Banner production released and distributed by Sterling Pictures Corporation, under Henry Ginsberg, has been completed, titled, and cut and is now on its way East from the Coast for distribution.

Excellent Cast For Rin-Tin-Tin

Warner Bros.' "Tracked by the Police" company has been augmented by the presence of David Morris, and the cast to date includes, in support of Rin Tin Tin, the star, Virginia Brown Faire, Jason Robards, Douglas Gerrard, Tom Santschi, Heinie Conklin and Tom McGuire. Johnnie Grey prepared the scenario, based on Gregory Rogers' story. Ray Enright is directing.

Warner's Pictures On the Leviathan

Three Warner pictures were booked for showing on one trip of the S.S. Leviathan, which sailed from New York on February 26th.

These pictures were "Wolf's Clothing," starring Monte Blue, "Hills of Kentucky," starring Rin Tin Tin, and "The Gay Old Bird," starring Louise Fazenda.

The deal with the Leviathan was consummated by Ezra Leavitt, head of the Non-Theatrical Department of Warner Bros.

New Gotham Picture

Camera work was started this week on "Sinews of Steel," tenth picture of a series of twelve Gotham Productions to be made by Sam Sax for release for Lumas Film Corporation. "Sinews of Steel" is a romance of the flaming forges. Alberta Vaughn is announced in the leading feminine role, with Gaston Glass playing opposite her. That veteran screen "heavy," Anders Randolph, will be seen in an important character role.

Spring Activity At Paramount Eastern Studio

Spring production activities are scheduled to get under way with a rush at the Paramount Long Island studio during the early part of March. Four productions will be added to the two now in progress. It is expected that until the middle of April five productions will be in progress simultaneously.

Present plans call for the start of three pictures on March 7. These will be Thomas Meighan in "We Are All Gamblers," Herbert Brenon's "The Devil Is Alive" and Richard Dix's "The Roughneck Gentleman." There may also be a fourth on that day.

February 28 was chosen for the starting date of Raymond Griffith's first starring picture in the East, but he has been delayed on the Coast. Frank Tuttle will direct.

Becky Gardiner is now working on a script for Meighan's picture. The story is by Owen Davis. Greta Nissen will be Meighan's leading woman. Malcolm St. Clair will direct.

Director Elmer Clifton is now receiving reports from location scouts in the north country and other details for the start of the Dix picture are rapidly being whipped into shape. Practically all of this story will be filmed on a snow and ice background.

Brenon's next picture is also an Owen Davis story. It is to have an unusually strong cast, including some of the best known players under contract to Paramount.

At the present time W. C. Fields is at work in his fourth starring picture for Paramount. It has not been titled. Gregory La Cava is directing and Mary Brian has one of the principal feminine roles.

Ed Wynn and the company making "Rubber Heels" under Victor Heerman's direction are at Niagara Falls for the sequences which climax the production.

Wilmer-Vincent Circuit Booked Columbia Solid

Wilmer and Vincent Circuit has closed a deal for Columbia's 1926-27 output for its Colonial, Allentown, and the State, Easton, Pa. Both these first-run houses are known as the best in their respective cities. The Columbia exchange in Philadelphia handled the details.

Columbia is going over big with the exhibitors everywhere, the signed contracts coming into the home office bearing eloquent testimony to this fact, according to Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures.

"Stolen Pleasures," another of Columbia's recent releases was booked into Universal's first run theatre in Denver, the America, starting the week of March 5. "Wandering Girls" is playing the Broadway, New York, while "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," is being played for extended runs and return dates in a number of theatres.

The Eckel, Syracuse, which booked "Sweet Rosie O'Grady" for four days, held the picture over for a full week.

Additions To "The Climbers"

Myrna Loy, Anders Randolph, Clyde Cook and Dot Farley have been added to the cast of "The Climbers," Irene Rich's next starring production.

This famous Clyde Fitch play is scheduled to go into production in the course of a few days.

Tom Gibson is adapting the script, and the story will be directed by "Paul L. Stein.

Helen Costello of Warner Bros. chooses poinsettia for her home decoration.

A laugh in "Roses and Ruses," the Fox O. Henry comedy, with Ralph Sipperly.

Warner Bros. to Make Epic of United States Mail Service

ANOTHER outstanding story of United States history with a picturesque background is to be made by Warner Bros. as their further contribution to the living drama of America. This time it will be "The Romance of the United States Mail," an idea suggested by Jack L. Warner, in charge of production at the West Coast studio. Already the government and the post office department have signified their intention of lending every aid to the project.

It is to be an epic of the mail service, chock full of romance, but which has hardly been touched upon. It will take in all phases of the service from the time of the pony express riders of the old Wells-Fargo days up to the present air mail speeding across the continent.

The United States mail is now and always has been the backbone of America. There is other romance attached to it beside the danger risked by the men who deliver the letters. Lincoln's Gettysburg speech was written on the back of an envelope that had been delivered through the mail. In still earlier days George Washington's election was conveyed to him at Mount Vernon by a special delivery mail messenger.

The theme will be: "The mail must get there regardless of life, hardship, torture."

Everyone connected with the production department of Warner Bros. is enthusiastic over this picture, which will be one of the extended run productions on next season's program.

Jack Warner has promised to spare no expense to make it the outstanding production of the 1927-28 season. With the assistance of the government, an actual story of the United States Mail Service will be told.

Paramount Establishes Fixed Stock Company in Its Studios

The Paramount Stock Company, as now constituted, includes the following players: Richard Arlen, George Bancroft, Warner Baxter, Noah Beery, Charlot Bird, Sally Blane, El Brendel, Mary Brian, Clive Brook, Louise Brooks, William Collier, Jr., Chester Conklin, Ricardo Cortez, Lil Dagover, Josephine Dunn, Susan Fleming, Douglas Gilmore, Walter Goss, Iris Gray, Lawrence Gray, James Hall, Sterling Holloway, Neil Hamilton, Einar Hanson, Marion Ivy Harris, Raymond Hatton, Doris Hill, Ione Holmes.

Betty Jewel, Tom Kennedy, Donald Keith, Sue Kilbourne, Irma Kornelia, Blanche LeClaire, Jocelyn Lee, Jack Luden, Ginette Maddie, Arlette Machal, Alyce Mills, Marietta Millner, Margaret

Back From Location

The First National company filming "The Sunset Derby" has returned to the studio after a week's location trip to San Diego, where racing scenes were filmed at the Tijuana track. At least two more weeks' work at the studio remains, according to Albert Rogell, who is directing the film for Charles R. Rogers, the producer.

Asher Picture Second Week In Brooklyn

"McFadden's Flats" made history again when it was held over at the Brooklyn Mark Strand for the second week.

This is one of the few pictures ever to be held over at this house. Business during the first week demanded that a further holdover was deemed judicious.

The smashing success of the Asher, Small and Rogers' comedy for First National at the Brooklyn Strand was duplicated by numerous theatres in key cities scattered over a wide area.

Showmen Wire M-G-M Offices

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Big three" for the present season, "The Scarlet Letter," "Tell It to the Marines," and "The Fire Brigade," are smashing established receipts and attendance records all over the country.

The M-G-M offices are receiving telegrams from exhibitors lauding the attractions and reporting new local box-office records.

Wires were received from Livingston Lanning, of the Roger Sherman Theatre, New Haven, Conn.; Robert Suits, manager of the Garde Theatre New London, Conn.; Thomas Burke, operating the Liberty Theatre, Cumberland, Maryland, and Louis J. Appell of the Capitol Theatre, York, Pa.

Warners Nearly Ready For Epic

Work on the script of "Noah's Ark" is being practically completed at the Warner Bros. West Coast studio, with actual production of the picture expected to get under way in the next two weeks.

Michael Curtiz will be in charge of direction. An exceptional cast is being assembled, and the names of the players will be announced later.

Hearst Papers Run Serial On M-G-M Picture

In accordance with the usual Cosmopolitan policy of serializing every production that will lend itself to that form of publicity, "Captain Salvation," which John S. Robertson is directing for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is being serialized in nine of the most important Hearst newspapers throughout the country.

The first serial installment of this novel by Frederick Wm. Wallace, from which the motion picture has been taken, began in the New York American on Monday, Feb. 21. The eight other newspapers are situated in key cities all over the United States, so that the individual exhibitor will get most benefit from the publicity value of the serialization.

Monte Blue in "The Brute" Is Nearing Close

Exteriors of a western dance hall, with cowboys, dancing girls, etc., are being shot for "The Brute," Monte Blue's latest Warner Bros.' starring vehicle.

In support of Mr. Blue are Leila Hyams, recently signed to a long term contract, Clyde Cook, Carol Nye and Paul Nicholson.

The film is based on W. Douglas Newton's story, with scenario by Harvey Gates and direction by Irving Cummings.

Amsterdam On "Don Juan" Crowds

Following the opening of "Don Juan" at the Arcadia, Reading, Pa., last week in a howling snow storm, Ben Amsterdam, President of the Franklin Theatre Co., wired Sam E. Morris, General Manager of Distribution for Warner Bros., as follows:

"We opened last night with 'Don Juan' at the new Arcadia Theatre, Reading, Pa., and in spite of the worst storm of the season, with snow in adjacent towns from twelve inches to four and a half feet deep, we opened to marvelous business, at increased admissions. Our usual opening hour is one thirty, but we opened yesterday at eleven o'clock to take care of the crowds of people standing in line. The receipts of the day broke all records many times over. Continuous applause throughout the performance, and newspapers enthusiastic in their praise. This picture contracted for a two-week run but anticipate will be necessary to extend run to take care of people. Congratulations to you and Warner Brothers for this outstanding production."

"Princess" Completed

"The Princess From Hoboken," a Tiffany production, has been completed and is now being cut and titled. It is a farce comedy and has in the principal roles Edmund Burns, Blanche Mehaffey, Ethel Clayton, Lou Tellegen, Babe London and Charles McHugh.

Dorothy Sebastian, in John Gilbert's Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "The Show," exhibits a novel traffic sign.

Criterion, Los Angeles, Holds "Night of Love" Four Weeks

THE BOX OFFICE SUCCESS of "The Night of Love," first picture to be played in the Criterion Theatre, Los Angeles, under its first-run policy, has determined Abe Gore, of West Coast Theatres, Inc., to adopt an indefinite run policy for the Criterion.

Mr. Gore wired Samuel Goldwyn, producer of "The Night of Love," now in New York, that the first week's gross on "The Night of Love" in its Los Angeles first run was more than four times the average weekly gross under the former Criterion second run policy.

Gore directly credits his decision to adopt a long run policy to Goldwyn's latest United Artists release. His telegram states:

"Through your kindness we were able to change into a long run policy."

The telegram states further that "The Night of Love," George Fitzmaurice's production with Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky, is playing to capacity business, and that the business of the first week had been such a notable accomplishment that the former second run house will play "The Night of Love" on a run of at least four weeks.

Gotham Has Comedy Posters For "Quarantined Rivals"

IN RELEASING "Quarantined Rivals," the screen version of George Randolph Chester's story, Gotham Productions are keeping all the advertising accessory material in the spirit of farce comedy which prevails throughout the picture.

A striking instance is the lithographs, originated by Lon Young and drawn by Robert Griffith, a modernistic artist, whose work is attracting much attention on account of his unusual effects.

There is no possibility of anyone mistaking any one of these posters for anything but comedy. It is as if a comic page from one of the popular weeklies was enlarged to life size and reproduced in colors.

A complete line of lithographs ranging from a twenty-four sheet, a six sheet, two styles of three sheets and two styles of one sheets have been treated in this humorous vein for "Quarantined Rivals," and gives the exhibitor an entirely new angle for poster ideas.

"Casey" Approved

"Casey at the Bat," Paramount's comedy starring Wallace Beery, has been selected for the Photoplay Guide of popular entertainment films by the National Board of Review. This selection was made because of the acting, direction, clean comedy value, clever titling and the appropriate costuming.

New Release

"The Broken Gate," by Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon," has been completed by Tiffany, and is scheduled for release March 15th. In the cast are Dorothy Phillips, William Collier, Jr., Florence Turner, Gibson Gowland, Phillips Smalley and Charles A. Post.

Robert Agnew and Marion Nixon in a scene from the Universal Jewel "Down The Stretch."

David Selman to Direct Newest Columbia Film

A wire received from the coast announces that Harry Cohn, vice-president in charge of production for Columbia Pictures, has selected David Selman as the director of the company's forthcoming production, "Paying the Price."

This will be Selman's second picture for Columbia, as he also brought "Remember" to the screen.

Plan Mail Story

Within a short time Warner Brothers will commence production work on "The Romance of the U. S. Mail," which, it is said, will be a history of the United States mail service dating back to the time of the Pony Express. This was one of the announcements made by Jack Warner upon his recent return from New York, where he conferred with his brothers upon Warner production for the ensuing season.

Cutting "Big Bertha"

"Big Bertha," First National's war comedy, featuring Charlie Murray and George Sidney, has gone into the cutting room following its completion on the Burbank lot. The scenes of the story are laid partly on the Russo-German front during the World War. Natalie Kingston has the feminine lead. Frank Griffin produced and Del Lord directed.

Featured Stars

Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall will be featured by First National in "Lady Be Good," screen version of the musical comedy success.

In Warner Bros.' "Third Degree," Dolores Costello has a great role and a tiring one, so she rests between scenes.

Alma Bennett is Back to Sennett

Alma Bennett has returned to her contractual obligations at the Mack Sennett Studio to continue appearances in Pathe comedies after sixteen weeks' work at other studios.

During the vacation at the Sennett studio, beginning in September, Alma went out and got herself so many jobs that only last week was she free to return to the comedy studio to resume her work there.

Miss Bennett played an important role in Harry Langdon's latest picture, as well as with Colleen Moore and Milton Sills.

She is at present appearing with Madeline Hurlock in Mack Sennett's comedy around the Catalina Channel swim.

"Rosie O'Grady" Receives Heavy Bookings in Pa.

"Sweet Rosie O'Grady" bids fair to steal the honors from all previous Columbia releases, if one is to judge by the booking contracts on this picture received by Joe Brandt, president of the company.

The latest batch which came in this week from H. E. Weiner, Resident Manager of the Philadelphia Branch, which covers Eastern Pennsylvania and Northern New Jersey, reads like a list of the most important first-run houses in that territory.

Miss Shannon Cast

Ethel Shannon has been engaged to play the second feminine lead with Babe Ruth and Anna Q. Nilsson in "Babe Comes Home," for First National Pictures. Ted Wilde is directing.

Four of the bloodhounds purchased from George D. Colts, of Salt Lake City, by Universal, to chase Liza across the ice in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

"The Rough Riders" Premiere At Geo. M. Cohan Theatre, March 15

JESSE L. LASKY, in charge of all producing activities for Paramount pictures, has just arrived in New York from the west coast with the first print of "The Rough Riders."

This is the third of the special road show productions which Paramount has contributed to the current season, and it will have its metropolitan premier at the George M. Cohan Theatre on Tuesday, March 15.

Coming in the wake of two such successes as "Old Ironsides" and "Beau Geste" the unqualified announcement of its sponsors that it is the best picture feature ever turned out of their studios gives it a rating of expectancy which will make all members of the Missouri cult whet their weapons for a contest.

The title tells the story, an intimate narrative of that unique military complement known officially as the First Volunteer U. S. Cavalry, which furnished the picturesque element of the Spanish-American war, and created a condition which made pages of American history for years to come.

Victor Fleming had the task of technically directing and creating the entire picture. In this he was assisted by a cast including Noah Beery, George Bancroft, Charles Farrell, Mary Astor, Charles Emmett Mack, and Frank Hopper in a life like portrayal of Col. Theodore Roosevelt.

Eva Novak Finishes

Eva Novak has just completed work in "Red Signals," a railroad melodrama for Joe Rock at the Universal Studio. Miss Novak will leave for Australia in April to start work in a series of six pictures in the Antipodes. Her husband, William Reed, is now in Sydney handling Miss Novak's recent picture screened there, "For the Term of His Natural Life."

Stone to Feature

Lewis Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson will be co-featured in "Lonely Ladies" by Lenore Coffee, which goes into production shortly at the First National Studios.

Miss Gadsden's Role

Jacqueline Gadsden will play "Mary Lyle" in "The Thirteenth Hour," Chester M. Franklin's first picture for M-G-M.

Miss Joy's "Vanity"

Camera work has been begun on Leatrice Joy's "Vanity," which Donald Crisp is directing for DeMille-P.D.C.

Ethlyne Clair, clever screen comedienne, playing in "The Newlyweds and Their Baby," for Stern Bros.

Rawlinson Cast For Father Role in "Bugle Call"

Herbert Rawlinson now believes that there is something in omens. A short time ago Rawlinson became a proud parent. Now he has been cast for his first "father role" as Jackie Cogan's dad in the juvenile star's Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vehicle, "The Bugle Call."

Claire Windsor is the only other supporting player so far selected for this film, production on which is scheduled to start this week under Edward Sedgwick, who has just finished "Slide, Kelly, Slide," M-G-M's colorful baseball picture in which William Haines, Harry Carey and Sally O'Neil have leading roles.

Hobart Henley and his mother present Marion Davies with a cake on her birthday anniversary at the M.-G.-M. studios, where she is making "Tillie the Toiler."

Jack Warner Returns to Coast; Paves 1927-28 Production Path

AFTER PRESENTING to the home office the happy condition existing in the west coast production department with all pictures being turned out on schedule, Jack Warner, in charge of productions, is on his way back to Hollywood to put the finishing touches on this year's work and clear the way for the coming season.

Mr. Warner reassured the sales department that production was 100 per cent up to date with more than half of the total output completed, and nine more pictures in work or being cut and titled. Six more in preparation are only awaiting the word to get under way when Mr. Warner gets back on the job.

"Exhibitors can now arrange play dates and be prepared to play some of the best pictures turned out by any company this year," he said. "While our attractions for the first part of the 1926-27 have all scored heavily, some of them creating new records, the productions now on the way and being prepared are so chock full of entertainment that they are bound to surpass our previous releases of this season.

"Our whole schedule is now in full swing and only requires a little extra push to complete even ahead of the date originally figures in May.

"In addition to fifteen pictures now in production or being prepared, there are three extended run productions getting ready. They are 'Noah's Ark', 'Black Ivory' and a new Chaplin untitled Chaplin picture.

"Of course the whole industry has heard of the hit again scored by Dolores Costello in 'When A Man Loves' and in 'The Third Degree,' her first starring picture. It may interest exhibitors to know that we are picking Miss Costello's pictures with the greatest care and her best productions for this season are yet to come.

"I am glad to say that George Jessel will make two pictures for us next season, George will return to Hollywood, the latter part of April and 'The Jazz Singer' will be started on or about May 1. The second Jessel production will about the middle of June."

Roxy Selects Warner Picture For His Second Attraction

Following the signing for the Vitaphone, to be an important feature in his presentation program, S. L. Rothafel then put his signature to a contract which calls for the booking of Warner Bros. pictures for this colossal theatre.

Monte Blue in the novelty picture, "Wolf's Clothing" will be the attraction to follow the opening week at the Roxy. This is a story of New York life in which Monte Blue has the role of a subway guard who has his first night off in three years. What happens when he meets Patsy Ruth Miller on that night is plenty.

Warner Bros. consider that the booking of their product by one of the most astute showmen of the times, and the selection of a Warner picture to follow the opening of the biggest and most beautiful theatre in the world, is another triumph for their productions.

Davis Reissues 'Trail's End,' an Early Success

George H. Davis, who produced James Oliver Curwood's "Isobel" or "The Trail's End," several years ago, has reissued that motion picture, one of the most successful of independent productions, and has just closed a contract with Jack Bellman of Hollywood Pictures Corporation to distribute it in New York and the territory served by Mr. Bellman's exchange.

"Isobel," after its pre-view showing at the Astor Hotel, was booked into the Mark Strand, New York City, for Christmas week on its original showing. The featured players are House Peters and Jane Novak, with Edward J. Peil, Tom Wilson, Bob Walker, Richard Larned and Pearl May Norton in the other important roles.

It was directed by Edwin Carewe, now recognized as one of the ablest directors in the industry.

And These Titles Ought to Be Good!

John W. (Jack) Conway, sports authority and critic of "Variety," characterized in a recent article in "The American Mercury" as "the master of all American slang writers," will write the subtitles for Richard Dix's Paramount picture, "Knockout Reilly."

"Carmen" Sets

Raoul Walsh is utilizing gorgeous sets in "Carmen," now entering its fifth week at the West Coast Studio. Victor McLaglen and Dolores del Rio have featured roles.

Janet Gaynor as Diane in "Seventh Heaven" for Fox.

Florence Gilbert will appear in "Love Makes 'Em Wild" for Fox.

Twelve Pictures In F. B. O. Lists, Month of March

The F. B. O. release schedule for the month of March will be comprised of twelve pictures, according to the announcement of Joseph P. Kennedy, president of the company. These will consist of one Gold Bond, two Westerns, one George O'Hara vehicle, two "Wisecracker" Comedies, one Bowers Novelty Comedy, one Standard Comedy, two Alice Cartoons and two Krazy Kat Cartoons.

The Gold Bond is "Moulders of Men," the big Elks special, starring Conway Tearle and Margaret Morris. Direction is by Ralph Ince.

The Westerns are Tom Tyler in "The Sonora Kid" and Bob Custer in "Terror of the Bar X." Percy Pembroke directed the latter from the story by George M. Johnson. Ruby Blaine plays the female lead opposite Bob Custer. Tyler's vehicle was taken from the story "Knight of the Range" by William Wallace Cooke. The director was Bob De Lacy, with Peggy Montgomery playing the opposite lead.

Big Advertising Tie-Up Set For United Picture

A special national advertising tie-up with the House of Kuppenheimer gives exhibitors playing "The Beloved Rogue," during March, the advantage of a full page Saturday Evening Post advertisement in colors, with John Barrymore and "The Beloved Rogue" prominently featured.

The tie-up, evidencing Kuppenheimer's recognition of Barrymore's popular appeal, surpasses any ordinary tie-up, since Kuppenheimer is issuing 24-sheets and window cards for their men's clothing dealers.

"The Blood Ship" For Columbia; Hobart Bosworth in the Lead

A WIRE from Harry Cohn, vice-president in charge of production, for Columbia Pictures, gives as the first important announcement of the company's new season plans, the acquisition of "The Blood Ship," a story of the sea, by Norman Springer.

Mr. Cohn was so enthusiastic about this story, which he believes to be another "Sea Wolf," that he immediately signed Hobart Bosworth to appear in the leading role, the romantic portrayal of a shanghaied sailor.

It will be remembered that it was in the Jack London story that Bosworth rose to fame many years ago.

His many portrayals of sea characters, ever since, have made the name Bosworth synonymous with realistic characterizations of "Men who go down to the sea in ships."

"The Blood Ship" will go into work immediately.

Miss Garon's Role

Pauline Garon heads the cast of "The Princess of Broadway," a Pathe feature for release March 13. Miss Garon's role permits her a wide latitude for her talent.

Wins Good Role

Paula Howard, until recently a salesgirl in Hollywood, has been given a fine role in "The Heart Thief," for DeMille-P.D.C.

Dorothy Dwan, with Nanette, Rin-Tin-Tin and Lee Duncan, in "Hills of Kentucky" for Warner Bros.

Columbia Film, 'Price of Honor,' Being Edited

Camera work has been finished on "The Price of Honor," one of the few remaining pictures to be completed of Columbia's present season product, and Director Edward H. Griffith is now busy cutting and editing the production.

William V. Mong plays the part of an innocent man imprisoned for life on circumstantial evidence. Another difficult role in the production was entrusted to the capable hands of Gustav von Seyffertitz, a past master at the art of dramatic portrayals.

Malcolm McGregor and Dorothy Revier handled the romance of the picture. Erville Alderson and Dan Mason are in the cast.

Many Beauties in Miss Borden's New Fox Film

Olive Borden is surrounded by 128 of the most attractive girls in Florida, who were given parts in "The Joy Girl" as a result of the beauty competition arranged by the Palm Beach Times.

There was a great deal of expectation rife among the entrants who hoped for parts in "The Joy Girl," May Edginton's story adapted for the screen by Fox Films.

Nina Wilcox Putnam, another author of note, assisted Dwan in choosing the most beautiful girls. They could not, in all justice to the contestants, reduce the number of winners below 128.

W. L. Wright On "U" Lots Until Next February

William Lord Wright, one of the industry's leading studio experts on Short Product and Western drama, recently began a new twelve months' engagement with the Laemmle organization. He has been signed to continue his executive capacities at Universal City from February 18, 1927, to February 18, 1928.

Wright is credited by Universal heads with much of the excellent of Universal short product during the past several seasons.

Burns in "U" Cast

Edmund Burns will be seen in "The Chinese Parrot," in which Universal is starring Conrad Veidt.

Duveen Praises "The Blue Boy," Color Picture

Sir Joseph Duveen, renowned art connoisseur who recently returned to England, saw "The Blue Boy," Educational's Romance Production in Technicolor, before he left Los Angeles on the first leg of his voyage home. He will be recalled as the man who obtained the Gainsborough masterpiece. "The Blue Boy," for the Henry E. Huntington collection. It was around this painting that Arthur Maude wove a beautiful story with Philippe De Lacy and John Roche in the leading roles.

Commenting on this production in the Los Angeles Express, Sir Joseph said:—

"The picture is a gem. I have never seen colors so delightfully brought forth in motion pictures."

Unique Camera Effects Seen in Adams Comedy

An unusual camera effect for a Short Subject is to be found in "Here Comes Precious!" an Educational-Jimmie Adams Comedy.

Jimmie Adams, victor in his conflict with his rival for the hand of the fair Vera Steadman, blows a smoke ring. The ring slowly changes to a heart in mid-air. It then transforms into a ring again, and Jimmie slips it on Vera's engagement finger as the ring magically fades into a real engagement ring.

Pathe Offers Lenten Films

Pathe offers to exhibitors, for presentation during the Lenten season, an excellent array of single-reel subjects entitled "The Pilgrimage to Palestine Series."

The first six productions in "The Pilgrimage to Palestine Series" are "Bethlehem," "Nazareth," "Bethany in Judea," "The Sea of Galilee," "The Garden of Gethsemane" and "Via Dolorosa."

These films are particularly suitable for this occasion in church history when the attention of Christians is directed to the story of Jesus' life and the crucifixion.

In Production

"Rich, But Honest," an Albert Ray release for Fox Films, has gone into production at the West Coast Studio. The cast includes Nancy Nash, Clifford Holland, J. Farrell MacDonald, Tyler Brooke, Ted McNamara, Marjorie Beebe and Ernie Shields.

Educational Romances Win Praise of N. Y. City Official

Ernest L. Crandall, Director of Lectures and Visual Instruction in Schools, In Letter, Urges Attendance

ERNEST L. CRANDALL, Director of Lectures and Visual Instruction in New York City schools considered the engagement of "The Mona Lisa," Educational's Romance Production in Technicolor, over the Loew Circuit in Greater New York, of such importance that he addressed a letter to the district superintendents of the New York school system, as well as the principals in charge of the continuation schools, high schools and junior high schools, stating that teachers, parents and children would be benefited by seeing this Short Feature.

It will be recalled that these superintendents, together with art instructor and others, were invited to a special showing of the three Romance Productions last fall, at which time Dr. Crandall, who also is president of the Visual Instruction Association of America, praised these pictures and pointed out the need of educators encouraging the showing of good things in motion picture theatres.

Dr. Crandall's Letter

In his letter, Dr. Crandall says, in part:

"Perhaps you embraced the opportunity to see specimens of these films (Romance Productions) at a recent meeting of the Visual Instruction Association. If you did, you are fully aware of their excellence; if you did not, you missed a treat. Nothing more thoroughly artistic, refined and elevated has ever been put on the screen. There are a number of subjects in the series, all of which are based on some celebrated painting, and 'The Mona Lisa' is easily among the best.

"Teachers, parents and children would all be benefited and I am sure delighted as well by seeing this highly artistic production; and I believe you will agree with me that we should encourage the showing of good things in our motion picture theatres whenever the opportunity presents itself."

Buck Jones Busy

Buck Jones, Fox Film star, is starting the second week of shooting at Sonora, where exteriors are being made for "The Holy Terror." Lambert Hillier is directing.

"Big Boy's" Cast

Robert Graves, who has played many supporting roles in feature length productions, is cast in the part of the grandfather in "Grandpa's Boy," the new Educational-Juvenile Comedy featuring "Big Boy," the three-year-old baby star.

Kortman Cast

Bob Kortman, who has appeared as the much abused villain in numerous comedies made at the Educational Studios, plays the role of boss electrician in "Somebody's Fault," an Educational-Hamilton Comedy.

Christie Actors Seen in "Rush"

The Christie Studio experienced a "Christmas rush" of its own when "Cash and Carry," the new Educational-Christie Comedy featuring Neal Burns and Edna Marion, was filmed, although it wasn't during the Christmas season.

Neal and Edna are workers in the toy department of a large store, and enough toys and dolls were used in this department store sequence to supply the Christmas needs of many youngsters.

The department store set built in the Christie Studio, incidentally, was one of the largest ever constructed for a two-reel comedy.

Frances Lee and Bobby Vernon in the Educational Comedy "Sure Fire," aboard their straight eight—or is it a four?

Will Rogers Has Montana Hooked, Governor Says

Two successful screenings of Pathe's single-reel features Will Rogers "Our Unofficial Ambassador Abroad," were held in Montana, last week, one before Governor J. E. Erickson, and the State Legislature at Helena, and the other at the Rialto Theatre, Butte, attended by a distinguished gathering.

Governor Erickson, upon viewing the first three pictures in the new Rogers series, immediately dispatched a wire of praise to Harry Scott, general sales manager of Pathe, which reads:

"I just witnessed your pictures 'Will Rogers, Our Unofficial Ambassador Abroad,' and enjoyed them immensely. I think you are to be congratulated on your public spirit in this matter and I am sure the people in the West appreciate it. Will Rogers is a favorite in the West."

Buddy Messenger is checked, while Mr. X, the monkey, sympathizes in Bray's Sunkist Comedy, "Monkeys Prefer Blondes."

Two Mack Sennett Comedies On Pathe List For March 13

MAC K SENNETT offers two two-reel comedies on the Pathe short subject release program for the week of March 13, which also lists a new "Our Gang" funfilm from the Hal Roach Studios. Alice Day in

"A Dozen Socks," and Ben Turpin in "The Jolly Jilter," are the Sennett offerings and Hal Roach presents "Ten Years Old," with "Our Gang."

Other releases of the week are Pathe Review No. 11, the 7th

Marshall Starts Little Flock of Fox Fun Films

Three two-reel comedies were started in production by George E. Marshall, supervisor of comedies, at Fox Films West Coast Studios this week.

They are "The Midnight Kangaroo," and Imperial, with Gene Cameron and Sally Phipps, and directed by Jules White; "Not the Type," a Van Bibber, starring Earle Foxe with Virginia Paddock and directed by Jess Robbins, and "Extra, Extra," of the Animal brand starring Jerry "The Giant" Madden, with Leliah Lewis.

Pathe Review No. 11 presents: "Speeding Up Shoemaking," satisfying Dame Fashion's demands for new styles in shoes, showing how machinery keeps pace with feminine fancies.

"Roped In"

FIGHTS and Kisses in the Educational-Mermaid Comedy, "Roped In," are shown here with Al St. John as the featured player. Lucille Hutton has the principal feminine role and in the supporting cast are "Bull Montana" and Robert Graves.

The picture was directed by Charles Lamont and photographed by Ben White. Whoever doubted that "Bull" Montana looked like a hero of the cauliflower industry may be convinced of his error herewith.

Four-Year-Old Enrolled Among "Gang" Kiddies

One new youngster is on the road to fame, via her adoption into "Our Gang," and two others, twins, are being considered for prospective enrollment.

The Hal Roach studios officials have placed Jean Darling, aged four years, in stock for the role of "Leading Lady" in "Our Gang" Pathe comedies. She will frolic with Farina, Joe Frank Cobb, Jackie Condon, Jay R. Smith and Scooter Lowry for the next three months, with an almost certain prospect of being retained as the heroine of "Our Gang" comedies, fitting into the niche created and recently left vacant by Mary Kornman, who is now traveling in vaudeville in a co-starring act with Mickey Daniels.

Jean is an unusually pretty blonde child with big blue eyes and a world of the sweetness in personality which made Mary Kornman famous.

Mabel Normand's Current Picture

Mabel Normand plays one of the most ludicrous roles of her career in "One Hour Married," a new Pathe comedy.

As Private Patsy McNutt, bride of an hour who disguises herself as a doughboy, and as a consequence endures no end of hair-raising adventures at the front, searching for her lost husband, Mabel is said to be superb.

F. B. O. Gets "Mack"

Tom McNamara, cartoonist, writer, globe traveller and all around versatile chap is now safely ensconced in a suite of offices at the F. B. O. Studios, and is working on the adaptation and continuity of a new series which F. B. O. will shortly produce called "The Beauty Shop," adapted from H. C. Witwer's stories.

Orange Aid

As a thirst quencher the Patheserial unit producing "Melting Millions" has found orange juice ideal. A crate of oranges a day is delivered to the studio.

New Title

"Naughty Nannette" is the new title of the latest Viola Dana vehicle for F. B. O., formerly called "Nice and Wicked." J. Leo Meehan is directing.

Giblyn to F. B. O.

Charles Giblyn, the director, has been signed by F. B. O. to direct George O'Hara.

Ernie Shields and Barbara Luddy in the Fox Imperial Comedy, "Honeymoon Hospital."

Record Line-Up of Comedies From Stern Bros. For March

THE STERN BROTHERS, makers of two-reel comedies for Universal release, announce a record breaking output for March. Six comedies will reach the screen from that studio this month. All of them have been carefully selected to give maximum pulling power to offset Lent.

The list is headed by a Buster Brown Universal Jewel, and includes a "Newlyweds and Their Baby" comedy, two "Excuse Maker" comedies, a "Let George Do It" comedy and a "What Happened to Jane" comedy.

The first to reach the screen, scheduled for release March 2, is "Snookums Disappears," directed by Gus Meins. It features the remarkable baby "Snookums," and pretty Ethlyne Clair.

The Buster Brown comedy will reach the screen March 7. It is "Buster's Dark Mystery," also directed by Meins, and featuring the Buster Brown trio, Arthur Trimble, Doreen Turner and Pete, the dog comedian.

On March 9, "Some More Excuses," of "The Excuse Maker" series will be released, featuring Charles King, supported by Ethlyne Clair. Scott Pembroke directed.

The March 16 release will be "Jane's Honeymoons," Thelma Daniels, a newcomer in Stern Brothers comedies, plays Jane, supported by Earl McCarthy and Lillian Worth.

A laugh scene from "Break Away," Educational Christie Comedy featuring Natalie Joyce, Neal Burns and Gale Henry.

SHORT TALKS ON SHORT FEATURES

"Empties"

The most expensive thing about running your theatre is the empty seats in the last few rows. And, when you fill them, they are the most profitable. After you have cleared all expenses, every one of those "empties" in the rear that you fill is just so much velvet.

Filling these seats would seem to be one of your most important tasks. And it is. What are you doing about it?

It goes without saying that you are playing the best features you can get, and advertising them to the best of your ability. But you still have an added appeal that you can make to your patrons in your short features—provided, of course, that you are playing short features with a real box-office pull, with such popular stars as Lloyd Hamilton, Lupino Lane, Bobby Vernon, "Big Boy" and the other "big names" for which Educational Pictures are famous.

The box-office appeal is the ruling factor in the production of Educational Pictures, just as it is in your best long features. It has been the guide through the seven years of Educational's remarkable progress, and it is the guide for Educational's biggest program, the program for 1927-28 which will soon be announced.

Timely Reviews of Short Subjects

Edited By C. S. Sewell

"Drama De Luxe"

(Educational—Two Reels)

As the handy man in a theatrical troupe, Lupino Lane in his newest comedy for Educational has a role that keeps him exceedingly busy and results in a succession of funny situations for the spectator. Kathryn McGuire appears in the opposite role with Wallace Lupino as the manager of the show and Glen Cavender as a constable. The star is first seen bumming his way on a train. He gets a job in a theatre and is sent out to post bills and makes a mess of it. He wrecks the stage sets as Romeo in the balcony scene from Romeo and Juliet, puts an acrobatic act on the bum and even appears as a ballet dancer. It is all amusing burlesque with a plentiful sprinkling of slapstick. Lane uses his acrobatic ability to advantage.

"One Hour Married"

Pathe—Two Reels

This is one of the best of the new series of Mabel Normand Comedies produced by Hal Roach. It is a fast moving war story and shows Mabel's husband, portrayed by Creighton Hale, snatched away from her one hour after the marriage ceremony. He is sent to France and she follows and disguises as a soldier, eventually finds him but he fails to recognize her. They are given furloughs for deeds of valor and use it for a belated honeymoon. This is a fast-moving story, well punctuated with laughs and a number of unusual gags. Jimmy Finlayson and Noah Young also assist in the fun-making. Mabel in her make-up with a heavy black mustache looks like Ole Bill in The Better 'Ole, and should get a laugh from the most icy-faced patron.

"Felix Dines and Pines"

Educational—One Reel

RESOURCEFUL FELIX, the clever cartoon cat, wanders about and manages to get a full course dinner from punch to desert. How he does it is illustrated by a number of clever and amusing gags, making this one of the most enjoyable of the series, as he encounters quite a number of obstacles in so doing.

"In the Rough"

Pathe—One Reel

THIS TITLE OBVIOUSLY refers to golf and we see Farmer Al taking up the game with indifferent results. In an amusing manner, Cartoonist Paul Terry pictures the cats and mice getting the fever and tormenting Al, who finally buys an explosive ball with which he wrecks his house, a shower of mice falling on his head. A good number of the Aesop's Fable series.

"A Party Man"

Universal—One Reel

Mother-in-law, who has furnished the inspiration for so many jokes, also supplies the idea for this Blue Ribbon Comedy. Charles Puffy is shown running for office, but his mother-in-law's uncouth manners gets him in bad. He has the cafe raided to save himself when she invites everyone to a free feed, but lands in jail and finds she is his cell-mate. A moderately amusing slapstick comedy. Several of the gags are of a familiar type, the final situation is good for a laugh and there are some other good bits, especially where the old lady tries to flirt with the mayor. Elsie Tarron appears as the wife. Harry Sweet directed.

"The Heavy Date"

Educational—One Reel

THIS LIFE CARTOON shows Mike going to keep a date with his girl, Myrtle, while little Nibbins trails along with a bunch of friendly kittens. It is well up to the standard of the series. A clever gag shows Mike reaching a balcony by climbing on the cats. As this improvised ladder is too short, they bridge the distance by arching their backs.

"Tit For Tat"

Pathe—One Reel

HOW AN adventurous little kitten wandered away from home, made friends with a little birdie that was just learning to fly, and saved it from a hungry fox, and how the little birdie in turn saved the kitten by grabbing it as the fox was chasing it over ice cakes at the brink of a waterfall, furnishing the idea for this amusing Aesop's Fable cartoon which is executed in Paul Terry's best style with a number of laughable gags.

"Hitting the Trail"

Educational—One Reel

IN THIS LIFE CARTOON Comedy little Nibbins and his pet dog takes an adventurous trip "riding the rods" of a freight car. They chase an elusive rolling pancake all over the scenery and again board a train. A good gag shows the car being saved by a giraffe inside sticking his head out of a window and stopping a truck by posing as a crossing gate.

"Portugal Today"

Fox—786 Feet

A COMPREHENSIVE series of scenes picturing Portugal as it is today is offered in this Fox Variety. We are shown views of ancient buildings in the old section of Oporto in contrast with the modern part of the town, also picturesque views of farms, mountains, castles, etc., many of which are exceedingly beautiful. It is an interesting and instructive reel.

"He Couldn't Help It"

(F. B. O.—Two Reels)

As with the first two numbers, the third in the series of Charley Bowers Comedies proves generally amusing, the fun growing largely out of the remarkably ingenious trick effects used by Bowers. In this instance, he is shown as a vaudeville headliner who loses his dog and finds it disguised as a frankfurter. It again disappears and Charley tells his story in court when arrested for molesting people and finds his pet in a policeman's trouser leg. The manner in which frankfurters are gradually changed into poodles and daschunds and the antics of the poodle in washing its face and hands is exceedingly clever trick stuff.

"Pathe Review 8"

Pathe—One Reel

SCENES FROM a Japanese festival showing some of the celebrants clad in the quaint costumes of the ancient Samurai warriors furnishes the opening section of this Pathe Review. Then comes various views of Morro Castle and other ancient fortifications protecting Havana harbor. The third section is a novelty taken with the process camera picturing a nine-year-old acrobat doing stunts, the figure being shown in duplicate and triplicate.

"Car Shy"

(Fox—Two Reels)

An epidemic of thefts of automobiles furnishes the idea for this issue of the series of Van Bibber Comedies featuring Earle Foxe. Of course, the star is called on to capture the thieves and as usual, luck is with him and he accomplishes the task. There are a lot of good gags, including some clever new ones, the action is fast and it is one of the best of the series. Virginia Bradford appears as the girl in the case and Ralph Sipperly as the hero's pal. The finish where Van accidentally finds the thieves' hangout and after eluding them in a chase knocks down the bunch with a wild motorcycle is exceptionally good. Other good situations are where the thieves steal the patrol wagon and even a traveling court house.

"A Furry Tale"

Bray—One Reel

THE WIDE VARIETY of animals whose skins are used to make fur garments are pictured in their native haunts in this Bray Nature Special, such as the otter, mink, beaver, skunk, kangaroo, rabbit, chipmunk, squirrel, polar bear, mountain goats, and even the humble domestic cow, whose skin is fashionable at the present moment. Women should be especially interested in knowing where their coats come from.

"Flashing Oars"

(Universal—Two Reels)

The remarkable entertainment record and pep of the earlier numbers of "The Collegians" is kept up in Number 9, which shows Don Trent and Ed Benson as members of the college crew in the big race. Trent breaks training and collapses and Benson jumps in and leads the team to victory in an unusually exciting race. Wesley Ruggles has certainly directed this issue so that it is chock full of punch and finely sustained dramatic tension. Dorothy Gulliver as usual appears as the girl, with George Lewis as Benson and Eddie Phillips as Trent. Like the others in the series this should prove entertaining for all classes of patrons, especially the younger element and all who are familiar with school athletics and rivalry.

NOTES ABOUT WIDE-AWAKE EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGE MEN FROM ALL POINTS

Canada

RECENTLY J. M. Franklin, manager of B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, had one of the liveliest weeks of his busy career when he presented a home-talent feature, the Ottawa Follies, comprising 30 attractive young ladies, along with the regular bill which had the film "Jim the Conqueror." Manager Franklin conducted a popularity contest among the patrons for the young ladies of the chorus.

Phil. Kauffman was accorded a wonderful farewell at Toronto, Ontario, prior to his departure for Berlin, Germany, to become Central European manager of First National Pictures, after having been general manager of Regal Films, Limited, Toronto, for years. At a special banquet were His Honor, W. D. Ross, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Ontario; J. P. Bickell, N. L. Nathanson, managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corp.; Arthur Cohen, general manager of Regal Films, Limited, and many others.

Toronto, Ont.

After a business trip through Western Canada, Clair Hague, general manager of Canadian Universal Film Company, Limited, Toronto, is spending a month in the Southern States for a rest. During his absence, Canadian Universal is under the direction of Harry Kaufman who, incidentally, has been supervising various special engagements.

Because of the fact that Delaney, the light-heavy champion, is a French-Canadian, the picture of the Delaney-Maloney scrap at Madison Square Garden, New York, has aroused unusual attention in Eastern Canada. It was shown as an added feature at the Capitol Theatre, Montreal; Regent Theatre, Ottawa; Tivoli, Toronto; Capitol, Hamilton, and other leading houses immediately after the scrap.

Manager Ray Tubman of the Ottawa Regent and Manager Paquin of the Capitol Theatre, Hull, made a bid for the twin-city patronage of Ottawa and Hull during the weeks of February 21 and 28 with "The Kid Brother," starring Harold Lloyd.

R. Tubman, manager of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, has been offering some wonderful Saturday morning shows for children. On February 26, for instance, he combined several features from both the closing week and the new bill of the coming week for the children's matinee for ten cents. There was a jammed house.

The Publix Theatres Company, Limited, with headquarters at Toronto, Ontario, has been incorporated as a new Canadian Company under a Federal charter, according to announcement in the Canada Gazette on February 19. The stock of the company is of no par value, it is stated.

The deal of the United Artists for the Apollo theatre at Dearborn and Randolph streets in the heart of the theatre district of the city is for the Shubert lease on the house which has until 1941 to run and the ninety-nine year lease on the ground upon which the theatre stands from the McCormick estate at an annual ground rental of $90,000 for the first fifteen years and $120,000 for each of the remaining years on the lease, or an annual average rental of $115,454, giving the land a front foot value of $23,000 on Dearborn street and $19,242 on Randolph street. Frederick T. Hoyt represented both theatrical parties in the deal and Dennis J. O'Brien looked after the ground deal, which is one of the largest in recent years in movie circles in this city.

R. S. Peck's Experience Benefits Canadian Film

Raymond S. Peck is an official of the Canadian Government who is a moving picture man of wide experience. Born in Chatham, Ontario, he migrated to Detroit, Mich., where he engaged in the more or less exciting activities of a police reporter for a Detroit daily where he secured the foundation of knowledge that has stood him in good stead ever since. He became an automobile salesman and covered considerable territory in the Southern States. The moving picture field attracted his eye and he became associated with Canadian Universal at Toronto, Ontario, where he had charge of advertising and other features of the business. Mr. Peck subsequently transferred his allegiance to the Mutual Film Company and eventually was appointed manager of the Mutual branch exchange at Montreal, where he remained until the Mutual company faded out of the picture. He was editor of a Canadian regional film publication for a couple of years. Eight years ago he gained the appointment as director of the Motion Picture Bureau of the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, and he is now established as the directing head of a complete moving picture plant, releasing short subjects every week for distribution through both theatrical and non-theatrical markets throughout the world.

Mr. Peck has been an officer of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, is an officer of the Rotary Club of Ottawa and is a past president of Ottawa Community Orchestra.

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Butte, Mont., Mar. 3.*

FROM Billings, Montana, comes the word that probably what is known as the largest theatre deal in the history of the state was transacted Saturday, January 15, with the sale of the Babcock Theatre building to Hyme Lipsker, a merchant of Billings. L. C. Babcock, vice-president of the Midland National Bank, and his mother, Mrs. A. L. Babcock, were the chief stockholders of the Babcock Theatre Building Company in whose name the building stands. The big deal went through at a quarter of a million of dollars as well as improvements to the theatre building and to the theatre proper estimated at an additional $90,000.

Following the announcement of the sale of the Babcock Theatre, the lessees of the theatre, Eugene O'Keefe and Max Fregger, made known their plans for completely re-furnishing and re-equipping the theatre. They expect to spend approximately $40,000.

At last week's State Board of Arbitration meeting, consisting of W. J. Sullivan, manager of the Rialto Theatre; Jack Gavin, manager of the Liberty, Butte; E. Powell White, president of the M. P. T. O. A. in Montana, of Livingston, and in one or two cases "Buck" Wade served, local representative of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exchange. The case of Steve Roman, of Roman Theatre, Red Lodge, Montana, vs. Rex Flint, Rialto Theatre, Terry, Montana, continued for further evidence. United Artists Corporation vs. Wm. Heinicke, Judith Theatre, Lewistown, Montana. Awarded $350. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vs. C. E. Cenas, Happy Hour Theatre, Bear Creek, Montana. Continued for affidavits. Famous Players-Lasky vs. Elmer Pratt, Savage, Mont. Continued pending receipt of contracts. Famous Players-Lasky vs. Gus Smith, Glacier Park, Montana. Continued pending receipt of contracts. W. M. Hughart, local manager of Pathe, is the new president of the board. He is also president of the State Film Board.

Theatre men visiting in Butte the past week who were here to attend the National Wool Growers' Convention and incidentally to attend to a little theatre business, were, W. A. Simons, operating the Simons circuit in Missoula; E. Powers White of the Strand Theatre at Livingston and president of the State M. P. T. O. A.; Albert Nadeau of the Washoe Amusement Company of Anaconda, and Bud Hartwig of the Hartwig Theatre at Dillon.

Robert D. Boomer, formerly connected with the Universal local exchange as salesman, has resigned to accept the position of cashier with the local Pathe office. As a salesman he was well and favorably known to the trade all through Montana.

G. H. Warren, who was recently appointed feature sales manager in the local Pathe office, to take the place of Joe Solomon, who was promoted to the San Francisco office, is making an extensive sales drive all through the Treasure State in the interest of his specialties.

Butte is very much interested in the Saturday morning Juvenile Movies that is a feature of the Pacific Northwest Theatres' generosity in behalf of the kiddies of Butte. The fact that General Manager Harry Arthur, Jr., is back of the plan and that his managers of the American and the Rialto Theatres are giving the programs their hearty support is just one more reason why Butte is glad to have North American Theatres represented here.

Northwest

ACCORDING to J. Lloyd Dearth, general manager of Pantages theatres in the Pacific Northwest, the film contest operated in conjunction with Famous-Players and The Bell Line Stage Co., whereby the popular choice of the best boy or girl movie star of eighteen years or over, named by popular acclaim of audiences after acting before the camera and Klieg lights on Pantages stage, has resulted in the entry of more boys than girls, at the Seattle house. This is probably the first time such a condition has ever prevailed in a moving picture contest.

Jensen & VonHerberg are again extending their theatre activities in Seattle, in the suburban field, having purchased the Venetian Theatre from Sam Gargano. After a brief closing the house was reopened under the new management. This is the third link in a chain of city-wide suburban houses, according to LeRoy V. Johnson, vice-president and general manager of J. & V. interests here. The company also operates two houses in Ballard, with a third, the Bagdad, almost ready for its opening.

Oregon

Adverse censorship legislation has been introduced into the session of the Oregon state legislature, in a house bill proposed by Mark A. Paulson, Silverton, requiring censorship and licensing of every motion picture film shown in the state. The bill is in the hands of the judiciary committee.

The state legislature in Olympia, Wash., listened to a dramatic appeal by Senator Joe St. Peter, Snohomish County, and himself proprietor of an Everett motion picture theatre, who proposed on behalf of the M. P. T. O. of Washington, a bill making the manufacture, placing, complicity in, or guilty knowledge of so-called "stink" bombs, a felony, instead of a misdemeanor, carrying with it a more drastic penalty.

The senators appeal was so graphic that it all but made his brother senators weep when he informed them that "limburger cheese smells like a rose in comparison." They passed the bill unanimously. Exhibitors have sustained loss of patronage, damage to draperies, furnishings, etc., in flagrant violations of this ordinance.

Fifty motion picture owners of the state of Washington gathered at the Davenport Hotel, Spokane, for a regional meeting of Eastern Washington, Montana and Idaho exhibitors, in a one-day session, February 14th. H. W. Bruen, president; J. M. Hone, executive secretary-treasurer, both of Seattle; Will Starkey, vice president, Ray Grombacher, both of Spokane; F. W. Graham, Shelton; officers and trustees, were present. C. E. Swanson, of Everett, a member of the Film Arbitration Board, attended the meeting. The subject under discussion was "For the Good of the Exchanges and Exhibitors." Problems of the exhibitor were discussed at length in round table discussions. Secretary Hone spoke on Legislative problems confronting the industry, and presented a plan for the establishment of a fund for the combatting of such detrimental and unreasonable demands as rise from time to time. Ray Grombacher, of Spokane Theatres, Inc., announced plans for an "Exhibitor dance" now under way in Spokane, funds from which will be turned over to this proposed fund, promising his full support and enlisting the support of Eastern Washington exhibitors.

Spokane

Manager W. E. Freiday of the Clemmer Theatre, Spokane, is introducing an innovation in the form of "transfer matinees." Any patron who presents a transfer, between the hours of 10:45 and 1:00 will be admitted at a reduced admission.

La Grange Sunday Closing Vote Shows Strange Kink

La Grange, Ill., March 3.—The voters of La Grange, Ill., decided against Sunday movies by a vote of 2,091 against 1,138 for the Sunday shows. Gregory and Bernasek, who have the new La Grange Theatre, put up a hard fight with their friends, but were outnumbered two to one almost. There were frequent clashes at the polls by the supporters of both sides, and riot calls brought police to quell the disturbances. The strange part about the La Grange election was that the young people were opposed to Sunday movies, according to the newspaper reports, but the business men and commercial interests were for Sunday movies in the west side suburb.

DURING the week of March 5 to 12 a benefit program for the School for the Deaf will be presented in the Garrick Theatre, Minneapolis, in conjunction with the regular movie bill. The program is being sponsored by the Parent-Teachers' Association of the school and the funds will be used to purchase playground equipment for the school.

A start toward construction of the $2,000,000 theatre in Minneapolis, which has been leased to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for a total of $4,000,000 for 25 years by the Minneapolis Theatre Corporation, was made March 1 with the wrecking of the two-story building and oil station at the corner of Ninth street and LaSalle avenue.

Abe Fischer, who resigned recently as district manager for Warner Bros. with headquarters in Minneapolis, has been succeeded by C. E. Bond, district manager with offices in Chicago. The Minneapolis and Omaha branch offices will henceforth be under the supervision of the Chicago office. Mr. Fischer has gone to New York where he will probably establish other connections.

The Aster Theatre in Minneapolis, which has been closed for the past two or three months, has been reopened, and is announced as a "cut rate" house, with a 15-cent admission. Westerns and melodramas will be shown there.

Heron Lake

F. J. Wilson has purchased the Grand Theatre at Heron Lake, Minn.

Welcome

The Gem Theatre at Welcome, Minn., is being remodelled under the direction of its new owner, Will Kupeshka.

The F. B. O. office in Minneapolis announces the resignation of two of its salesmen, Frank Thayer and Frank Eisenberg.

M. L. Finkelstein of Finkelstein & Ruben is spending a short vacation in California with his wife.

Roy Meyers has been named manager of the Rex Theatre, a 10-cent house in the Minneapolis loop.

Every exhibitor who believes in his business will find information and entertainment in the Twentieth Anniversary number of Moving Picture World, out March 26.

Pennsylvania

VITAPHONE was first heard and seen in Pennsylvania, at a private showing for the trade given by the Harris Amusement Company in their J. P. Harris Theatre, Sunday night, February 20th. More than 500 persons were present in spite of the fact that the worst snowstorm in the history of the weather bureau was raging here. Among those present were: James F. Woodward, secretary of internal affairs; Mayor George M. Lysle, of McKeesport, members of the Chamber of Commerce and residents of Greensburg, Youngstown, Butler and Washington.

Roscoe

The Grand Theatre at Roscoe is a total wreck, following a cave-in of the roof caused by tons of snow collected during the snowstorm which swept the state recently. No one was in the structure when the roof collapsed. Damages were estimated at more than $7,000.

Present plans indicate that Loew's Penn Theatre, now being erected in Pittsburgh, will be opened to the public Monday, August 15th.

Harry E. Reiff, veteran local film man, has joined the Columbia Film Service, and is traveling the territory in the interests of the most recent release of Columbia's.

Ben Browarsky, of the Associated Theatres, Northside, is spending his annual rest period at Hot Springs, Ark., and is one of the first vacationists of the year. Ben has been absent for three weeks, and is expected back early in March.

Jack Weyrauch, former Film Rowite, for the past two years engaged in another business, is back in harness, and is taking care of all film and advertising shipments at the Tiffany exchange.

William Lipsie, of Blairsville, made one of his periodical trips to the local film exchanges the past week.

J. R. Wilson, general sales manager for Educational, spent a day here the past week.

Jack Rainey, manager of the Film Distributing Company, is back on the job feeling much improved in health, after having recently undergone an appendicitis operation.

Oklahoma

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Oklahoma City, Mar. 3.*

OKLAHOMA M. P. T. O. displaced L. W. Brophy as director of the association and Eph Johnson of Tulsa, was appointed in his place. Mr. Brophy had retired temporarily from the theatre business. Fred Pickrel of Ponca City and John Brown were appointed alternate members for the exhibitors.

Arkansas

The Arkansas M. P. T. O. has voted to help the Crippled Children's Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and will give free shows, and their time gratis.

Tecumseh

Dale Wilson has opened his Palace Theatre at Tecumseh, Okla.

Jackson Brothers are the new owners of the Art Theatre at Tulsa, Okla., succeeding Art Phillips who has been appointed publicity man for Majestic at Tulsa.

New York

Albany, N. Y., Mar. 4.

TWO employees at the Albany Pro-Dis-Co exchange are happy these days in having won a substantial amount of cash in the recent date drive. The two are Alec Herman, the manager, and Al Marchetti, the booker. In fact the office stood third in the entire United States in this drive, and by hard work on the part of Mr. Herman and his associates, the branch is now sixth in the country in general business. L. J. Hacking, of Boston, district manager, and "Chet" Sawin, also of Boston, district representative, were in town last week and congratulated Mr. Herman.

H. C. Bissell, who recently resigned as local manager for Universal, to accept a position as special representative for Tiffany, is back in Albany, having decided that he would prefer living in the eastern United States to accepting the management of the Kansas City exchange. William Sherry resigned last week as local manager for Bond, and has gone back to New York City.

C. H. Buckley donated the use of the Leland Theatre in Albany, last Sunday night, while the Universal exchange provided the pictures for the benefit that was given for one of the Jewish organizations of the city. The two shows were given during the evening and the theatre was crowded. A five cent increase on the regular admission charge was made for the occasion. This is the first time in many months that such a benefit has been given and some claim that it is paving the way for Sunday shows in Albany.

The Albany Film Board of Trade will shortly move and occupy offices on the third floor of the Mark Strand building. The Board has been occupying offices on the second floor since it was organized two or three years ago.

Kingston

Harry Lazarus, of Kingston, one time exhibitor in Albany, and who is now constructing a new theatre in the former city, was in town during the week, booking pictures. Mr. Lazarus can talk of nothing else but his new theatre, which he says will be the most beautiful in the Hudson River valley. It will open during the late spring.

Dave Seymour, recent manager of the Pontiac in Saranac Lake, is now at Palm Beach, and according to cards received last week by less fortunate friends, he is enjoying himself to the utmost.

Jacob Rosenthal, owner of the Rose in Troy, recently presented a beautiful silver loving cup as a prize to a large card party given in that city for the benefit of St. Patrick's Church. Mr. Rosenthal had the cup suitably inscribed as being presented by the Rose Theatre and the winner has now decided to present the cup to Father Merns, one of the best known Catholic priests in Troy. Mr. Rosenthal is very busy these days serving as treasurer in no less than three different drives.

Louis Saperstein, manager of the American Theatre in Troy, packed his theatre one night last week at the conclusion of the Merchants' Midwinter Carnival, at which time a king and queen were crowned.

Clayville

The Opera House in Clayville is to close from May 1 to September 1, according to advices just received on Albany's Film Row. The Men's Club at Chadwicks, at which pictures are also being shown, will be closed for a similar period.

Raymond Jacobs, operator of a theatre at Spencer, S. D., is planning to show pictures in the nearby town of Pukwana also.

Illinois

Chicago, Ill., Mar. 3.

WORK will start next month on the new movie theatre and commercial building for colored folks to be erected on the southeast corner of South Park Way and 46th Place. Phillip K. Schwartz is the head of the company who will build the new house and says that it will be leased to one of the big circuits here for a period of twenty-one years. Schwartz says the building will be financed by the colored people of the city and John Ebersson has drawn the plans for an imposing Moorish structure with a fine cafe in connection with the theatre.

Two young robbers were arrested by the police shortly after they had robbed the new Palace Theatre at Gary of $1,500. Manager Morris Hankinson and the ushers of the theatre were locked up by the robbers while they made their escape by automobile. The thieves were captured by Sheriff Forney of Valparaiso and his deputies and the young bandits confessed to the sheriff that they had robbed the Elmhurst Theatre besides the Palace Theatre and were implicated in several other recent theatre holdups.

Cicero

The Palace Theatre at Cicero, Ill., under the management of Gregory and Bernasek will open this month. The house seats 2,500 and with the equipment will cost about one million dollars. This is one of the finest theatres in the big west side suburb.

Springfield

It is expected that the new combination theatre at Springfield, Ill., which will seat about 3,000 will be ready for opening in April. The new theatre will be under Great States management it is reported.

The Ascher circuit have cut down on the number of houses in their chain, last week selling the leases on the Highland Theatre at 79th and Ashland avenue, the Colony Theatre at 59th and Kedzie avenue and the West Englewood Theatre at 63rd and Ashland avenue to the National Playhouses circuit, operated by J. J. and Ben Cooney. It is reported that the amount paid was in excess of two hundred dollars. The Ascher circuit have sold their lease on the Calo Theatre at Clark and Balmoral avenue to the Brunhild circuit.

Olney

Werner Hicks has joined the Phil Heydt circuit at Olney, Ill., as manager of one of the houses of that chain.

La Salle

H. C. Jarnagan, manager of the Strand Theatre, at Mendota, Ill., has bought the Colonial Theatre at LaSalle, Ill., and will change the name of the house to the Family Theatre. Harry Kelly, formerly manager of the Park Theatre, is the new manager of the Family Theatre for Jarnagan.

E. B. Baurock, R. Abrahams and Sidney Oppenheim have organized the Chester Productions, Inc., with a capital of $20,000 and offices at 624 South Michigan avenue, where they buy, sell and manufacture films for the trade in the western territory.

Edward P. Kennell has been transferred from the Orpheum Theatre at Kansas City to the Tower Theatre, Chicago, and will act as assistant to Manager George Burdick of that theatre.

The Eagle Theatre has opened for business at Galena, Ill., and is showing an exclusive picture program to their patrons.

The Chicago Exhibitors plan to help open the new Stevens Hotel, one of the largest in the world, with their annual movie frolic and ball on May 4. Ludwig Segal is chairman of the committee that has the big affair in charge for the exhibitors of the Chicago district.

Michigan

Detroit, Mich., Mar. 3.

WITH Detroit suffering from a temporary industrial lull, an epidemic of robberies and holdups has set in and the motion picture business has by no means escaped. The second theatre robbery within the past ten days took place at the Piccadilly Theatre when the cashier was ordered to hand over a bag containing the evening's receipts, amounting to $300.

W. B. Collins, office manager of First National and S. D. Chapman, city salesman for the same concern, have won trips to Hollywood as members of the F. N. K. O. Club. They will take advantage of their prize by leaving here May 20 for a three weeks' sojourn.

Henry S. Koppin, who operates a string of 30 theatres in Michigan, will have at least two big new houses by midsummer, as that many are now under construction. One of them is the new Million Dollar Theatre at Gratiot and the Six Mile Road and the other is in Wayne, a suburb of Detroit.

The new Keith-Albee Uptown Theatre, will be opened Monday, March 7. Invitations have been issued to more than 1,000. The new house is situated at Woodward avenue and the Six Mile Road and will play a combination of vaudeville and pictures.

A. J. Moeller, president of the American Cinema Association who returned last week from a tour of the middle west and south-west, brings back word of a highly receptive attitude among exhibitors toward high class short subjects.

Florida trips have been taken by W. S. Butterfield, head of the Bijou Theatrical Interests and George W. Trendle, general manager of the John H. Kunsky Enterprises. Both expect to return about the middle of March.

North Dakota

The State Theatre at Minot, N. D., a Finkelstein & Ruben house, has announced a reduction in admission charges, and there is some fear that a price war may result, as competition is unusually keen in this town of 12,000. The State is the only F. & R. theatre in town, but it has as its competitors the Orpheum, Strand and Arcade. The new admission scale provides lower prices for adults and children and special bargain hours.

The Rex theatre circuit has been sold by Don I. Tracy to Cecil R. Baker of Carrington, N. D. The circuit is composed of houses in McClusky, Dogden, Bowdon and Mercer, N. D.

The motion picture theatre at Kulm, N. D., has been taken over by V. C. and S. K. Lewis who will operate it on a 10-cent basis.

Four in Chicago

The Vitaphone is now being shown at four theatres in Chicago, the Woods and the Orpheum in the Loop and the Capital Theatre of the Cooney circuit on the south side and the North Center Theatre of the Karzas circuit.

Proctor Wants House

It is said that Proctor interests in Albany are endeavoring to secure a lease of the huge auditorium which will be a part of the Masonic Temple that will be erected during the coming spring and summer in the capital city. Other interests are also dickering for the auditorium, but it is now said that it will not be leased.

Jake Golden, manager of the Griswold in Troy, is now looking after the newspaper advertising of all Proctor houses in Troy, Albany and Schenectady and is on the jump from nine o'clock in the morning until midnight each day.

San Francisco

TORRENTIAL rains have fallen in many places in California, with a considerable property loss reported, although but little damage has been sustained by moving picture theatres in this district. The losses to exhibitors have been largely a falling off in patronage and the result of the non-arrival of film, owing to traffic tieups. Coming on top of a series of dry years the storm has proved of immense value to agricultural interests and already a better feeling is being noted in many sections. Exhibitors are now looking forward to a record-breaking year as a result of improved conditions.

The most serious losses to theatre owners as a result of the storm were in the southern part of the State where people disappear from beaches in summer and go to the theatre in rowboats in the winter, and in the extreme northern section, where both rail and highway traffic was suspended for a time.

The Riveria Theatre on Haight street, near Fillmore, is nearing completion and will be formally opened at an early date under the direction of the Golden State Theatre & Realty Corp.

Residents of the Mission District who have no radio sets were able to hear the address of President Coolidge by attending the New Mission Theatre, where a radio community party was enjoyed. The theatre was opened to the public at 8:45 and no admission was charged.

Mrs. Walter McGinn, now associated with the Allied Amusement Industries of Northern California, is representing this organization on several committees, including the publicity committee of the Oakland Business and Professional Woman's Club, the Art League of Oakland and the Oakland Civic Grand Opera Company.

Mrs. Harry C. Oastler, of Winnemucca, Nev., was a recent visitor at San Francisco, coming to select an organ and furnishings for the theatre being erected at Lovelock, Nevada.

Joel C. Cohen, president of the Consolidated Amusement Company, of Honolulu, T. H., but now a permanent resident of San Francisco, is preparing to make a trip to the southern part of the State to study the studio situation.

W. W. Kofeldt, president, and Ernest Gluckauf, vice-president, of the Imported Pictures Corporation, whose headquarters are at San Francisco, left recently on a business trip to Los Angeles.

G. E. Schroth has been made manager of the San Francisco interests of the Jam Handy Picture Service, of which Harry W. Oviatt is Pacific Coast manager.

V. Preston, booker for Associated First National, co-operated with exhibitors in a manner that was much appreciated during the recent storm. Arrangements were made whereby films were sent out earlier than usual to exhibitors in the mountain districts and many were enabled to present shows that could not have been given had films been shipped at the usual time.

Maurice F. Lowery, salesman for United Artists, has been given a greatly enlarged territory and now covers the field from Bakersfield, Cal., to Klamath Falls, Ore.

Berkeley

A group of residents and business men of the Ashby District have formed a corporation for the erection of a 1,500-seat theatre at Ashby avenue and Adeline street. Construction will be commenced by June 1.

Kansas City, Mo.

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Kansas City, Mo., Mar. 3.*

THERE is a hub-bub of interest along Kansas City's movie row concerning the proposed Movie Dance, to be given for everybody in the city connected with the industry. Thus far no definite date or place of the dance has been announced.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market this week were: G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kan.; J. R. Burford, Arkansas City, Kan.; L. Bruenninger, Topeka, Kan.; Ed Peskay, Penn Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.; Frank Cassell, Sedalia, Mo.; W. P. Cuff, Chanute, Kan.; O. K. Mason, Newton, Kan.; Frank Weary, Farris Theatre, Richmond, Mo.; Ray McGuire, Darlington, Mo.; Glenn Dickinson, Dickinson Circuit, Lawrence, Kan.; "Curley" Wilson, Excelsior Springs, Mo.; S. E. Wilhoit, Electric, Springfield, Mo.

W. P. Bernfield, manager of the new Tiffany exchange in Kansas City, returned from his first road trip this week with the report that "business was good." Harry Taylor, Universal branch manager, contends that the only uncertain phase concerning the trip to Europe, which Carl Laemmle is offering his branch managers with the best records, and him is the date of sailing. H. L. McElhinney has succeeded Louis Kaye as Southern Kansas representative for Warner Bros. J. S. Jossey, general sales manager of Enterprise Film Corp., was a Kansas City visitor, as was Tal Richards, Artic Nu Air representative in Oklahoma City. A. A. Renfro, former city representative in Kansas City for Pathe, who has been made branch manager for that company in Oklahoma, has received the congratulations of Kansas City film row.

C. A. Schultz, P.D.C. branch manager, held a screening for out-of-town exhibitors Wednesday on "Getting Gertie's Garter," Jack Ausley has been promoted to city representative for the Pathe branch, succeeding A. A. Renfro, who went to Oklahoma City. J. R. Wilson, sales manager for Educational, was a Kansas City visitor, as was Earl Wachter, former Fox branch manager who no longer is connected with the industry.

HUNDREDS of persons attended the opening of the Ritz, the new neighborhood motion picture house, Thirty-fourth and Illinois streets, this week. Several features new to houses of the Middle West were included in the construction, such as a men's glass-enclosed smoking room, and a "cry" room. The theatre, which is operated by the Markum Theatre Circuit, will give continuous shows from 2:30 to 11 p. m. daily.

The Colonial Theatre which has been operated for eleven years under the active management of Bingham & Cohen has gone into receivership. William T. Rasmussen was appointed receiver of the Indianapolis Amusement Company which operates the theatre. When asked concerning the future policy of the house, Rasmussen said that he believed the present program of feature photoplays and musical comedy attractions would be continued.

The Uptown Theatre, of which Robert G. Hesseldenz is resident manager, recently observed "Musicians' Opportunity Week." Daily contests were held at the theatre; gold pieces and passes were given as prizes.

The east side will have a new neighborhood house in the erection of a theatre building at 5539 East Washington street.

Cincinnati, O.

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Hamilton, O., Mar. 3.*

S. C. JACQUES, manager Pathe Exchange, Cincinnati, has been promoted to position of sales manager for the central territory. No successor has been named. Jacques will have headquarters in New York.

Dayton, Ohio, is to have a new theatre at Third and Clammer streets, while work has been started on another house at Williams and Fifth streets.

Manager Ike Libson, of the Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati, is holding "It" over for a second week. Record business for the first seven days.

Mansfield

Manager Harry Brown, of the Opera House, Mansfield, Ohio, reports that all previous attendance records were broken at recent showing of "Ben Hur."

Dry Ridge, Ky.

Ideal Opera House, Dry Ridge, Ky., just south of Cincinnati, was burned to ground in a fire which virtually wiped out the town.

Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, Turberg and Silvers, managers, played "Happy" Lawson and his wife, radio artists, as an extra attraction recently which increased the box office takings considerably.

Follensbee

A. G. Constant reports that he is having a new movie house built at Follensbee, Ohio, in which Carl Browdy will be installed as manager.

Brewster

W. J. Van Ryzin has been appointed manager of a new 400-seat house which was recently opened at Brewster, Ohio.

Manager Andy Anderson, of the Loew Theatre, at Dayton, Ohio, was recently host to some 200 wards of the Children's Home at a special preview. At about the same time Millard Blaettner, who wears the managerial mantle at Keith's Colonial, Dayton, entertained 150 newsboys at his house for the evening show.

Mt. Gilead

The Kaypee Theatre, Mt. Gilead, Ohio, which is presided over by Griff. Granger, has designated Wednesday night of each week as "Golden Gift Night," when $15 in gold is given away to holders of the lucky coupons which are given with admission tickets. At Mansfield, Ohio, the management of the Majestic Theatre is giving a bag of candy to each youngster attending the Saturday matinee.

Canton

A number of prominent exhibitors from Southern Ohio were on hand at Canton, Ohio, to attend the opening exercises of the new Loew Theatre which took place on February 19.

The Mozart, Canton, Ohio, has reduced its admission prices to 15 cents for matinees and 25 cents for evening performances. The programs have likewise been reduced in size, and the policy changed from a full to a split week.

Hamilton

John Schwalm, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, recently played Ford and Glenn, radio entertainers from Station WLW, Cincinnati, for a four-day engagement on which he did a turn-away business.

The Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, Turberg and Silver, managers, held a style revue with local models in connection with a recent showing of "Blonde or Brunette."

House Organ For Three Theatres Beats Holdout of the Single Daily Newspaper

HOWARD LICHEY, publicity man for the Tri-State Amusement Company, of Steubenville, Ohio, sends in the first ten issues of the Tri-State News, which he is getting out in the interests of the Capitol, Olympic and Strand Theatres, and writes that this tabloid sized newspaper has done much to solve the problem of getting the shows over. Just to show what a house organ can do, if it is the proper sort of a sheet, he cites the fact that seventy-five per cent of the seats for Ben Hur were sold one week before the box office sale was opened, and before any advertising had been done in the regular newspaper.

The paper was started originally because it was not possible to induce the editor of the local sheet to give adequate mention of coming attractions. An occasional mention was given, but there was no way of getting over the general news, since the editor refused to run a photoplay department.

A form slightly larger than the usual tabloid was decided upon, with a page 11 by 18 inches, and so far the issue has not run above eight pages. It is distributed by mail and an edition of 10,000 is the usual run. To meet this cost, the daily newspaper space was reduced, but now a large proportion of the expense is met through the sale of space to merchant advertisers. In ten issues this space has grown from nothing to a total of 164 column inches, or a trifle more than two pages. Practically all of the original advertisers are still with the sheet, and some have increased their earlier spaces.

The text is almost wholly concerned with the coming attractions at the three theatres, but lately he has started to build this up with a little general stuff, and has been running cross word puzzles. Prizes were offered for the best solutions, and the entire staff of one of the theatres had to turn to and handle the replies, so many came in.

We believe that with a little local mention, and the present well written editorial column

he will be able to make the News something that will give the local paper a close run.

It seems to be doing that already, for the newspaper is now conducting a photoplay department; the first it has had for a number of years. Other things being equal, it would be considered that the News has accomplished its aim, but the tabloid has gone so far beyond the newspaper, and has proven so fine a sales agency that it will be continued, with the newspaper advertising cut to a minimum.

Of course such a paper must be kept up to standard if it is to endure, and it should continue to improve if progress is to be made, but the first ten issues show steady gain in readability, and we think that Mr. Lichey is on the right track. When a house organ can dispose of a majority of tickets at advanced prices before the sale, it is too good to be abandoned, merely because it served its original purpose.

But it is useless to start such a sheet unless it can be made readable, and this is possible only where the editor has enthusiasm as well as ability. It's not the fact that you are getting out a paper that counts, but the fact that you are getting out a good paper.

Don't start one unless you can make it thoroughly readable. Don't count on merely cutting and pasting. The press books and trade journals will give you the material.

How Far Can a Man Walk If He Walks Six Blocks?

Here's something off the beaten track.

When T. Y. Walker, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., started in to put over Tell It to the Marines, he announced that he would have an impersonator of Lon Chaney walk up and down a three block stretch for six hours. He invited the town to figure out how far he would walk.

You could do a little experimenting in advance if you wanted to, over the same route, you could work it out on paper or in your head or base your estimate on any other formula. More than 300 persons filled in the estimate blanks provided by Mr. Walker, but that represents only a fraction of the interest, for hundreds looked on while the man did his parade and side bets were freely made, particularly in the early hours.

Most estimators made the mistake of figuring that if the men could make a round trip in so many minutes, he could make a given number of trips in six hours. They did not figure in the natural slowing down from fatigue toward the end of the march, so most of the estimates went considerably over the mark.

As everyone watched the man, and the man carried front and back signs, they all learned about "Tell It to the Marines" which was what Mr. Walker was after.

Barbers Helped

Frank J. Miller had no trouble getting into the barber shops to advertise Johnny Get Your Hair Cut at the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga. All of the big shops gave him still frame space and handed out heralds as well as talking it up to the helpless patrons. No special effort seems to have been made toward tying up the juvenile trade, but this should prove an excellent angle.

With a well decorated lobby, Mr. Miller did a better business with the pictorial history of Jackie's first real haircut.

A FLORAL BANNER FOR AN INVITATION SHOWING OF THE SCARLET LETTER IN TORONTO

The Regent Theatre staged a preview to get letters of approval and Laurence F. Stuart, the manager, arranged this very ornamental display for the foyer. For the house front he used a gigantic scarlet A, surmounted by a tragic mask. It will be noted that the house sign also carried a red A in the electric letters. This is very effective.

Dewey D. Bloom was the exploitation man.

Original General Helped Buster in Chattanooga

Historic Old Engine Helped Keaton Comedy

E. R. Rogers developed a "natural" when he was given The General at the Tivoli theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn. He had the real thing to work with.

The press book explanation that the comedy is based on an actual happening in the Civil War is not a fiction of the press agent. There really was such an engine and it figured in much the same sort of happenings, minus the comedy, as are shown in the Keaton comedy. At the close of the war it was carefully preserved and is now the property of the N. C. & St. L. R. R., which keeps it parked at the Union Station in Chattanooga. It is seen each year by thousands who come to see the historic battlefields, and is to Chattanooga what the gilded codfish in the State House is to Bostonians.

Mr. Rogers not only persuaded the road to permit him to hang a banner above the old locomotive, but he gave them 5,000 stickers and as many blotters.

The stickers were used on all local and nearby mail, carrying a picture of the General and "See the General in action at the Tivoli." The blotters were used for enclosure and showed the same cut with "We're in the movies now."

Mr. Rogers also used the "extra" idea, but printed only one side of a single sheet. One of his best bets was an elaborate lobby decoration of Confederate flags.

Essays on Greta

To interest in "The Flesh and the Devil," Charles H. Amos, of the Florida Theatre, St. Petersburg, offered several prizes for the best 250-word essay on the question as to whether a woman could remain true to her fiance during a five years' separation. The story of the picture was related to give the contestants an idea as to what it was it was all about, and it made fine advertising for the picture.

Instead of going to the newspaper, Mr. Amos put the stunt over very successfully through his house organ.

THE REAL "GENERAL" ADVERTISES ITS NAMESAKE

Warned Against Duels At Newburgh Theatre

Charles R. Hammerslough collected extra money for the Broadway Theatre, Newburgh, N. Y., when he broadcast warnings against dueling and the caution that the fact that the fight was in defense of a woman's honor was no legal excuse. The warning was directed particularly against the Broadway Theatre, and the dates named were those set for "The Flesh and the Devil."

Mr. Hammerslough got a local station to announce that this was the only picture ever held at the Capitol Theatre, New York, for longer than two weeks, and also played this up in his newspaper spaces.

He also took extra space for a display ad showing the roles in which John Gilbert had been seen at the Broadway to pay the newspaper for running an essay contest on "My favorite John Gilbert role."

Works Ambulance Stunt With All the Trimmings

W. S. Perutz, of the Lincoln Theatre, Lincoln, Neb., worked the ambulance gag on The Kid Brother and did it in a way to get the most publicity out of it.

He planted a man well down front at a matinee, and presently the man became hysterical in his glee. Two ushers went to get him out of his seat, but between laughs he protested he wanted to see the picture through and a third usher had to be called before they could get him up the aisle. Meanwhile the ambulance had been summoned and the man was helped into the bus and taken to the hospital for first aid.

The stunt cost six passes for the ambulance men, four for the doctors and a dollar for the plant.

In addition to full stories in all the newspapers, the hundred or more persons who were watching the early show went out and broadcast the news.

It helped to keep capacity business for an entire week.

This is a much better way of working the stunt than taking the man out of the empty house, and if you have an early opening, it can be done without inconveniencing the small audience and, anyhow, they won't blame you if you plant the story properly.

Talking Tie Up

Because the local Victor agency had one of the orthophonics used at the Sesqui, the Plaza theatre, Asheville, N. C., did a better business than usual on the Silent Lover.

John Hannon put it into the house as an added attraction, playing a fifteen or twenty minute turn at each show, and the agency took a full page to advertise the attraction the Sunday before the opening.

The machine was shown to better advantage than was possible at the agency, was dignified through its theatrical connection, and sold a number of new models.

There seems to be no strong connection between a silent lover and a talking machine, but perhaps they averaged up.

ONE OF ROY SMART'S WINDOWS ON BLONDE OR BRUNETTE

When the picture came to the Rivoli Theatre, Greenville, S. C., an unusually good campaign was planned. This store window shows a blonde and brunette dummy with a huge red question mark between the two, and two cards.

Used a Local Invention to Gain Local Interes

TRUCK BANNERS SUPPLEMENTED BY FOLIAGE IN GREELEY

G. E. Stewart, of the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Col., borrowed a truck from the Ford agency and paid for it with a back sign. A few evergreens were better than cutout lithographs for Man of the Forest, and business was better.

A Local Invention Was Strong Lobby Attractor

One of the best attractors Warren Irvin ever put in his lobby was a new style of card display machine invented by a local man and given its first real tryout in the lobby of the Imperial theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

Irwin saw it in the window of the Chamber of Commerce and got the loan of the machine. Naturally local pride had something to do with the appeal, but the idea itself is good.

It is an enclosed wheel which carries eight advertising cards, which in this instance were stills on The Flesh and the Devil. The cards are lighted by lamps within the box, and like any moving display will get attention through motion alone.

Careful observation showed that very few persons passed on until they had seen the complete set of stills, so that nine distinct impressions were made, since the picture first seen was seen again.

The inventor had made no approach to the theatre, but Irwin was quick to perceive its value, and his prompt action gave him a fine extra business on The Flesh and the Devil.

Perambulator Attracted

Even a sandwich man can be made an attraction if sandwich men are not familiar. John Judge, of the Victoria theatre, New Smyrna, Fla., used a man with a back sign for The Black Pirate and he proved considerable of an attraction. A cutout six sheet was sent over the routes, including the feeder villages, and two ship models were planted in store windows, all of which helped to raise business.

Sample Paint

One of the stunts for War Paint at the Temple theatre, Birmingham, Ala., was a man in full Indian war dress who perambulated the streets handing out samples of face powder to the women. The envelopes bore the lines: "Girls! Here is a sample of War Paint. Try it out and then go to the Temple theatre to see War Paint." Five thousand samples were given out.

Made News Reel Feature His Primary Sales Agent

Because the Pathe News carried a number of scenes showing the citizens of Augusta, Ga., shaking hands with Ty Cobb to show what they thought of him and also of the charges brought against him, Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska theatre in that city, blew up the Pathe News above his feature picture. A banner ran the entire front of the marquee and at selling times the line ran way down the street.

That doesn't mean that Mr. Miller neglected his feature, however. This was Whispering Wires and he placed a telephone on a table in the lobby with hidden connection to the box office so that the cashier could ring the bell when she was not busy selling tickets. Even when she was, she found time to give the bottom a push now and then.

The picture helped to entertain the crowd, but they mostly came to see themselves and their fellow townsmen. You can't beat the local appeal for a ticket seller, and this beat the purely local reel in that it was from the national issue and not a house stunt.

Made Scarlet Letters Familiar in Newburgh

Charles R. Hammerslough, of the Broadway theatre, Newburgh, N. Y., made a concentrated drive on The Scarlet Letter for a week before the showing.

He used stickers on the Sunday papers the day before the opening, and for a week before that he had boys with red chalk going around town and chalking red A's wherever they could without defacing property. They were told to lay off houses but that sidewalks, ash barrels and unpainted fences were their very own. They used a lot of chalk, with the result that everyone knew of the red A.

Backing this up, he put out 3,000 enveloped cards in a house to house distribution three days in advance. The outside copy was the red letter with "The brand of shame." Inside was a modified summons to come and testify whether or not it is a sin to love and whether the woman should be branded with the scarlet letter.

Gave Reductions

Playing on the title of God Gave Me Twenty Cents, G. R. Stewart, of the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Colo., put out envelopes with the title and "Did you get yours? Look inside."

Two sets of cards were used, one sort merely advertising the picture. The others were good for a twenty cent reduction on a ticket, and most of these were brought back to the box office.

Just another form of the half price ticket, but appropriate, and so better than usual.

Remember the days when the Bill Hart press books all started off with "secure an old stage coach and drive it around town"? There were not many stage coaches to be had, so eventually the standing item was dropped. But Hugh J. Smart must have remembered because he dug up an old coach when The Overland Stage came to the Strand theatre, Montgomery, Ala.

BANNED TRUCKS ARE BETTER THAN TROLLEY CARS

They go up the side street, too. E. R. Rogers, of the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, used a set of furniture trucks for Valencia with very good results. They kept the panels up for ten days and needed little else to sell.

Made a Paradise For Two in a Furniture Window

Novel Contest Basis Of Strogoff Special

Something new in cooperative pages comes from Utica, N. Y., where the Majestic theatre got a special page through the use of a contest interestingly presented.

The page was laid out in imitation of the pictorial maps current a couple of centuries ago and recently revived. This was cut into by twelve merchant spaces.

As explained in the theatre cover space, a young woman was supposed to start from home to see Michael Strogoff at the Majestic. As the performance was continuous, she stopped to shop at the twelve stores, each store being pictured on the map beside its advertisement.

Each advertisement contained a headline with one or more capital letters, and a month's pass was offered the contestant who formed the largest number of words from these letters, using each only as many times as it was found in the spaces. This assured the advertisers that each space would be carefully read. There were two lesser prizes for the next best lists and ten single ticket prizes.

To provide sufficient letters, some of the lines carried extra capitals.

This idea carries some art work and costs more than the straight cooperative space, but if it is difficult to get merchants to come in, the cost will be worth while if it gets you the cooperation.

Foreign Language Drive Helps Michael Strogoff

Putting over Michael Strogoff for the Lafayette theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., Andrew Sharick, of Universal, made a special drive on two Polish language newspapers.

In the "Telegram" which has a circulation around 25,000, he ran a contest which was good for ten days and brought space by the page. This was advertised by a distribution of 4,000 heralds in the Polish districts. Another Polish paper was glad to give a full page of story and art work, and a large banner was stretched across the shopping street in the heart of the Polish centre. With a Polish population of 200,000 the effort was felt to be worth while, and this proved to be correct.

A KNOCKOUT WINDOW FOR THE FLAMING FRONTIER

Tickets covered the use of profusely illustrated stories in Italian and German language papers. They were glad to get the cuts. Other stories were arranged for in the religious press.

Miss Becker, of the Public Library, dug out the fact that there actually was a Michael Strogoff, whose real name was Migail Skeboloff, and this was good for a special story in the regular papers. The discovery was made while Sharick was arranging for library cooperation and book markers.

An Oriental store contributed a window, profusely decorated with its best rugs, in which a Turk squatted and pulled away at a water pipe all day, thinking Allah and the Prophet that his lines had fallen in such pleasant places for a time.

Letters to all school teachers, a dozen window displays and a strong general campaign drove in much business in excess of the regular patronage.

Demonstrated Paradise Built Up the Business

One of the best bets on Paradise for Two in Augusta, Ga., was a hook in to a furniture store. Frank J. Miller persuaded the store to fit up a window with its best furniture and the suggestion that this room would be a paradise for two.

The set was so attractive that it not only drew a crowd, but made talk for the picture, and there was plenty of photographic material in the window to help make the talk.

The result was that business was in the ascendant for the three day run, since the picture made good for the attention it attracted. A notable feature of the display was the number of young couples who parked in front of the display, presumably with the idea of getting notes for future use.

In addition to this window, Mr. Miller got stills in a number of other stores, did much with a distribution of heralds and used the customary billboard and newspaper campaign.

ON THE OUTSIDE LOOKING IN AND ON THE INSIDE LOOKING IN AT THE GRAND KAHN

Two shots of a window in an oriental goods store in Buffalo dressed for the showing of Michael Strogoff at the Lafayette Theatre. Cards tell that this is the tent of the Grand Kahn, as shown in the picture, and the information is added that the store sells the same fine rugs as are used in the splendid scenes in the picture.

A Reverse Strip Too Small To Be Good Selling

This Inline Letter Is a Strong Title

The best part of this display for Michael Strogoff from the Cameo Theatre, Pittsburgh, is the title. The house artist seems to have a mad passion for trick stuff, but in this instance he helps rather than hurts with the narrow inline. Reducing down will probably lose some of the effect, but in the two column space this narrow line is effective in that it lightens the heavy black without sacrificing the legibility, as is too often the case with streaked or broken letters.

A FANCY INLINE TITLE

As the picture is in its second week, it does not so much matter that the bank of hand lettering just below is a total loss. It is both too small and too irregular and white space would have been much better, since the text means nothing, but there was need for something about The Collegians and here at least a six point type face was called for, in place of which we get more of the hand lettered abomination. It is not only a waste of space. It is a waste of opportunity.

Cartoon Sketch Is a Tin Hat Salesman

We do not recall anything in Tin Hats that will fit this sketch from the advertisement of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, but outside the display of underwear it is cleverly done and will suggest the comedy angle. By far the best line is found between the girl's legs. In case you cannot read it it runs: "Metro made it—perfectly."

The sketch is largely trusted to sell the comedy idea, though there is a three-line description of the play at the top and the statement below the doughboys that this is a war play in which no a shot is fired. This bia Theatre, Washington, D. C., but it is a nice example of orderly presentation using a plan book cut. The cut itself sells the details of producer, author and star, and the story is put over in seven lines of leaded eight point at the bottom.

Most of these Washington spaces follow the same general idea of supplementing the cut with talk of the play, and the Loew audiences come to look on the space as informative. They do not have to turn over to the news columns to see what it is all about. They get the full sales details from the house space. This is a seven-inch space across two columns, and it does a complete job of selling.

Narrow Reverse Has Small Display Value

In the reproduction this three tens from the Valentine Theatre, Toledo, looks better than in the original space. The black will give it a much stronger showing than in the original dull tone of the newspaper page, where white is nearly grey and the blacks approach the same tone. But even here it is apparent that the reverse strip was not a great success.

should she yield to save her lover's life?

A STINGY REVERSE

There is so little black to this reverse that the white letters are not given the prominence that the reverse is supposed to yield. The letters are too close to the edge of the strip. This is more of an attractor than a star name.

Probably most readers know Mae Murray and will figure out the name without deep study, but this is not a very successful experiment in reverse handling.

The sales copy is rather poor. The "O how she dances" is reminiscent of Ralph Ruffner's "How she can dance!" originally applied to The Idol Dancer. The rest reads: "She loves a sailor and a governor desired her. Should she yield to save her lover's life?"

That, to put it mildly, has been used before. We think that stress on the star and the beauty of the production would have been stronger sales factors.

Much of the selling was done with the cut, which does not come out very well, but which does suggest a pretty girl. There is also a good line in "It's a REAL Metro," which is lost through the use of too small a face. That line should be worth a twelve point, at least.

Crops a Cut to Get This Useful Single

This display from the Cameraphone Theatre, Pittsburgh, seems to be based on a cut reduced from a larger size. It makes a fine attractor for a single column space and gets the announcement over in four singles, the cut being the same size as the original.

The SCARLET LETTER

ONE OF THE WORLD'S GREATEST LOVE STORIES BY NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE

A WELL LAID SINGLE

Not all single column press book cuts can be cropped to as good advantage, but most of them can be utilized with a little cutting to make the basis of a three or four inch display that should be more attractive than all type. Most houses using singles get the film second run, and the selling has been done in the instance of notable attractions, so that little need be done other than to announce the booking of the picture. Taking The Scarlet Letter from the downtown houses, the Cameraphone has done all that is necessary.

A Splendid Bally

Something different always sells, and for The Greater Glory L. Y. Guyer, of the Queen Theatre, Austin, Texas, achieved something really new.

He used a cutout with a semi-circular space in front, outlined by sandbags, in which was placed a machine gun. Twice a day a bugler sounded calls until a crowd had been attracted and then a member of the local gun company took down and reassembled the mechanism while blindfolded. It not only drew large crowds but carried both newspaper and verbal mention.

This Reverse Serves to Sell the Panels

This double space from Cleveland serves to sell Bardeleys the Magnificent to two sets of patrons. Generally the same picture is shown at three houses, but one is dropped on this engagement. This is notable chiefly because of the fact that the reverse is made to serve a proper purpose.

INTELLIGENT REVERSE

The star and title are lettered into the reverse strip in letters so large that even poor printing cannot fade them out. You do not get "the magnificent" very clearly, but you do get Gilbert and Bardeleys in an unmistakable letter. But instead of trying to get the sales talk into the reverse, where it would have been hopelessly lost, the cut is mortised to let in a panel of type, and upper and lower case, at that. This seems to have been set up and pasted onto the cut copy, making a solid cut, which is better and generally cheaper than mortise and type inset. It is nice work.

Cartoon Drawings Are Best For Comedy Sale

Metro's advertising department has turned out the usual set of comedy pictures for Buster Keaton in The General, knowing that comedy sketches make the best attractor. This space from Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, gives an idea of how they show up. This display is a three tens.

The art departments of other companies might learn something from a glance at this sketch. There is very little background. The figure of Buster on a bombshell, riding with the ever necessary papers, is backed by a shell burst carrying the star and title. That's all there is, and it is many times more prominent than these factors would have been had they been worked up with a wealth of detail showing the old engine, a battle field, two or three regiments and the like.

A COMEDY KEATON

This cartoon smashes home. It suggests comedy the instant you see it. You do not have to stop and figure out what it is all about, wading through rivers of ink. It's all there the first glance. The sale is completed by a pair of type banks and mention of a shorter comedy.

This is capital selling. It might not work in a very small town where the rural reader has all evening to spend with the four or eight page county paper, but in a majority of instances this compact style is much more effective and will sell more tickets to outsiders. That's the real test of the value of any newspaper display. It's good if it sells tickets to the man who had not intended to come, but who is persuaded by the advertisement.

Every advertisement has two factors: the material supplied by the producer and the use made of it by the local management. The best displays in the press book may be spoiled by the local manager. Here the Valentine agent has carried on. He has done his work well.

Made a Laemmle Day

Fred S. Meyer, of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, one of the Universal houses, offered the courtesies of the house to all persons born the same day as Carl Laemmle. Quite a number responded, their ages ranging from 10 to 71, and their names were taken that they may be sent a pass on each recurrent birthday.

All four daily papers carried long stories, and purely as an exploitation stunt the idea was a success. It was even better in giving the human touch.

Fred's a long way from Hamilton, Ohio, but he is still clicking.

Length—5,597 Feet.

Capt. Dan Kirby marries Maria D'Alvarez in South America and brings her to New York. The first day he is injured by an auto and taken, unknown, to a private hospital. Marie, searching for him is abducted by jewel thieves. Befriended by Sally Ray, who comes to love him, she lets Maria think he is false, but the situation unravels at last. Polite and plausible melodrama.

NO customer can complain of a lack of action in the newest Meighan vehicle, "Blind Alleys," constructed by that master craftsman, Owen Davis. No story which bumps the hero with an automobile and then abducts his bride can by any stretch of imagination be called apathetic, and yet this play is not the wild melodrama of the early Davis product, but rather a polite form of the old thriller.

Capt. Dan Kirby brings his South American bride to New York, a hotel his only home. He goes out to do some shopping, is struck by an automobile and taken to a private hospital.

She does the only sensible thing and goes to consult the Police. Being a stranger, she takes a taxicab, which happens to be the getaway vehicle of a pair of jewel thieves. They take her with them to their haunt in the suburbs, to await an opportunity to get out of town.

Meanwhile Dan, escaping from the hospital a week before his condition warrants discharge, collapses on the steps of a furnished room house and is befriended by Sally Ray, who runs a restaurant in the basement. Dan learns that his bride has disappeared and refuses to believe that she has eloped with her former sweetheart, Julio. By the time Maria makes her escape, Sally has come to love Dan and when Julio locates him, it is Sally who makes it appear that Dan has been unfaithful. Julio persuades Maria to return to South America with himself and his mother, but at the last she leaves the boat and Dan finds her on the dock.

This sounds like a wildly implausible tale, but the author has so carefully motivated every happening that for once the long arm of coincidence has not been yanked. Structurally the play is admirably done, with carefully built up and sustained suspense. You know, of course, that Dan is bound to get his wife back, but you can't figure just how it is going to be worked out and the suspense is maintained to the final scene. It is a play with practically no falling action. It's all up grade right to the final clinch.

Mr. Meighan gives his usual quiet and forceful portrayal of the sea captain and manages to act dazed without being mawkish. Evelyn Brent, as the girl who gets the worst of it, as usual, gives a fine drawing of the waitress who has worked up to proprietress and brings to the role just the right note of passion touched by the desire to mother a helpless invalid. It is a difficult role to play without stealing the sympathy that belongs to the wife, but she accomplishes the trick of getting sympathy for herself without killing her rival. The latter part is played with nice judgment by Greta Nissen, who in a black wig suggests the Spanish senorita and is scarcely to be recognized as the brisk blonde of the sophisticated farces in which she has been seen before this. The Julio of Hugh Miller is another finely tempered character drawing of a role that easily might have been spoiled.

"Blind Alleys" should prove acceptable to Mr. Meighan's admirers and also please those who demand more action than usually is carried in a Meighan play.

"The Monkey Talks"

Jacques Lerner Gives a Marvelous Impersonation
Of a Monkey in an Unusual and Absorbing Drama

AS A PLAY, "THE MONKEY TALKS" proved a sensation in London, Paris and New York, and William Fox is now offering it in film form, featuring Olive Borden, as a Raoul Walsh production, with Jacques Lerner, who created the roles on the stage, again appearing as the monkey.

Rene Fauchois, the author, certainly succeeded in fashioning a story that strikes out along new lines and which will especially appeal to patrons who are in search of the unusual in entertainment. The story is decidedly interesting and there are a number of fine dramatic moments, and it at all times holds the spectator's attention.

The basis of the plot is the fact that four stranded circus performers hit upon the idea of having one of their number, a diminutive acrobat, impersonate a monkey that has been taught to say a few words. Before long, the act becomes the sensation of Paris, but both the "trainer" and the "monkey" love Olivette, a tight rope walker on the same bill. The monkey must, however, remain silent.

Maisie, another performer, who has previously spurned the trainer and ran away with a lion tamer, again appears and they manage to steal the talking monkey, substituting a real one. The man monkey escapes and save Olivette from an attack by the real monkey but is mortally wounded and dies in the arms of his friends without revealing his secret, leaving Olivette and the trainer to find happiness together.

Naturally, the monkey is the dominating role, and the performance of Jacques Lerner is wonderful. His make-up with the monkey mask is excellent, and his impersonation of the monkey is uncanny in its realism. Olive Borden gives a fine performance as Olivette and Don Alvarado makes a handsome and thoroughly pleasing leading man as the trainer. Raymond Hitchcock lends color and humor in a well-handled portrayal of a circus hanger-on and con man. Malcolm Waite as the lion tamer and Jane Winton as the vamp give entirely satisfactory performances.

Raoul Walsh has given this story a fine production and there is stirring drama in the pathetic situation of the man-monkey who must hide his human love and accept the petting and friendship of Olivette toward him as a dumb animal.

Novel and dramatic story.

THERE IS DOUBLE significance to the title of the Pathe feature "The Princess on Broadway" in which Pauline Garon is featured, for not only does this story of the waitress who at one jump became a popular stage star have several of the aspects of a fairy story but also became her posing as a Russian Princess aids materially in bringing this about.

It is a pleasant little story but the heroine's meteoric success, the ease with which she fools the man who has backed a number of shows, and the complacent attitude of her sweetheart in giving her up to the other man considerably stretches the credulity. There are a few touches of drama, the most dramatic scene being where the heroine admits her real identity when she finds her lost sister a prisoner in the night court, but this is weakened by its dependence of coincidence.

Director Fitzgerald has handled his scenes smoothly enough but apparently has paid little attention to motivating them so as to make them more plausible, the result is a rather melodramatic narrative that is mildly entertaining program attraction probably best suited for double feature days.

Pauline Garon is attractive and vivacious and the script makes Johnny Walker a rather namby-pamby hero. The supporting roles are satisfactorily handled with Neely man assuming the identity of another man who was being trailed by private detectives and as a play it proved a big hit. Universal is now offering a film version as a Jewel production featuring Jean Hersholt in the title role.

The fact that the hero changes his name to escape a breach of promise suit when he finds his boyhood sweetheart is fat and ugly with two unruly children and the complications that ensue because the detectives are after the real Mr. Wright and of course follow the wrong man, is good farce comedy material. The story starts off well, but fails to keep up the snappy and hilarious pace. Many of the situations are lacking in spontaneity and seem forced for comedy effect, and as a whole, the picture proves to be only a moderately amusing farce.

As usual, Hersholt is excellent and he makes the most of the situation, his scaring away of his unwanted sweetheart by posing as a grouchy old man being especially convincing and amusing. He is aided by a capable cast including Enid Bennett as the female detective who falls in love with him, Edward Kennedy as a boob detective and Dorothy Devore and Walter Hiers as a hustling couple whose scheme starts the trouble as they persuade her father to try and save his employers business by "borrowing" the money and making fashionable lingerie instead of old fashioned corsets.

Hammersley, a millionaire, loves Tamara, a Follies star, but she marries Jerry, a clerk, who loses his job and leaves her to make good. Hammersley again tries to win her but finding she still loves Jerry, is instrumental in bringing them together. Stirring human interest story.

WITH BILLIE DOVE as the star, and Lewis Stone and Lloyd Hughes in featured roles, First National is offering an adaptation of Dixie Wilson's magazine story "Here Y'Are, Brother" under the title "An Affair of the Follies."

While, in keeping with the title there are some gorgeous and spectacular scenes depicting a performance at the "Follies" most of the footage deals with the homey little story of the romance between a Follies star and a poor department store clerk whose rival is a millionaire.

It is a story without a villain or any trace of villiany, rich in human interest in the presentation of the romance of the clerk and Follies girl which came near going on the rocks because of the pride of the young husband when he lost his job and refused to let his wife support him, and the persistent attentions of the millionaire, who however turns out to be a good sport and brings them together again.

An angle which adds an O. Henry touch to the story interest and will be especially appreciated with those familiar with big cities, is the fact that the millionaire, clerk and an inventor who has sought unsuccessfully to see the rich man, dine daily side by side in a restaurant. Their final meeting brings matters to a swift and plausible climax.

Billie Dove is beautiful and does excellent work while Lloyd Hughes has a congenial role opposite her. Lewis Stone is finely cast as the millionaire.

"An Affair of the Follies" is decidedly pleasing human interest entertainment that should appeal to the majority.

Phyllis' father favors Poindexter and refuses to let her see Tom, the ranch foreman. Tom disguises himself with a suit of armor and there is a mixup as a bandit has used the disguise to escape. It all ends with Poindexter being exposed as a crook and Tom winning Phyllis. An entertaining western.

IN THE EFFORTS OF producers to vary the plots of westerns and at the same time to retain the snap and action, the fine horsemanship and red-blooded he-man stuff that makes them popular with so many fans, various twists have been given to the stories. In the case of the F. B. O. picture "The Sinora Kid" starring Tom Tyler, this is supplied by the idea of a knight in armor.

Tom is shown reading about the knights of old. Suddenly he sees one. It develops that a patent medicine man is using this means to advertise his wares, and in the course of the story, a bandit employs it to make a getaway from the sheriff's posses and Tom rents it to go and see his lady love after her father has ordered him to keep away from the ranch. A series of complications result because the girl's father wants her to marry a supposed millionaire who turns out to be a pal of the bandit but all is eventually straightened out satisfactorily.

This unusual twist embellishes a full quota of action of the usual type and the result is a program western of fair entertainment value.

Tom Tyler shows to advantage as the hero while Ethan Laidlaw makes a fine bandit. Peggy Montgomery is attractive in the role of the girl and Mark Hamilton contributes comedy as the eccentric pal of the hero. Barney Furey is cast as the medicine man and Bruce Gordon as the false millionaire.

"Tearin' Into Trouble"

Exciting, Fast-Moving Western That Gets Away From the Familiar Formulas, Stars Wally Wales

Lester F. Scott, Jr., presents

"Tearin' Into Trouble"

Starring Wally Wales

Directed by Richard Thorpe

A Pathe picture

CAST:

Wally Tilland Wally Wales
Ruth Martin Olive Hasbrouck
Billy Martin Walter Brennan
Johnnie Tom Bay
Maisie Nita Cavalier
Length—4,453 Feet.

Wally, a rich idler, is accused when bandits rob his friends and force him to aid them in a getaway. He lands in the West and is accused of horse stealing and bank robbery, but the real culprits are captured and he wins a charming girl. Fast action western.

WALLY WALES' NEWEST starring vehicle in his series for Pathe is a Western that is unique in the respect that the hero is not cast as a real westerner even though he does appear in much of the footage in the togs of the usual screen cowboy, being brought about by the fact that his own clothes were stolen and the cowpuncher's garb left in their place.

The story, too, deviates quite a bit from the familiar formulas as Wally is shown as a member of the idle rich class and his western adventure is due to the fact that he is forced by bandits to drive them out into the wide open spaces. Before he gets through he is charged with stealing a horse, robbing a bank and attacking a girl. This series of complications keep the story moving at a good snappy pace with plenty of fine and fast riding, fights, chases, etc., and touches of comedy relief, that make it a good program western that should find favor with patrons of this type of pictures.

Wales handles his role satisfactorily but appears more at home in his western outfit. Olive Hasbrouck gives a good performance as a western girl, although she is given little to do. Tom Bay proves capable as the hero's friend and Nita Cavlier and Voilet Bird portray snobbish city girls.

Richard Thorpe gives this picture good direction, never allowing the interest to lag and maintaining good suspense, with fewer implausible situations than usual.

ONE MINUTE TO PLAY. (7,420 feet). Star, Red Grange. Not what it's cracked up to be. It might bring in the money but Red Grange's acting is away off and for that reason it may not please. Poor appeal here. Sunday yes, special no. Big city draw. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

REGULAR SCOUT. Star, Fred Thomson. Here's a number that will make all the kids in town get out and sell old bottles and junk to get the price of admission to see it. A mob of young 'uns swooped down on the house and when the action started in the picture we thought they would raise the roof off the old barn with their yells. It pleased the older people too, and for once in a long while we had to hang out the old S. R. O. sign. Tone O. K. Appeal 100 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all colors, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25. 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

TOM AND HIS PAWS. Star, Tom Tyler. Just what you always look for in Tyler pictures—lots of comedy, action and thrills. Westerns of this type always please. Print good. Tone O. K. Very good appeal. Sunday, special no. Draw big city types. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

First National

BROWN DERBY. (6,500 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. Johnny's poorest to date. Had a packed house and by the time the picture was ended, half my audience had left.

"It is my utmost desire to serve my fellow man." That is our slogan, we exhibitors who send unbiased reports on pictures we have played.

Our Gang is held together by the bonds of common interest and mutual good will. We welcome you into our circle, you will automatically become one of us by the free-will act of sending picture tips to this dependable tip department.

OUR GANG

Nuff sed. Admissions 10-20. Special no. Sunday O. K. J. R. Long, Opera House, Fort Payne, Alabama.

CLOTHES MAKE THE PIRATE. (8 reels). Stars, Leon Errol, Dorothy Gish. A comedy that failed to please. Not much to it, boys. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House, Fort Payne, Alabama.

KNOCKOUT. (7,452 feet). Star, Milton Sills. A dandy picture that will please as all First Nationals are good. Tone good appeal 90 per cent. Special yes. Draw farming class, town 400. Admission 15-25. Floyd G. Ward, Ward Theatre (250 seats), Stark, Kansas.

LOST WORLD. Star cast. An old picture that was a great surprise. Did a very good business and pleased everyone. This picture is O. K. Play it and hoost it. Mitchell Conerv, Columbia Theatre, Rensselaer, New York.

MEN OF STEEL. (9,341 feet). Star, Milton Sills. In spite of the fine paper, plenty of advance advertising, etc., this number failed to bring them out. Called a super-special by the producers (and it really is an out of the ordinary picture) but it is only big from the back-ground angle. Sills' acting was good. Tone O. K. Fair appeal. Sunday special yes. Draw all sorts town about 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MEN OF STEEL. (9,341 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Truly a special. Pictures of this type should be business builders for any class of house. Play it and advertise it well. Print good. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MISS NOBODY. (6,889 feet). Star, Anna O. Nilsson. Patrons said this was the best we have shown this winter. Why don't they make more like this instead of so many mushy ones? Tone good, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farming class, town 400. Admission 10-15. Ross S. King, Opera House (250 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

QUO VADIS. Star, Emil Jannings. This is an old release but a mighty good one. If you haven't played it, do so—and whoop it up. Print good. Tone O. K. Special yes. Draw all classes, town less than 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (240 seats), Cloverdale, California.

SENIOR DAREDEVIL. (6,402 feet). Star, Ken Maynard. Oh, boy! Here's a picture that's bound to please and Ken's a knockout. Take a tip and sign up for Ken Maynard. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House, Fort Payne, Alabama.

WILDERNESS WOMAN. (7,533 feet). Stars, Aileen Pringle, Chester Conklin. Just a fair program picture; won't stand much boosting. O. K. for Sunday, not a special.

J. R. Long, Opera House, Fort Payne, Alabama.

WISE GUY. (7,779 feet). Star, James Kirkwood. Did not go over for me the way First National said it would. Just another over-rated picture. Is good, but not a special by any means. Appeal good, special no. Mitchell Conerv, Columbia Theatre, Rensselaer, New York.

Fox

BERTHA, THE SEWING MACHINE GIRL. Star, Madge Bellamy. Fine entertainment. Went over big. Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

COUNTRY BEYOND. Very good James Oliver Curwood story. Beautiful scenery, good story, fine acting. Pleased the patrons. Tone good, box office good. Special yes. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

COWBOY AND THE COUNTESS. (5,345 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Here is an exceptional Buck Jones that will please your western audiences. Not so big here. Appeal 75 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Manager, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

HELL'S FOUR HUNDRED. (5,582 feet). Star, Margaret Livingston. Our audience enjoyed it. A good program. Nothing extra. Tone good, appeal fair. Sunday no, special no. Draw farming class, town 412. Admission 10-25. Leveck & Garner, Auditorium Theatre (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

HONESTY THE BEST POLICY. Star, Johnny Walker. Very poor; advertising misleading and part of cast in advertising not in the picture, at least we did not see Mickey Bennett. Tone O. K. Appeal 25 per cent. Sunday special no. Draw farming class, town 412. Admission 10-25. Leveck & Garner, Benoit Auditorium, Benoit, Mississippi.

NO MAN'S GOLD. (6,745 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Very good picture. Plenty of action. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farm, merchant class, town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SANDY. Star, Madge Bellamy. This is a box office picture. Tell them to leave their mothers and daughters at home—and they will all like it and not be disappointed, because the picture is good. It is a hundred per cent. better than the story and the story was well read. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

ture entertainments ever made. I did a good business with it the second night which is a sign that people liked it though I had a Championship Basketball game on against it. The second night I believe I did three times the business that my opposition did with "Winds of Chance" which shows how others felt about it. One of the two or three pictures a year that I classify one hundred per cent. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

UPSTREAM. Star, Earl Foxe. Here's a picture that's as good as getting money from home. My patrons have been enjoying Earl Foxe as a comedian, in fact I ran him on the same night in a Van Bibber comedy so his work in a serious role was a surprise to everyone and a pleasant surprise too. Here's a splendid program picture, interesting from beginning to end. A newcomer, Nancy Nash, was easy to look at, and good, too, with Raymond Hitchcock and Lydia Yeamans and an unusually good cast rounding out a most interesting picture. Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

UPSTREAM. Star, Earl Foxe. Poorest from Fox this season. Absolutely nothing to it. Little town fellows lay off showing if buying. It might go well in places where stage folk are plentiful but in the country—nix! Photography was so diffused that the picture seemed to be continually out of focus although the film lay perfectly flat on the aperture. Fox usually has the best photography on the screen but they fell down badly on this one. Cast unknown. No drawing power. Had several walkouts and heard lots of knocks. Tone O. K. Appeal none here. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all sorts, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

THIRTY BELOW ZERO. Star, Buck Jones. Impossible story but it pleases Jones fans. Picture not bad. Print new. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Sunday, special no. Draw big city types. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Metro-Goldwyn

BOY FRIEND. A good program that goes over. We found that our audience enjoyed it. Tone good, appeal fine. Sunday, special no. Draw farming class, town 412. Admission 10-25. Leveck & Garner, Auditorium Theatre (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

FLESH AND THE DEVIL. (8,750 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Here is a production that is taking the country by storm. We played to packed houses. Here is warm drama, charged with plenty of sex stuff; it also has the long, lingering kiss which starts hot and ends up like a volcano. This picture is splendidly acted and has some beautiful photography. Draw general class, city 316,000. Admission 20-25-40. James D. Kennedy, Apollo Theatre (1,100 seats), Indianapolis, Indiana.

LITTLE JOURNEY. (6,068 feet). Star, Claire Windsor, Harry Carey. Just a fair program picture with Harry Carey in a non-suited role. Ran this one on a rainy day to small business. Picture failed to please those who saw it. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House, Fort Payne, Alabama.

MAGICIAN. (6,960 feet). Star, Alice Terry. Extra good, although very gruesome. Some liked it and some did not although that doesn't mean it was not a good picture. Tone good, appeal fair. Sunday no, special yes. Draw farming class, town 412. Admission 10-25. Leveck & Garner, Auditorium Theatre (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

WALTZ DREAM. Foreign players, but a good picture, everybody said. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farm, town class, town 600. Admission 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

Pictures that bring them out in the rainy weather, pictures that get out the S.R.O. sign—these are worth knowing about, and dependable exhibitor tips in this department give you the low-down on which ones they are, as well as when to step heavy and when to bear light on the advertising. It's simply a question of choosing as your guide the exhibitor who agrees in his reports with your experience on pictures you both have run.

It's only fair to return the favor by sending tips to help the other fellow as he helps you.

Paramount

ANCIENT HIGHWAY. Star, Jack Holt. Excellent picture that pleased all. Some thrills all the time. A good drawing picture. Holt played his part well. Appeal 100 per cent. Draw farming class, town 400. Admission 10-25. Floyd G. Ward, Ward Theatre (250 seats), Stark, Kansas.

ANCIENT HIGHWAY. (7,560 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A James Oliver Curwood story that pleased only about fifty per cent. This type story not suited to Holt. Admission 10-20. Sunday, special no. J. R. Long, Opera House, Fort Payne, Alabama.

BEHIND THE FRONT. (5,325 feet). Stars, Beery-Hatton. This is a very fine comedy, one that everybody can enjoy—women, children, preachers and all. Don't be afraid to play this one up big; it cannot disappoint you. Will please them all. Draw town, country class, town 1,000. Admission 10-25. Special 15-50. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre (250 seats) La Belle, Missouri.

BEHIND THE FRONT. (5,325 feet). Stars, Beery-Hatton. This is worth digging up. It did a big Saturday night business for me as a second run as I ran it first run on a Sunday and the Saturday night crowd is a lot different in any theatre than the Sunday-Monday crowd. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

BLONDE OR BRUNETTE? (6 reels). Stars, Adolphe Menjou, Greta Nissen. This is one of the best little pictures from Paramount this year and better than most of their so-called specials. I say this is a knockout where a high class production is enjoyed. Step on it in that case for the picture is there. Appeal 90 per cent. Special yes. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

CAMPUS FLIRT. (6,702 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. An extra fine show from Paramount with Bebe certainly doing good work; she did excellently in this one. Tone, appeal good. Not a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

CAT'S PAJAMAS. (5 reels). Star, Betty Bronson. As a light little picture it pleases. Tone O. K. Fair appeal. Sunday O. K. no as special. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

GOOSE HANGS HIGH. Star cast. I tried to get this for Christmas but had to put it on a little later. If any of you wish a fine "home" picture, full of the old Christmas spirit, you can get it in this picture a hundred per cent. If I had not run it I would book it in for next Christmas. Draw farming, mill class. Admission 25. L. E. Parsons, Parsons Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

Paper was extra good. So was the title and picture. Tone O. K. Appeal good. Sunday O. K. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-20. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

KID BROTHER. Star, Harold Lloyd. Just another Lloyd and might be classed just a little better than "For Heaven's Sake," his first Paramount. But why tell me the percentage on Lloyd? I laid off this star for two years and unless the Lloyd sales organization get this percentage idea out of their heads it may be longer than two years before Hazard sees another. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

PADLOCKED. (6,700 feet). Star cast. Not so much for us in entertainment or drawing power. Not enough action for us. Well acted, but poor photography—(or a poor print). Tone good, fair appeal, not a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

PARADISE FOR TWO. (6,187 feet). Star, Richard Dix. A very pleasing picture, enacted by two good stars. Played one day to a fairly good house. The Quarterback, also starring Dix, was more of a box office attraction. This is almost the last picture of 1925-26 to be played in my house. Their new product was away too high for this size town so it's bye-bye Paramount here. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

PARADISE FOR TWO. Star, Richard Dix. This is not by any means the picture that The Quarterback was and is not up to the standard. Just an ordinary program picture and not worth advertising big. Will get by where Dix is popular, however. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

THE POTTERS. Star, W. C. Fields. This is a clever comedy of ordinary people and Pa Potter will give your crowd a pleasant evening. It has a good story and a lot of good laughs in it. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

QUARTERBACK. (7,114 feet). Star, Richard Dix, with Esther Ralston. Very good picture, but did not play it at the right time, therefore did not do so good. We think Esther pretty neat—sorry we're not an actor instead of an exhibitor. Good tone, Sunday and special yes. H. K. L. Beudon, Grand Theatre, Port Allegany, Pennsylvania.

VARIETY. (5,452 feet). Star, Emil Jannings. A very good foreign made production. Novel shots, with a very entertaining story that holds the attention from beginning to end. Tone, appeal good. Not a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WE'RE IN THE NAVY NOW. (5,919 feet). Star, Wallace Beery. A knockout picture. Held up for a week. Book it and boost it: it can't fail. It's got everything the box office wants. Tone good, appeal—a knockout. Sunday, special yes. Draw from masses, city 40,000. Admission 10-30. Johnny Jones, Washington & Orpheum Theatres, Quincy, Illinois.

ALOMA OF THE SOUTH SEAS. (5,584 feet). Star, Gilda Gray. I find this picture hard to report. It is an intriguing thing. The majority of my people liked it fine. It is just the sort of picture that goes best here. In fact, I wish I could get about one a month like it. The advertising matter is extra good; the paper just fairly forced them into the theatre. The window cards were not quite so good. In fact, the cover of the press book would have made a much better window cards; I used two of them in special frames for lobby display purposes. The first day's business on the picture was about double my ordinary—in spite of the fact that we had extremely bad weather. The next day dropped fifty per cent. although the weather was good. I personally liked the picture fine; but it would have been a far better picture had they used a younger, prettier girl in the lead. The consensus of opinion here bore out this statement. They liked the picture but did not take to Gilda. It was not a big special as claimed. Tone O. K. Appeal good. Sunday, not here. No as special. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

Pathe

HOT WATER. (6,040 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. This is a real old one that made more money for me than For Heaven's Sake. When you can buy Lloyd's pictures right, you stand to make a little money any time. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday yes, special ??? H. L. Beudon, Grand Theatre, Port Allegany, Pennsylvania.

Producers Dist. Corp.

BACHELOR BRIDES. Star, Rod LaRocque. Couldn't class this picture as so much. Name poor and misleading. Couldn't figure out where Bachelor Brides came in. Tone O. K. Appeal 50 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw general class, town 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana Illinois.

UNKNOWN SOLDIER. (7,479 feet). Star cast. Good picture but very sad ending. Will please some who like this kind. One woman asked if this was to be a good picture; I said, "Yes, but a little sad." She said, "Oh, that's what I like." Tone good, appeal 50 per cent. Sunday, special yes. H. L. Beudon, Grand Theatre, Port Allegany, Pennsylvania.

UP IN MABEL'S ROOM. (6,345 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. One of the most entertaining comedies we have ever run. All good looking men and women, entertaining story—and a sure "hot" comedy. Pleased 90 per cent. Many told me it was the "cutest" picture they ever saw. Draw town, country class, town 1,000. Admission 10-25, special 15-50. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre (250 seats), La Belle, Missouri.

United Artists

THE BAP. (9 reels). Stage play. This is a fine comedy-mystery play and it draws people in. Well directed and well played. Sunday yes, appeal 75 per cent. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

GARRISON'S FINISH. (8 reels). Star, Jack Pickford. This one is a little old but it is one of the best horse race pictures we have had to date. Draw farm class, town 400. Floyd G. Ward, Ward Theatre, Stark, Kansas.

HILL BILLY. Star, Jack Pickford. A dandy picture and played to a small Saturday night crowd on account of bad bad weather. Think it pleased most everyone. Buy it and you should make good. Tone, good, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

NO MORE WOMEN. Star, Madge Bellamy. A very good picture and pleased a fair Saturday night crowd. Picture is a little old but believe you will make some money on it if you advertise it and get behind it. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

PARTNERS AGAIN. Star cast. Very good comedy: should please any audience which likes comedy. Plenty of action. Moral tone good. Sunday yes, special no. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

If you've been an exhibitor longer than two days you know how many things a person has to do to keep a show going these days. You can't help but hand credit to the folks who are just as busy as you are, but who lay aside profitable effort to sit down and write out reports on pictures for your guidance. That's one tangible case of giving something for nothing, because in most cases they don't even hear from some of you when you've been saved a lot of money or helped in the making of more. Our Gang is certainly a group of exhibitors to be proud of. They freely give priceless information. Thank them by doing the same.

SPARROWS. Star, Mary Pickford. This was better than I expected and proved a very satisfactory picture here. It has been considerably cut (or at least that print) as some of the reels were only about 700 feet long and I believe the objectionable parts must have been cut out. At no time of the play does the cruel manager of the orphanage strike any of the children and at no time during this print does one of the children suffer any pain, so I can't see where any of the other exhibitors objected to this except that the portions they didn't like have been cut out. It's O.K. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

STELLA DALLAS. Star, Belle Bennett. Very good acting. A bit padded in spots but worth seeing. Very pathetic, bound to keep those away who do not like too much pathos. Tone good, appeal fair. Sunday, special yes. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

THIEF OF BAGDAD. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Something different—but good. But same old thing. Too long! Picture drew better second night than the first—something unusual. Tone, appeal good. Sunday, special yes. H. L. Beudon, Grand Theatre, Port Allegany, Pennsylvania.

Universal

COHENS AND THE KELLYS. (7,372 feet). Star cast. This is a dandy comedy and for entertainment value will be hard to beat. Tone good. Appeal 100 per cent. Draw farm and mill class. Admission 25. L. E. Parsons, Parson's Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

HIGH CORRAL. Star, Art Acord. A good program picture. Tone good, appeal fair. Sunday yes, special no. Draw merchant, farm class, town 1,650, widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

OH, BABY! This is a dandy comedy: very light, but pleases them and the midget sure gets away with his difficult part of playing the little girl. It is a clever comedy. Sunday yes, appeal 70 per cent. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

SILENT RIDER. (5,598 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Gee, but Hoot and his gang made them howl on this one. Hope he continues to make them so entertaining and, above all, clean. This picture is good enough for Sunday: as it is largely comedy and so clean. Here's one cowboy that don't whistle for his horse. Hurrah for Hoot!—(and listen, old boy, send a picture to me and get it here before I play The Denver Dude. Thanks). R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

SILENT RIDER. Star, Hoot Gibson. Just an ordinary Gibson picture which is just the usual western that will please the Saturday mob. Appeal 85 per cent. Special no. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

Warner Bros.

FINGER PRINTS. (7,021 feet.) Many complaints about this one; no one liked it, and they told me so, too. I think this will take a flop most places—too complicated. Tone good, appeal none. Sunday, yes, special no. Draw farm, merchant class, town 1,650 widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

WHILE LONDON SLEEPS. (5,816 feet). Star, Rin-Tin-Tin. Here the best Rin-Tin-Tin so far. Good story with a plot, Tone, appeal good. Sunday, special yes. Draw farm, merchant class, town 1,650, widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Miscellaneous

PRIMROSE PATIL. (Arrow). Star cast. These specials are worthless to us here. We couldn't afford to run this gratis. Should charge the distributor to run it. W. A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

Short Subjects

COURAGE OF COLLINS. (Universal-western). This is too good reels of action and fills in with a society picture O.K. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

FELIX, THE CAT. (Educational-cartoon). Always get a laugh and are always fine to fill out program which has long feature program. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

HOUSE WITH A KEY. (Pathe-serial). Star, Allene Ray. Have played third chapter of this serial and we are pleased with the way it is starting out. Mystery getting deeper with each chapter. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

MISTER WIFE. (Educational-Neal Burns). A very good laughmaker. Has good tone and appeal. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

RADIO DETECTIVE. (Universal-serial). I liked this. I think that serials should be made for children and this one just fills the bill, with some very good Scout stuff in it: and the grown-ups like it because of the children in it. Its a good serial and above the average all right. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

TILL WE EAT AGAIN. (Educational-Bobby Vernon). An extra good comedy with this star. Had 'em all shrieking with laughter. Tone, appeal good. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WHAT PRICE GOOFY? (Educational-Chas. Chase). This is good fun. Has a plot that builds up to a climax and is not merely a series of falls and fights as most comedies seem to be. The last half reel of this two reeler is as clever as any comedy I have run for a long time and the first portion builds up to it so that I classify it as away above the average. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

A Major Differs From a Sergeant

A MAJOR in the army is a lot bigger than a sergeant—in power. So, in this Picture Chart, a major error is one that has power to hinder exhibitors in getting accurate information when they want it.

As a part of Moving Picture World's service to readers—the service that wins leadership and holds it—we send out a dollar to each reader who writes a letter to us pointing out major errors—footage changes we were not told about, incorrect review date, etc.

But not the little "sergeant" stuff, please. One chap wrote that there was a line shifted out of alignment a quarter inch at the bottom of a page. Think he was kidding, but you get what the difference is. We're glad to pay the dollars when you show us major errors—incorrect titles, wrong footages, calling a comedy a drama—those are major errors.

The Theatre of To~Day

Presentations ~ Prologues ~ Music

Edited by O. T. Taylor

The Enchanted Garden

NOVELTY is the keynote of this offering which may be presented with children only, or with adult and children performers. Through tie-ups with dancing schools this presentation can be worked up at a very nominal cost.

Part of the scenic material, such as the gate posts and trees, is from previous presentations.

The odd and unusual is sought after in this setting; consequently no effort should be made toward a strictly natural garden, but rather for fantastic exaggeration in lay-out as well as color note. The lighting, when at its height, should be vivid and startling, using spots and floods instead of borders and foots.

The following routine and musical suggestions should be treated merely as such; the producer may have to change the action according to ability and style of his performers.

Any of the numbers suggested may be omitted and different numbers substituted. A novelty orchestra or instrumental band of almost any kind; or a trio or quartette of singers attired in insect costumes, may be used instead of, or in conjunction with dancers.

THE ROUTINE

"Morning," Grieg, is played by pit orchestra as drapes part on a dim stage in blue, suggesting early morning. Birds are singing. The scene shows a high garden wall with a big double gate. The garden beyond the gate is in shadows and but dimly discernible. In front of the wall, to the left, a tall tree with drooping foliage; to the right a number of large urns and flower pots, some apparently empty, others containing plants.

Amber flood coming up gradually, very slowly, from right during the action that follows. Bright green spot, from projecting booth, on urns; one of these is seen to move, it rocks gently, tips over and a ladybird in brilliant colors crawls out. Introduce dance number, "Dance Caprice," Virgil. As dance progresses bugs and beetles appear from behind trees and flowers, right and left. Green lights up gradually behind fountain wall to illuminate sky. At conclusion of dance a big, glittering, black beetle appears and, leading the other insects, goes into a grotesque comedy dance number. "Zepher," Heller. Spot to canary color, amber lights up slowly behind gates. At height of dance, apparently, a huge frog hops on from left; the insects scurry off and the frog performs acrobatics, working in a steel blue spot.

The gates open slowly during this number revealing the inner garden. A wall, with a central fountain splashing water, forms the background. Colorful flowers grow in profusion along the wall. The scene is in amber light with the upper part of the fountain tinted magenta and a green spot on water spray.

The frog hops through the gate to inner garden as music segue. "Spring Song," Mendelssohn, for dance of the elves, a tuneful number danced by youthful dancers in colorful costumes. White flood from projection booth on this number.

Entire company on for finale.

Backing consists of a blue sky cye, A. The walls B are flats of frame construction covered with muslin or blue plaster board (paper). The fountain, C, is wall board on frame work, built in same manner as the stucco arch described in a previous presentation. The front walls, DD, are similar to back walls and have in addition two gate posts or pilasters. These are also from a previous presentation as are the set trees and flowers.

The gates are here shown in detail; the gate E showing grille design as cut from wallboard and tacked to rigid frame built of battens, as shown in F. The gate frame is half again as long as the part actually showing from front. The additional part is to balance the gate on the track and is concealed by the wall.

Counter weights consisting of sand bag, sash or curtain weights, are added to the balance end, hanging on the track G.

A detailed plan showing a simple way to hang the gate on the track is shown in the end elevation. The uprights, A, support the track, B. The hangers, C, hold the gate, D, in position and fits loose enough on the track to glide easily. The track, made of wood battens, should be perfectly smooth and rubbed with graphite, so that the gate may be operated easily and smoothly.

The Fountain is, as already mentioned, of frame and wall board construction, with the exception of the water basin and fountain head. The basin is made of 2x8 boards, on edge, for walls, and one inch boards for bottom. Line inside with roofing paper to make watertight. All overflow, in the back side about four inches from the bottom, consists of a piece of down spout fitted tightly in a hole cut in the wall. The fountain head can be plaster cast, papier mache or pressed sheet iron, with water furnished by means of a garden hose concealed behind the fountain. An ornament of pressed sheet iron, suitable for fountain head, may no doubt be obtained at a local sheet metal shop.

PAINTING

Do walls and fountain rough "Textone" in very light pink (shell pink); the tile inserts on fountain wall and basin in medium greens and blues, painted in oil and varnished to resemble glazed tile, set in white mortar.

Gates get dull black.

Foliage, flowers and vines may be painted on the walls, lending; with flowers and shrubbery "planted" along the wall, the appearance of a dense growth.

Urns and huge flower pots are made by covering empty wooden candy pails, bushel baskets and similar odd-shaped containers, with black or white oilcloth or muslin and decorating with designs done in paint and bronze of brilliant colors; Chinese vermilion, emerald green, turquoise and cobalt blues, orange, etc. The smaller flower pots could be done in similar colors. The profile tree or wood wing gets bright green foliage detailed in dark greens and blues. Tree trunk in blues, brown and orange outlined with black.

COSTUMES

At first glance the costume designs may appear too elaborate, too complicated, for practical adaptation except by theatres operating their own costuming department. It will, however, be found less difficult to make these costumes than seems at first possible. The wing shells may be made from buckram reinforced with wire frame. Or make from metal window screen. The screen can be cut and shaped to almost any imaginable form. Cover inside and outside with strips of manila paper or muslin about two inches wide, glued to the wire-screen shell. Decorate with paint, bronzes and metallics. I, fig. 3, shows a close-fitting elf costume of peagreen satin with decorated wings of silk gauze. Make frames, the size and shape wanted for wings, from stiff, lightweight wire and stretch the gauze on the frames.

J shows two ladybird costumes of similar design, made of satin in russet or green with wings of silk gauze attached to inside of the shells.

The comedy character costume, K, should be in glossy black detailed in aluminum bronze and bright green. Black oilcloth is just the thing for this costume. Facial make-up should be in keeping with costume and part played.

attending the Eden Musee. It simply was not done. And all went home and told about the boiler room with the red velvet carpet before the furnace doors, they lauded the Toffetti frescoes, they dilated on the art treasures scattered through the theatre, on the rest rooms and even on the elegance of the plumbing. Mr. Albee has built many beautiful theatres since, culminating in the magnificent Albee Theatre, in Brooklyn, but the Boston house was the first, and therefore the most wonderful.

It is possible to go back of the Keith period, even, for old-timers will recall the bar of the Hoffman House, on Madison Square, with its originals by Bougereau and other masters, and where they charged a quarter for the usual two-for-a-quarter drink. If you had enough cocktails you could see twice as many paintings and so double the return on your investment.

It is all along the same lines. The bar-room, the vaudeville theatres and the picture houses alike supply the craving for elegance. It may seem a bit garish to the ultra-refined, but it means much to the shop girl, the domestic, the clerk and the truck driver. Each has a desire for romance and luxury, and the romance film in a million dollar theatre supplies that desire and gives them, for a little space, a vacation from the drab tenement life and the sordid grind of the day's work.

And the Paramount, the Roxy and all the rest can directly, though not very distinctly, trace their origin back to the growth of the five-reel picture, and realize that the society revels, the night club scenes, the overstuffed sets and all the rest are merely a catering, conscious or otherwise, to this demand.

We may never know whether the hen or the egg came first, but the theatres followed the film.

Principles of Photography

INTENDED largely as a text for use in colleges and for advanced workers, "Photography, Principles and Practice," by C. B. Neblette, of the Texas A. and M. College, covers almost every phase of photography in its 586 pages of text, though it does not even touch upon cinematography, save as its processes are related to straight photographic art.

This is not intended to be a popular handbook; indeed the treatment will repel the casual reader who is mildly interested in the scientific aspects and is more intent upon results, but for the student the ground has been thoroughly and intelligently covered. As an example of the aims of the book, it might be mentioned that 89 pages are given to the matter of lenses and photographic optics, with innumerable diagrams to demonstrate the various types of lenses and the various optical formulae. Development, to the final fixation, carries 124 pages, and every phase of development is discussed.

It gives the student of photography a working knowledge of the entire subject and includes the latest processes. It is published by the D. Van Nostrand Co. at $6.50.—E. W. S.

New Power's High Intensity Lamp Is Ready

Extensive Improvements Made in Projection Light Source, Which in Original Form Has Made Good For Five Years

POWER'S High Intensity Lamp, originally known as the G. E. Lamp and manufactured by the General Electric Company at its Schenectady plant, was late recalled the Power's High Intensity and manufactured in improved form by the Power's Division of the International Projector Corporation. It has now undergone extensive redesigning and a number of important improvements have been made which unquestionably place this apparatus foremost in the ranks of high intensity projection equipment. The earlier lamps were extensively used and gave satisfactory service while medium currents were employed but the demand for higher current ratings has made necessary many changes in construction.

The first lamps put out by Power's were installed in lamphouses originally designed for the ordinary arc and this created many annoying difficulties and limitations, but as now designed Power's High Intensity Lamp may be operated up to a maximum capacity with an absolute assurance of satisfaction.

The new lamphouse has been designed with ample allowance for the heavy duty the lamp is called upon to perform and proper ventilation has received full consideration. The lamphouse is 26" long by 26" high by 15" wide over-all and the design of the upper section will be found to greatly facilitate rapid removal of gases and vapors from the burning arc. A 6" stove pipe vent has been provided in the top for connection to a standard 6" vent flue to the outer air. Extra large doors of double thickness, ventilated between the surfaces, when opened leave the lamp entirely accessible, ready for removal or cleaning. A heavy wire mesh inserted in the base of the lamphouse affords a ready and continuous flow of cool air circulating at all times through the lamphouse, serving to keep the apparatus moderately cool.

Condenser Mount Adjustable

The condenser mount of the new lamphouse is of the adjustable type now well known to projectionists throughout the country. It is designed so that the condensers may be adjusted vertically and laterally so that accurate alignment may be obtained with the centre of the condensing lenses placed absolutely on the optical axis. This is an important feature of this mount and is a patented device used exclusively on the Power's High Intensity Lamp. Additional adjustment has been provided for the spacing of condensers so that condensers of extreme thickness, such as the 6½" G. E. fused quartz, may be accommodated, but at the same time leaving considerable space for adjustment between it and the front condenser.

The inside dowser has been continued, as it is an important aid to the projectionist, as it protects the collector lens from becoming coated with white ash when the arc is struck. An auxiliary dowser of heavy construction has been added to the end of the condenser mount cone in order that change-over attachments may be readily placed in use. This cone is of very large proportions, being over 5" in diameter at the point at which it connects to the condenser mount assembly. This enables the projectionist to use a 5' front condenser which experience has taught us materially increases the amount of illumination obtained on the screen, and at the same time allows for the projection of a picture brightly illuminated to the extreme edges. Extra heavy door latches have been provided to replace those of lighter construction formerly used, but inadequate under present conditions.

Lamp Highly Modernized

Although the lamphouse has been improved in a number of important particulars it is the lamp which has received major consideration. The improvements made upon the lamp will be briefly described and theatre owners and projectionists will readily realize that Power's High Intensity Lamp as now designed overcomes all the difficulties heretofore found in this type of arc lamp.

A new type revolving carriage assembly has been adopted, the rear bearing of which has been extended through the entire rear support, thus eliminating wear at this point. The large beveled gear has been made integral with the sleeve which formerly was slipped over two set screws, and this new design makes for quick and easy assembly at the same time assuring perfect alignment of these important parts. The vertical bearing in the rear support casting has been considerably lengthened, thus affording a much greater bearing surface and again insuring the accurate alignment of the vertical feed shaft. An additional bearing of very rugged construction has been added to the rear of the lamp to support the negative feed shaft beyond the negative feed gear and driving clutch. This bearing eliminates all lost motion in this particular assembly and assures again perfect alignment and positive operation of the negative feed assembly complete.

In former lamps the asbestos guide, as its name implies, acted as a guide for the positive carbon, but owing to the many connections through which the carbon passes before coming in contact with the positive contact shoes, it was found practically impossible at all times to get an accurate alignment of the positive carbon on the optical axis without leaving undue clearances. This often caused the carbon to travel eccentric, thereby moving the spot at the aperture plate in an eccentric motion, affecting considerably the screen illumination. This feature has been discontinued and the guide for the positive carbon in the front assembly of the lamp is now formed in the front of the revolving carriage. Wear at this point has been eliminated as the carbon revolving carriage and guide for the positive carbon now revolve as a complete unit. By this method of construction perfect alignment of all parts has been secured and the eccentric motion prevented.

Positive Feed Perfected

One of the most important features of the new construction is a new positive feed assembly. The older type of detent spring has been entirely discontinued and in its place has been mounted a ruggedly constructed flexible attachment by means of which the positive carbon is accurately and positively fed an exact pre-determined distance at each revolution of the revolving carriage. This new assembly is adjustable so that the rate of feed may be varied for different diameter carbons such as the 11 mm. or 13.6 mm. depending on the amperage used.

Extra heavy positive contact shoes have been provided to carry current considerably in excess of the amount normally used. Ample contact surface makes it unnecessary to put undue tension on the carbon in order to secure sufficient contact. These contact shoes are protected by a baffle plate of heat-resisting material so that at the end of a half hour's run the contact shoes themselves present only an extremely dull red appearance as compared with a bright cheery red often observed in the older construction.

The negative assembly has been considerably reenforced and a new carbon clamp of very rugged construction added, which eliminates the danger of bending this important part when tightening the negative carbon securely in the holder.

Current is now conducted to the negative carbon by means of solid silver corrugated connector strips having a capacity of practically double the current normally used. This type of construction entirely eliminates the danger of the burning off of the negative contact cable. The new lamphouse makes it possible to secure over a half inch greater forward adjustment and with the additional adjustment provided in the condenser mount assembly a perfect spot may be obtained at all times with plenty of leeway backward and forward for accurate adjustment of the lamp. The dimensions of the former lamphouse entirely prevented this most important adjustment.

Adjustment Simplified

It will be recalled by those who have used the earlier types of high intensity equipment that the slight adjustment obtainable—in the older lamps could be secured only by turning the forward and backward adjusting screw many times. This adjusting screw itself was in close connection with the negative feed shaft and thereby interfered considerably with its operation. In the new lamp the backward and forward adjusting screw has been moved to the left almost 3" thereby leaving plenty of room for manipulation by the projectionist. The adjusting screw of many threads per inch has been eliminated and an adjusting screw having but five threads per inch has taken its place. It is, therefore, apparent that the backward and forward adjustment of the lamp within the lamphouse may now be almost instantly made. New positive and negative feed handles have been provided and the positive has two cranks upon it through which a speedy adjustment of the positive carbon clamp is assured when changing the trim.

The negative feed crank has been made much more rugged and of considerably greater length so that this adjustment also may now be made without difficulty. Both of these adjustments may be subjected to considerably hard usage without causing any trouble.

Power's High Intensity Lamp has been on the market nearly six years and in some theatres has been in actual practical use for about five years. The Bradford Theatre, Newark, New Jersey, and the Republic Theatre, Brooklyn, New York, were two of the first theatres to install Power's High Intensity Lamp and in both instances the same lamps have been in use for about five years. This rather conclusively proves that the earlier Power's High Intensity Lamps gave long and satisfactory service in spite of certain defects to which we have referred. Of late there have been strong indications of a greatly increased demand for the high intensity lamp and the International Projector Corporation feels that with the many improvements made on Power's High Intensity Lamp theatre owners and projectionists will see that the new equipment is installed. The high intensity lamp has certain definite advantages and it will pay to write to the Power's Division of the International Projector Corporation for full information regarding Power's High Intensity Arc Lamps.

Demand for McAuley Arcs Keeps Factory Busy At Night

From the plant of the J. E. McAuley Mfg. Co., Chicago, manufacturers of Peerless Reflector Arc Lamps, comes news of exceptional activity and many orders for their equipment. Business has been so good and the demand for Peerless Lamps so great that night operation of their factory has been necessary for the past month and will so continue until their schedule of increased productions will keep shipments apace with orders.

The Rowland & Clark Circuit have ordered through the National Theatre Supply Co., Peerless Reflector Arc Lamps for a large number of their central Pennsylvania houses. The Schine Theatrical Enterprises of Gloversville, who operate about 70 theatres throughout Central New York State, have standardized on Peerless as their Reflector Arc Lamp equipment and are installing Peerless Lamps as rapidly as possible.

The Saenger Enterprises, who a short time ago placed orders for fifty Peerless Lamps, are ordering additional lamps for their theatres and these in addition to their initial order.

Chicago installations also show exceptional pep; one of the most important installations being Ascher Brothers' New Sheridan Theatre, located at Sheridan Road and Irving Park Boulevards. This theatre has a seating capacity of 3,000 and represents a total investment of around two million dollars. This house is equipped with three Simplex Projectors and Peerless Reflector Arc Lamps and the sale handled by the Chicago office of the National Theatre Supply Company. Beautiful projection is being obtained in this house on a throw of 168 feet with a 20 feet picture at only 28 amperes.

New additions to the present Peerless line of Reflector Arc Lamps and Film Speed Indicators will be announced in the near future, the process of development now being under way.

MIAMI, FLA.—Wallerstein Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., will erect reinforced concrete moving picture theatre at 744 West Flagler street, seating capacity 1,200. Stores will be located on Flagler street side. Estimated cost $100,000.

TAMPA, FLA.—Public Theatre Corporation, 16 East 42nd street, New York, plans to erect 16-story brick theatre and office building on Tampa street. Estimated cost $1,000,000.

WINNETKA, ILL.—Edwin H. Clark, 8 Huron street, heads syndicate which will erect Spanish-Colonial design moving picture theatre and store building on Sheridan road, between Wilmette and Kenilworth. Seating capacity about 1,400.

TUPELO, MISS.—Moore and Gregory plan to erect theatre on site of old Read Hotel.

Better Projection Pays

Perfect Projection Is Provided in the Roxy

IN the magnificent new Roxy Theatre, soon to open its doors to the public, things projectional will be inaugurated which will, I venture to say, make even blase old Broadway sit up and gasp several full-sized gasps.

I am pledged to Mr. Rothafel, who naturally wants to keep the surprise in abeyance for the opening, not to disclose the nature of the really big things, but you who think you know all about picture presentation and the possibilities of projection, and things directly allied thereto, are due to revise your ideas a whole lot, and I don't mean maybe either.

By order of Mr. Rothafel, and by his own wish as well, Arthur Smith, who will have charge of matters projectional in the Roxy, showed me through the whole theatre, where we examined as much as was not still hidden by the huge mass of scaffolding. We often say a thing is a "wow." Well, the Roxy is going to be a couple of wows at the very least.

The projection room itself is 38' 4" long by 12' front to back, with a small room at either end. It is located in the front of the balcony. The projection angle will be two (2) degrees, and the projection distance 110 feet. Distortion therefore is to all intents and purposes entirely eliminated, and the projectionist at a distance where all details of the picture will be easily visible—the only real answer to keeping definition continuously sharp, and various faults now common because of the great distance the projectionist is from the screen, at their lowest value.

Roxy spent a good half hour explaining his plans. He advised me he had instructed the installation man to "go the limit" in the matter of projection equipment, which shows good judgment and good business sense. It is astonishing how many exhibitors expend huge sums on a theatre de luxe, and then get economical (????) when the projection room is reached, thus handicapping the whole thing.

Concerning the projection room location, Roxie said: "There, Frank, I've done what you've been preaching for years, and I've sacrificed a lot of seats to do it, too."

"Don't you believe it will be a paying proposition to sacrifice them?" I asked.

"Certainly," was the prompt reply, "or I'd not have done it."

The Roxy will have the only undistorted screen image in any large theatre in all the Broadway district, and in the Broadway district some pretty terrible examples of distortion

Bluebook School

Question No. 567—Would it be possible to use one 50 volt, 25 ampere, one 25 volt, 25 ampere, and one 35 volt, 25 ampere rheostat on 120 volts? If you think it would, what would the resultant amperage be, presuming the current to be D. C.?

Question No. 568—Explain the action of a "multiple coil" rheostat and explain their advantages in projection work.

tion exist in some very high-grade theatres. I have always deplored this state of affairs, but exhibitors had not the vision to see or understand that the sacrifice of a relatively few seats, even though they be high-priced ones, is worth while if by so doing we may secure a more beautiful and therefore a more salable screen picture.

As to the theatre itself, you will have to see it to appreciate its dignified beauty. It will of course be fully described in other sections of the paper when the theatre has opened, which date is set for March 11.

I have seen the list of projectionists to be employed and the names contain an assurance that full justice will be done to the splendid equipment supplied. Incidentally Vitaphone will be included in the repertoire.

Just wait, though! Broadway is going to be introduced to a new, and I venture, to say a startling innovation in projection and presentation. What Roxy will "pull" will, unless I miss my guess, again set him a goodly number of laps ahead of all and sundry. In the past he has pulled several big ones, but this looks to me to be very big. Roxy is a man with vision, plus full measure of ability to materialize his "dreams" into solid realities.

Incidentally, it may interest you to know the equipment which will be installed. It consists of 3 Simplex projectors, one of them equipped to handle Vitaphone. They will have high intensity lamps. Projectors to handle the Spoor wide film. Four Brinkert C14 spots and two high intensity flood lamps, also Brinkert. One 10-reel American Film Safe for 15" reels and one 15 reel American Film Safe for Spoor reels. Three carbon cabinets. 11 Hoffman and Sons rheostats. Five special panels with voltmeter, ammeter and speed indicator mounted thereon. Five Strong changeover devices. Ross projection lenses.

There will be three high intensity floods and six Brinkert C14, 150 ampere spots in the theatre dome and four C14, 150 ampere spots back stage, besides which there will be one projector for Spoor film and two Simplex projectors, with all accompanying equipment, in the private screening room. This is not a complete list, but contains all the main items.

Common Sense Arises In Projection Affairs

SLOWLY common sense arises from under its burial cloak of foolishness in projection matters. The magnificent new Roxy Theatre, New York, representing what is probably the greatest capital investment in this country, insofar as concerns a theatre alone, has sacrificed many of its very best seats in order to avoid hampering projection by an abnormally long projection distance and picture distortion.

Several other high-class theatres in various sections of the country have done the same thing, the latest being the Famous Theatre, New Orleans, La., which has placed its projection room in the front of the balcony, with a negligible projection angle and about a 65-foot projection distance.

And right there lies a danger, unless lens manufacturers can produce projection lenses which will give perfect results with short focal length lenses of diameter sufficient to admit the entire light beam.

Up to date I believe this has been declared to be either impossible or very difficult of accomplishment. With an 18-foot picture a lens just a bit in excess of three inches E. F., would be required and even with a 14-foot picture lens just a bit over 4-inch E. F. would be necessary.

The 3-inch lens is, unless makers can do more than they have done in the past, almost an impossible proposition, but I think a very good result may be had with a 4-inch lens, though whether that is true where the reflector arc is to be used, I'm not sure.

Einzinger Offers Clue To Worden's Bad Puzzle

GEORGE EINZINGER, New York City, says: Referring to Mr. Worden's puzzle, I presume the middle plane of one of the lenses of the projection lens is not perpendicular to the principal axis. The cause probably is that the female thread (inside the tube) is 'out' just one of the fine threads, so that the lens is on a slope by just that much. Another presumption is that the axis of the tube as a whole is not perpendicular to the film plane."

I think Friend Einzinger is in error. My reasons for thinking so are: that it is hardly to be presumed that this would happen to both projection lenses at essentially the same time, as I understand was the case. I think so, too, because the displacement of the optical axis of the tube as a whole would displace the picture on the screen; also I doubt that the slight displacement of one element of the projection lens, as described, would produce the effect, and again it would hardly happen to both lenses at once.

However, don't feel hurt because I don't agree with you, Einzinger. You have at least offered what you believe to be a solution, which is more than many readers had the courage and energy to do.

Bluebook School Answers Special

Note:—This "School" is designed to arouse interest in the study of those many problems which constantly arise in motion picture projection, AND to cause men to really study the Bluebook and assimilate the vast amount of knowledge contained within its covers.

RECENTLY I selected for publication, as I remember it, the reply of Brother Hanover, Burlington, Ia., to the question propounded by R. G. B. Philadelphia, which same was as follows:

"If you were employed as projectionist in a theatre under construction, in which pictures and prologues or pictures and tableau were to constitute the program, and were asked to submit a tentative list of equipment required for the projection room, what would you ask for current to be 110-220, with a 3-wire projection room service circuit. Room itself to be 18' long by 9' deep, located at front of balcony. Projection distance 70 feet. Distance screen to rear row of seats 130 feet; to front row 25 feet. Auditorium 82 feet wide."

That last was probably an error, but it was the width R. G. B. gave.

In selecting Hanover's answer I discarded, among others, the answer of Richard Keuster, Brooklyn, N. Y. This I did in the case of Keuster, only because he had, it seemed to me, wandered far from the actual question. However, a careful second reading convinces me that the "wandering" was, after all rather necessary to the competent answering of the question, and Keuster's answer is so excellent that I have decided to consume pretty well all the department this week, in publishing it. Here it is:

"Before we can decide just what to include in our tentative list, we must make certain of those structural dimensions affecting projection. My first move would therefore be to secure a set of blueprints from the architect and study them. We chaps have the dimensions stated in this question, but I would probably not know them exactly when asked to submit a list.

Assuming that we find them to be as stated in the question, the next thing to determine would be how much apparatus could be accommodated on the floor space, or perhaps it would be better to say in the 18 foot long front space at our disposal.

First of all we must not forget that since the projection of motion pictures is the one most important function of a theatre projection room, motion picture projectors should and must have first consideration. We must set aside space for them first of all, and use whatever may be left, be it little or much for other apparatus.

It is pretty generally conceded that the high-grade motion picture theatre of today must, or at least should have a battery of three projectors. The third projector may not be an absolute necessity, but for many reasons it represents good practice. I would therefore include three moving picture projectors in my list. My preference as to kind is not material.

The proper spacing apart of projectors is four feet, lens center to lens center, but in consideration of the fact that we have only a 70-foot projection distance, they should be spaced just as close together as is practicable without actually hampering the work of projection. This is necessary because any projector which has its lens off center with the screen center will, of course, be at an angle with the screen surface, or the optical axis of its optical train will anyhow, and the further it is off center the greater will the angle be.

As you all know, when the axis of projection is off center, either up or down, with the screen center, there will be distortion of the picture, and this effect is one-fourth greater when the lens is to one side of the screen center than when it is above or below it, because the picture is one-fourth wider than it is high. In this case a reduction in spacing is so important, assuming the picture to be of ordinary theatre size, probably about 18 feet wide, that I would reduce it to 3' 6", which would give us a total distance of 7' between lens centers of outside projectors.

Another thing I must direct attention to in this connection is that we must so place the center projector that its lens, rather than the projector as a whole, will be on a line with the screen center, sidewise. The Simplex, for example, must be so placed that its pedestal center will be 3 3/4" to the left of the screen center, in order to accomplish this.

Having thus located the center lens we have but to measure 3.5' to the left, and the same distance to the right to obtain the correct spacing and location for the lenses of the other two projectors. Having done this we may then compute exactly how much space will be left for other equipment, such as spots, etc., which we will find to be about 5' 6" from center of left hand M. P. projector to wall of room, and about 5' 3" from center of right hand M. P. projector to wall of room, in either of which spaces it will be impossible to place more than one projector (spot, etc.) without overcrowding, though if there is real need for two spot lamps they may be placed in the wider space, and, I believe, handled at least fairly well.

In the left hand space (5' 2 1/2" center of M. P. projector to wall) we may place a Brinkert effect projector, which may be used as a dissolving stereopticon, as well as for effects. But while I am on this subject let me remark that because of the projection room location the spots should be used only for floods, except only in special cases. I say this because I am of the opinion that spots should only be operated from extreme angles, such as from ceiling coves, through the ceiling, the upper parts of the proscenium, or from the stage itself. If a spot be operated from an extreme angle it will not spoil the illumination or other effects of the set, and only cover the actor, or other thing to be spotted (True, perhaps, but just the same the direction from whence the light comes has much to do with the effect on the object spotted. An actor, for example, spotted from above will look very differently than one spotted from in front. I personally don't know just how right or how wrong Brother Keuster may be in this. Ed.) Since the theatre is under construction these matters should have consideration. (True, but I think from a bit different angle than you have indicated. I think for some effects one must spot from in front, without much angle. What do the rest of you think about this matter? Ed.) I would have the spots equipped with colors, iris, etc.

We have now provided for three M. P. projectors, a Brinkert effects projector and one or two spots, the Brinkert also being available as a dissolving stereo, and while on the subject of spacing, considerable attention should be given to the planning of the ports, though to go into that detail is not required by the question.

The next point for consideration is the selection of the type of light source we will recommend, though it is very difficult to pass judgment unless we know what the auditorium lighting and decoration will be. However, knowing the projection distance, the size of the picture and the dimensions of the auditorium, we can form a pretty accurate judgment, and in my opinion a high grade reflector arc will give plenty of illumination, and do it with high efficiency. I would, therefore, recommend them, and the Powerlite, the Peerless and the Hallberg are all very well suited to the work. I would recommend one of them.

The optical end of the lay-out would be pretty terrible, because of the extremely short focal length projection lens the condition would demand. With a maximum viewing distance of 130 feet, the management, would hardly consider anything less than an 18-foot picture, and that, at 70 feet, would call for practically a 3.5 inch E. F. lens.

One thing which helps is that such a lens would have a very short working distance, hence we could get the light beam all into a lens of moderate diameter, and I believe a lens of that focal length could be produced which would give good results. I would give the Bausch and Lomb Optical Company the exact width picture desired, the exact projection distance and the kind of light source, asking that they do their best to give me lenses of a diameter sufficient to admit the entire beam of light from the aperture, and sharp definition all over the screen. I believe it could be done. Anyhow it is the best that could be done, unless we considered reducing the size of the picture. A 14-foot picture would enable us to use practically four inch E. F. lenses. On the whole I am inclined to think that would be better, because the added brightness of the picture would compensate for its smaller size insofar as has to do with visibility at 130 feet, but getting many exhibitors to agree with that view is not so easy.

The next item may or may not be judged as coming under the terms of the question. I think it does, and that is the wiring of the projection room and the service circuit for it.

I would recommend service circuit and circuit wires in accordance with the following: I would allow 100 amperes total for the Brinkert and at least 75 for each "spot." I would in fact provide capacity for 100 amperes for each spot because, as I have already said, they should be used mainly for flooding purposes, and that requires lots of current if it is to be effective. I would recommend capacity to permit of 125 amperes for each M. P. projector, or a total of 375 for the three. This because of the fact that some time in the future the light sources might be changed to high intensity. One never can tell, and it is much better to be safe than to be sorry and if we install only wires heavy enough to carry 30 amperes per lamp, or 90 for the three M. P. projectors, it would be a pretty costly proceeding to replace them with larger conductors and conduit were the change ever decided upon. It then is best to recommend wire capacity for the maximum current which will ever be required under any reasonably possible condition. This is especially true since the over-capacity wires will act to reduce voltage drop to an absolute minimum under present condition, and thus effect an immediate and constant, though relatively small saving in operation.

If the supply be A.C. we must recommend motor generators, and I would recommend the installation of two complete units, one suitable in capacity to operate with maximum efficiency at the reflector lamp amperage, and one of sufficient capacity to supply all the other equipment, PLUS the M. P. projector arc. This will permit of efficient operation, and will give reasonable assurance against serious trouble through breakdown of a motor generator.

True it would not permit of the operation of the Brinkert and other devices in case the big generator broke down, but the motion picture projection could go on uninterrupted if either set went bad, and the temporary stoppage of use of the other equipment by trouble with the big set is so remote; provided the set be given reasonable care, that I would regard it as negligible, though if it is desired one could arrange for their use with A.C. through rheostats. Personally, however, I would not recommend the installation of rheostats to take care of such a very remote and relatively unimportant contingency. The location of the motor generator sets is not mentioned in the question, but I would not recommend their installation in the projection room, though it might be done with upright Hertuer Transverters, insofar as concerns space. It would NOT be good practice, however. The sets would, of course, be so connected, through D.P.D.T. switches that the projector arcs could be supplied by either.

I would recommend lighting the projection room by suitable fixtures of the indirect type, so placed as to not be within the line of vision of the projectionist when projecting pictures. (I still maintain that the simplest and best method of lighting a projection room, unless the ceiling be very high, is to place the lights inside a suitable cove on the front wall, foot to a foot and a half from the ceiling, painting the interior of the cove and the ceiling immediately above it dead white. The room may thus be lighted at any desired intensity by having the lamps on two or three circuits, and the

There should be suitable placed outlets for extension cords, electric (magnetic meant, I think. Ed.) change-overs, for volt and ammeters and for speedometers, projector motors and outlets for lights over rewind table and work bench. I would recommend the installation of a telephone by means of which the manager's office, orchestra leader and stage—if one there be—may be communicated with, and a buzzer system for necessary signals from stage or orchestra. I would also request that the telephone be arranged for outside connection.

I would recommend the installation of suitable voltmeters, ammeters, speedometers, magnetic change-overs, three carbon and tool cabinets, 14 fifteen-inch reels, a 12-compartment film cabinet (preferably an American Film Safe), a good wall clock, preferably an electric clock synchronized with the other theatre clocks, pails for sand, fire extinguishers, two stools and a chair, a geared-down power rewinder, a hand driven rewinder, a rewind bench, suitable necessary tools, a clothes closet and one for supplies, suitable books and pads upon which to make and keep records.

The work bench, which, together with the clothes cabinets or closets, etc., must be in a room other than the projection room, must be equipped with a substantial combination vice and anvil. If there is space for a desk I would recommend its installation. There must, of course, be film cement, shears, etc., and the best projection room film splicer obtainable.

I have said I would recommend a motor driven rewinder, geared down. That is a concession, however, because I am personally opposed to motor driven rewinders. I firmly believe in the hand driven rewind, and an examination of the film after each showing. From experience I have found this to be the only sure method of preventing any possible stoppage of the show. I would suggest the installation of two hand driven rewinders, a splicer, a measuring machine, a blunt nose scissors and a suitable bottle for film cement.

I would also recommend the installation of suitable drawers for extra film, such as leaders and trailers, etc. I assume there will be a wash basin and toilet installed, and in its cabinet should be a first aid kit. Ventilation must be provided by suitable inlets for fresh air, and an exhaust capable of removing foul air and all smoke and gas in case of a film fire.

There, that is all I think of just now, Friend Richardson, but there is one item entirely outside the projection room or rooms which is just as important to projection results as is what has been named, viz.: the screen surface.

I have made a drawing, to scale, with dimensions as set forth in the question, to show just how I figured the correct type of screen surface, but to simplify matters I have drawn the seat rows in straight lines; also I have omitted the aisles. Examining the drawing we see that from the screen center to extreme side front seats the angle is 60 degrees (quite a lot more from either side to opposite side of screen. Ed.), and from the screen center to rear side seats is only 18 degrees.

Now if we divide the distance from front row to last row in half, we find the angle there is 29 degrees to the extreme side seats, or, to simplify calculations, say 30 degrees. If we examine the drawing we see that most of the light must be reflected within a 30 degree angle, because most of the seats are within that angle. (Umph! Brother Keuster, the management won't reduce the price on seats outside that angle, because of distortion and fade-away, will it? There is something to be said for your viewpoint on that, but I'd like to hear from others on that point. Viewed from one angle you propose to disregard the rights of the patrons in the relatively few seats in order to give the greater number improved results, and that's not such a poor argument, either. What do the rest of you think about that? Ed.)

Next let us go to the files and get the very latest information compiled for our editor by Lloyd A. Jones, of the Eastman Kodak Company research laboratories, to be found in May 8, 1926, issue of the Moving

Consulting table No. 2 therein, we find four types of surface which will give a high percentage of reflection. One is magnesium carbonate, which is the surface used for comparison in compiling the data. It has a 98 per cent. reflection power. That is to say, it reflects 98 per cent. of the total light incident thereon, but it is given an arbitrary 100 per cent. value for the purpose of the tests of other surfaces. The next highest reflection power is given by calendered cardboard. It has an 83 per cent. reflection value at the 30 degree angle. (Think Keuster means its diffusing power is such that it has that relative value at 30 degrees. Haven't the data he refers to here just now. It will be in the new Bluebook. Ed.)

The next is No. 24, which also has a reflective power of 83 at 30 angle. (Gosh! Wish I had the that dope by me. Ed.) It is sold under the trade name of Raven Single-tone. The text is surface No. 26, which has a reflective power of 82 at 30 degrees is the Raven Half-tone surface, and that completes the list of surfaces which reflect sufficient diffusive power, and yet reflect most of the light within the 30 degree angle.

The first two are not commercial surfaces. They cannot be had, so we must choose between the Raven Single-tone and Half-tone screens. (I cannot agree with that, Brother Keuster, because you have not considered the possible general results as between cheaply made, easily renewed surfaces, such as calsomine and paint, and expensive screens which, in the very nature of things will be used long after their reflective power has deteriorated to a very large extent. If you say you must choose between the two surfaces named, and calsomine or paint, then maybe. But anyhow I am very glad you have started this discussion, for if there is any one thing the average projectionist needs to study and discuss, it is screen surfaces. Ed.)

The Single-tone has a one per cent. higher reflective power than the Half-tone at a 30 degree angle, but if we now examine the 50 degree column of the same table we shall find that the Single-tone only reflects 35 per cent. of the light, whereas, the Half-tone reflects 76 per cent. of it.

I therefore would recommend the Half-tone screen. The first named would give more light within a narrow angle, but for the auditorium as a whole the latter is best.

There, gentlemen, whatever its shortcomings may be—or may not be—the arguments set forth by Brother Keuster are very distinctly to his credit. Some day exhibitors and supervisors of projection will wake up to the value of such men as Keuster—men who really study the business of projection. Keuster does not belong in a relatively small Brooklyn theatre. Men of his type should be advanced to positions in the best theatres, and when exhibitors and supervisors of projection finally wake up, as they will, to the high value such men represent, they will be in those theatres, too, and mark you well, that is not intended as a "slap" at any one, either, but just as a statement of straight fact.

Brother Budge of Brooklyn is another man of the right sort. He has not been so long in projection as some, but he studies it and strives to excel in his work. That is the kind of man who has real value.

There are right now many high grade projectionists in our big Broadway theatres (I use the term "Broadway theatre" to describe not only the theatres actually on the Great White Way, but those hundreds of other equally high class theatres in other cities), but also there are many men in the projection rooms of those theatres who have not advanced ten feet in technical projection knowledge in the past ten years, and I don't mean maybe, either. They belong to, and sooner or later will be relegated to, the great tribe of "Has Beens," unless they wake up and get exceedingly busy.

Unrivaled screen quality

The photographic superiority of Eastman Film—zealously safeguarded by Kodak Research Laboratory experts—naturally makes prints on Eastman Positive Film from negatives on Eastman Negative Film unrivaled in screen quality.

And, since the public appreciates screen quality, insistence on prints on Eastman Film will have a favorable box office reaction.

Prints on Eastman have the black-lettered identification “Eastman” and “Kodak” in the transparent margin. Look for it.

There isn't one exhibitor in a hundred but what will say that the public "shops for names" when picking motion picture entertainment.

To give you the "names" that mean bigger revenue, Roach is playing in each two reel "Star Comedy" actual feature stars. Agnes Ayres, Priscilla Dean, Mae Busch, Lillian Rich, Gertrude Astor, Matt Moore and Creighton Hale are among the most recent.

When you can get such names in sparkling, brilliant entertainment for the price of a two reel comedy, you've got a BUY.

New Music Tax Trouble Starts In the Dominion

Loew, Famous and Paper Victims of Suits

The Performing Right Society, Ltd., of Canada, with headquarters at Toronto, Ontario, has been taking legal action against various interests for alleged infringement of musical copyright which it claims to control.

The Society has asked for an injunction restraining Marcus Loew Theatres, Ltd., of Toronto, from playing in public any musical work or part thereof without consent of the plaintiff, and asks damages for alleged infringement in the playing of Massenet's "Elegie."

The Canadian Society has also sued Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, for an alleged infringement at the Toronto Regent Theatre. Evidence was presented at the Non-Jury Assizes, Toronto, but Justice Rose reserved judgment.

The Society has taken legal action against the Toronto Daily Star as well, alleging a violation of the society's rights by the broadcasting of certain music from the Star's radio station.

R. J. McAdam, manager of the Casino Theatre, Halifax, N. S., asked the Society to designate the cost of a license for that theatre, which has 1,034 seats, the admission price averaging 25 cents. The Casino was advised that the license fee, payable to the Society, would be $150 per year, this covering only the repertoire of the Society in Great Britain. It was intimated that more than half of the music played at the Casino is of United States origin.

Smalley Ill

William Smalley, owner of fifteen picture theatres in New York State, with headquarters in Coopers-town, is seriously ill with pneumonia. Mr. Smalley has not been in the best of health for several weeks, and a short time ago had his teeth removed in the hopes that he might feel better. He caught cold last week and this developed into pneumonia.

Bankers Plan Half a Billion Dollar Merger; Greatest Deal in Film History Nears Fruition

Denies Merger

In a statement to Moving Picture World, Joseph P. Kennedy, president of F. B. O., said:

"I have no knowledge of the merger and know nothing whatever about it until the article appeared in Variety."

Telegram Cuts Rates for Picture House Advertising

The New York newspapers engaged in an advertising war with radio interests, as exclusively described in Moving Picture World recently, are worried over the action of the Evening Telegram, now a Scripps-Howard paper, in permitting picture theatres to advertise at run-of-the-paper rates, 43 cents, under contract. Formerly the rate was 85 cents a line.

However, the newspapers won a point when the Westinghouse Company announced that all of its advertising, covering everything that it manufactures, will hereafter be put in the papers on the premise that they afford the greatest flexibility in advertising.

Launch Sales Drive

First National Pictures, Inc., under the guidance of Samuel Spring, secretary-treasurer and chairman of the sales cabinet, has completed plans for the launching of a sales drive.

Universal Gets New York Home; Takes Over Colony September 1

On September 1, Universal will enter the ranks of producers and distributors who have a theatre on Broadway. On that date Universal will take over the B. S. Moss Colony Theatre as a permanent home for its productions. Thus for the first time the company will be assured exploitation runs of length and advertising value for the entire New York territory.

The Colony will close in time for a thorough renovation and refinishing in order that "The Cat and the Canary" can open there on September 3.

Participants Are First National, Pathe, F. B. O., P. D. C., Keith-Albee, Stanley Company, West Coast, North American and Orpheum

By Sumner Smith

A ONE-HALF billion dollar merger of producing and distributing interests, also including several theatre circuits and vaudeville, is in the making. Rumors crystallized into apparent truth this week, despite attempts to conceal the facts. The control of the merger of these tremendously powerful interests will be in the hands of one of the very biggest men in the picture business, now with a company that will be a competitor of the great combine and considered one of the three real "brains" of that company.

The first gun in the merger was fired last week with the acquisition of control of First National by the Stanley Company of America. Now it develops that those who will participate in the latest and greatest merger are First National, Pathe, Film Booking Offices, Producers Distributing Corporation, the Keith-Albee circuit of vaudeville theatres, the Stanley Company, West Coast Theatres, North American Theatres and the Orpheum Circuit.

This brings to light the reason why the pending Pathe-Keith-P. D. C. merger, so widely discussed, has not reached fruition before this.

Abandon Production

Production of "The Roughneck Gentleman," a story of the Arctic regions planned as Richard Dix's next starring vehicle, to be directed by Elmer Clifton, has been abandoned, due to the shift of Paramount production from the East to the West Coast studios.

Latest rumors allege that the DuPont interests figure in the deal through their connection with Pathe, and look forward to a tremendous outlet for their raw film stock.

The bankers involved in the deal are J. P. Morgan & Co., Chase National Bank and Chase Securities and Hayden, Stone & Co.

It is difficult to predict when the merger will be completed. Film men place the date anywhere from June 1 to July 1. Hitches in the final negotiations are expected—E. F. Albee is likely to insist on maintenance of the Keith prestige and various officials will seek to prevent their individualities from being submerged—but the signs all point to an eventual smoothing (Continued on next page)

Reserve Action

The Kansas Senate has killed the bill to legalize Sunday shows, reversing its approval of last Saturday. The House has a bill to censor out all parts of a film "dramatizing any person as being under the influence of intoxicating liquor or partaking of the same." Miss Stella B. Haines, the only woman in the Legislature, sponsors the bill.

In the meantime, Universal, when it wanted New York representation, effected trading agreements with competing companies (Continued on next page)

Motion Picture Bills Still in Committee

Among bills of interest to the industry that are still tied up in committee at Albany, N. Y., and with the present session of the Legislature due to adjourn on March 25, are the Ryan bill providing that fire drills by theatre employees must take place twice a month under the supervision of the fire chief or fire marshal, and that an inspection of fire exits and fire-fighting facilities shall take place at the same time.

The Coughlin bill is also in committee and does not seem to have much chance. This bill would make it a misdemeanor to sell or give away a ticket to any show in excess of the seating capacity of the theatre. The bill carries a provision, however, that standing room tickets may be sold to a number determined by a local ordinance.

The Hackenburg bill abolishing censorship and transferring all books and records on July 1 to the Department of State is not being heard of and is still in committee. The same situation exists with the Greenberg bill placing employees of studios under the provisions of the workmen's compensation law.

Joins Pathe News

Louis C. de Rochemont has been appointed assistant editor of Pathe News, according to J. E. Storey, assistant general manager in charge of short subject production for Pathe. He brings to the pioneer newsreel a wealth of experience gained in the field of pictorial activity and in extensive travels. In fact, he has traveled in every continent on the globe, and during a long period of service with the navy covered 250,000 miles.

Henri Brunet (left) has been appointed head booker for Pathe Exchange, Inc. J. E. Cushman (right) is the new manager of the Statistical Department.

and placed some of its big films in their theatres. This was possible because Universal has a powerful hold on the theatre field in certain territories such as Nebraska, through the Hostettler circuit, and Northern New York, through the Schine circuit. In exchange for a New York booking Universal gave, say, Famous Players bookings over the Hostettler circuit.

The acquisition of the Colony Theatre alters the situation. Universal probably could use still another New York house to great advantage.

Music Tax Trouble

The first legal action brought by the Canadian Performing Right Society, Ltd., Toronto, for alleged infringement of musical copyright was dismissed by Justice Rose at Osgoode Hall, Toronto. This was the suit against Famous Players Canadian Corp. for $10,000 damages and for an injunction restraining the corporation from allowing the playing of certain music in its many theatres. The judgment also ordered the plaintiff to pay costs. Just what interpretation may be placed on this decision in relation to the other arguments is yet to be established.

Plan a Tremendous Film Merger

Naturally the chief saving through the combine would be the selling organization.

Each company could be very deftly fitted into its place in the combine. The big theatres would get big pictures from Cecil B. DeMille of P. D. C. and from First National. Shorts would come through Pathe and F. B. O. Pathe News would be used. Cheap pictures and westerns would be supplied by F. B. O. for the smaller houses.

Companies on the outside of this combine are Famous Players-Lasky, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Fox, Universal, Warner Bros., and United Artists. Talk of a merger between M-G-M and United Artists, recently denied by the Schencks, naturally will come to life again. Paramount and M-G-M are kindly disposed toward each other, but it is unlikely that either Adolph Zukor or Marcus Loew would consider merging with the other unless—there's always an "unless"—Mr. Loew's health, now a matter of conjecture, does not continue to improve.

Paramount and M-G-M certainly are not hostile toward each other. They worked together in the UFA deal and now meet for discussions on many points. Incidentally the UFA deal hasn't panned out as well as expected. Carl Laemmle, who thought he had it sewed up and found he hadn't, is well satisfied to be on the outside.

The striking feature of the half billion dollar merger is the theatre end. The West Coast will be dominated through West Coast Theatres and North American Theatres, and the Stanley Company, at the rate it is buying and building, may soon absolutely dominate the East. Its latest announcement is the acquisition of the Bradder-Pollock chain of seven in Newark, Hackensack and the Oranges. Similar announcements have been made almost daily.

Well, big business is in the movies.

Close For N. Y. and N. J.

The Big Three Film Exchange has closed a contract with Cranfield & Clarke, Inc., whereby they obtain exclusive rights for distribution of their entire output for the New York and New Jersey territories.

COMING and GOING

Maurice Silverstone, United Artists' general manager for the British Isles, with offices in London, arrived in New York this week for conferences with Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the Board of Directors, and Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president and general manager of foreign distribution. Mr. Silverstone will be in New York—his native city—for another two weeks, after which he will return to London.

Lee Marcus, general sales manager of F. B. O., returned this week from a trip through the South. He visited Washington, Charlotte, Atlanta, Jacksonville, New Orleans, Dallas, Memphis and Oklahoma City.

E. W. Hammons has gone to the West Coast on his annual visit to the studios producing for Educational. His visit this year is of particular interest because he will launch Educational in the production field following the recent consolidation of Educational's interests. He is expected to return to New York within three weeks.

Pat Campbell, Southern Division sales manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is now on a tour of the exchanges. He is expected to return to his home office desk on or about March 16.

Colvin W. Brown, vice-president of F. B. O., in charge of foreign distribution, sailed for New York on March 9 on the Aquitania. He will arrive in New York on March 15. During his foreign sojourn, which covered three months, Mr. Brown visited London, Berlin, Paris, Turin, Rome and Munich in the interests of foreign sales and distribution.

Albert Parker, director of "The Love of Sunya," and Pierre Bedard, production manager for Gloria Swanson, left for California this week.

Marshall Neilan and Blanche Sweet reached New York on Saturday and immediately started on a theatre orgy. The trip was made primarily to look at the plays and the screen pair lost no time in lining up their program of play-seeing.

J. G. Bachmann is scheduled to entrain for the East in about three weeks.

Howard C. Brown, treasurer of Colorart Pictures of Boston, will shortly sail for this country from South America, where he has been making colored scenics. He will arrive in about three weeks.

Zukor Sails Soon

Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky, will sail for Europe the latter part of this month or early in April for at least for a two months' tour of the Continent.

No announcement of his impending departure has been made and no details of the purpose of his trip are available.

Now With Fox

F. W. Murnau has signed a five-year contract to direct exclusively for Fox Films.

Kansas City Deal Closed

Negotiations have been completed in Kansas City for the tenth United Artists theatre of the announced chain of twenty pre-release theatres. Joseph M. Schenck announced that the circuit had taken over the Liberty Theatre, Main and Twelfth streets, that all but the four walls of the present structure will be torn out and an intimate 1,000-seat theatre will be constructed.

Appointment Confirmed

At a meeting of West Coast Theatres, Inc., in Los Angeles on March 5, the appointment of Harold B. Franklin as general manager was confirmed unanimously and his election as president of the corporation followed immediately. Mike Gore resigning the latter office to become chairman of the Board of Directors.

Fakers Playing Omaha

Fake space sellers for film companies, existent and non-existent, seem to be roaming the Omaha territory, and exhibitors and advertisers have been warned to be on the lookout for them.

Late Chicago News

Odor bombs were thrown at the new Palace Theatre of the Orpheum Circuit. The culprits made their escape.

It is reported that the Universal Sales Convention will be held here, May 1 to 4. Carl Laemmle is expected.

The Chicago exhibitors' first movie hall will be held at the new Stevens Hotel, May 4.

Work is starting on the new Cooney Loop theatre on Monroe street.

Universal Splits
Country Into Two Sales DivisionsKramer and Herbel Will Have Supervision

A comprehensive realignment of territories is announced in the Universal sales organization. The former three-division plan gives way to a two-division plan, by which the United States is divided for sales purposes into two main divisions, Eastern and Western, with the entire Canadian territory attached to the Eastern Division.

In this move, as announced by Lou B. Metzger, general sales manager for Universal, the sales directors now handling the Eastern and Western Divisions, Earl Kramer and H. M. Herbel, respectively, will handle the larger Eastern and Western Divisions. The new alignment came about through a request by Ralph B. Williams, sales director of the Southern Division under the three-division plan, that he be transferred to Atlanta with jurisdiction of the Southern territory. He will act as resident sales director and assistant to Earl Kramer.

Also, Dan Michalove, who has been supervising these Southern offices in addition to his work for the Universal Chain Theatres, has become so highly involved in Universal's rapidly extending theatre interests in the South that he wishes to devote his time exclusively to Universal theatres.

In addition to Williams, Kramer will have two other assistants, Clair Hague, general sales manager for Canada, and a newly appointed assistant sales director, Phil Dunas, who will have supervision over Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit and Pittsburgh.

Herbel, whose western territory is increased by all the former Southern exchanges west of the Mississippi, now has two assistant sales directors, D. S. Mitchell, who supervises the Rocky Mountain and West Coast exchanges, and Norman Truog, who has been handling the Missouri Valley group. A third assistant sales director will be appointed for the Western Division and a re-arrangement made in the local supervision of the exchanges east of the Rockies.

Bedard—Shirres

Mrs. Katharine Shirres, who will be remembered as a player in "Kid Boots" with Eddie Cantor, married Pierre Bedard, production manager for Gloria Swanson Productions, Inc., at Miss Swanson's Park Chambers apartments Monday afternoon. Marquis H. de la Falais was best man and Gloria Swanson maid of honor. Lois Wilson, S. L. Rothafel, Miss Beatrice Bedard and Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Bedard, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Allen Moore, and Mrs. Albert Parker were in the wedding party.

With Color Co.

Clarence Schottenfels, familiarly known as "Shotty," leaves Moving Picture World this week to become head of sales, advertising and publicity for United Color Pictures, Inc., of Irvington, N. Y. He is a veteran in the film business, having started with Carl Laemmle in the Imp company and worked under J. V. Ritchie with Reliance. Later he owned his own producing company, several exchanges and two theatres, and still later learned titling and the laboratory game with Louis Meyer of Craftsman Laboratories. The last seven years he's been on trade papers.

Buy Brooklyn Site

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has purchased a plot of ground containing 66,000 square feet, bounded by Flatbush avenue, Tilden avenue, East 22d street and Duryea place, formerly the property of the Brooklyn City Railroad Company, on which the corporation will build a picture theatre that will accommodate 4,000 and cost in the neighborhood of $1,500,000.

To Broadcast Minstrels

During the first annual Fox Fun Frolic and Dance the entire minstrel production, "A Night in Minstrelania," will be broadcast by Station WMCA on Friday, March 11, 9:30 to 10:30 P. M., directly from the grand ballroom of the McAlpin Hotel. The program has many other big features.

Held For Third Week

"Stark Love" will be held over for a third week at the Cameo Theatre. This week's business has given indication of equalling the first week. On Sunday the picture did $1,700, on Monday $900 and on Tuesday $1,700.

H. M. Warner Hits
Edison Statement
On Talk PicturesInventor "Unwarrantably
Prejudiced," He Says

Thomas Edison's belief that talking and singing picture devices have no future or any chance for sustained favor with the public is challenged by Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Bros.

"It is not a pleasant task to take issue with Mr. Edison," he said, "But in the interests of progress and justice, it is only fair to say that his statements are unwarrantably prejudiced, as he is undoubtedly unfamiliar with exactly what the latest device for synchronizing sound and action has accomplished."

Replying to the Edison statement that fifteen years ago he made a talking picture "but discarded it as having no permanent value," Mr. Warner pointed out that in those days the inventor did not have at his command many things which today go into the making of such a device.

"Surely Mr. Edison," he declared, "as an inventor and blazer of trails, should be in sympathy with this extremely satisfactory effort to add the last degree of perfection to the great agency of motion pictures which he helped give to the world. It is hard to believe that he dismisses with a nod any invention that will add to the entertainment and education of humanity."

Mr. Warner went on to prove that the new device "is not a freak novelty but a permanent improvement," citing its remarkable record since it was first exhibited on Broadway seven months ago. He also showed how the public's acceptance is national, not localized.

"Mr. Edison in one breath says he did not think much of the talking picture he invented," said Mr. Warner, "and in the next Mr. Edison took advantage of a Japanese gentleman by selling him the invention for $50,000 when, he says, $2,000 or $3,000 would have been a pretty fair price."

"As president of Warner Bros. I never would permit the Vitaphone to open to the public un-

The Tiffany offices will be located at Friedrich Strasse 218, Berlin, Germany. Jacques Haik has been appointed representative for Tiffany for Western Europe with offices at 63 Avenue des Champs Elysees, Paris.

Buy "Helen of Troy"

John Erskine's novel, "The Private Life of Helen of Troy," one of the best sellers of recent years, is to be transferred to the screen by First National. The title role will be assigned to Maria Corda, the European star. Lewis Stone and Mollie O'Day will be in the cast.

New Star Story

Robert Kane has bought "Dance Music," Clarence Buddington Kelland's Ladies' Home Journal serial, for $50,000 and will introduce a new star in it. She is Adrienne Truex, who has played minor roles. Production starts March 21. Miss Truex is now en route from Hollywood. Supporting her will be Ben Lyon and other well known players. The picture will be a special.

Handles Sales

Fred C. Quimby, newly appointed by M-G-M, to handle sales for the Short Subjects Department.

Cohen Appoints Two

Emanuel Cohen, head of Paramount's short feature production, has announced the appointment of L. S. Diamond as his assistant. Mr. Diamond was head of physical distribution and chairman of the efficiency committee of Pathe. He also was president of the Pathe Club. David Sussman will manage the short features laboratory.

Gibbons Joins Weeks

Another step in the expansion of his short features sales staff is announced by George W. Weeks in the appointment of Miles F. Gibbons as special representative of the department. Mr. Gibbons is well known among exhibitors of the country, having served as branch and sales manager of Pathe shorts.

A Fifty-Fifty Break

North Dakota exhibitors are mourning the demise of the bill which would have established county option for Sunday shows. The bill met its death in the Senate, where Lieutenant Governor Maddock cast the deciding vote against it after the senators had deadlocked, 23 to 23. The bill, which provided a 10 per cent. tax on theatre admissions, was killed in committee, however, so the exhibitors had something to smile about.

Buy Cartoon Strip

The purchase of world screen rights for all time to the newspaper comic strip entitled "Harold Teen" by Carl Ed is announced by John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production for First National Pictures, and M. C. Levee, general executive manager.

Using Slang Specialist

John W. (Jack) Conway, whose slang is a feature of the theatrical trade paper, "Variety," is writing the subtitles of Gilda Gray's Paramount starring picture, "Cabaret."

Dr. Matthew W. Sterling, California anthropologist, has returned with 25,000 feet of film from Dutch New Guinea, including scenes of pigmies and three other races of people. With him is Stanley A. Hedberg, former newspaperman and historian of the expedition. Hans H. Hoyte, pilot of their aeroplane, died of malaria. R. K. Peck of Elgin, Ill., was cameraman. Featuring their film are scenes of a wedding ceremony in which the first joint of the bride's index finger is chopped off.

Edison Refuted

til myself and associates were sure that it had been brought to a point where the pressing of a button would be followed by a satisfactory result. We refused very large offers in certain territories before we were sure of this. We were not and are not interested only in the money to be made through synchronization of music and action, but we sincerely believe we did a great piece of work for humanity when we brought about the success of this invention. Results have proved this, notwithstanding Mr. Edison's personal opinion."

Mr. Warner quoted W. C. Durant as saying in a published interview, "The thing that has the biggest possibilities of anything and everything I have come across in the last forty years is the Vitaphone."

Rogers Bill Defeated

The Rogers bill, which would have cut off six weeks from the daylight saving period in New York State, was defeated in the Assembly at Albany last week by a vote of 86 to 48. Representatives from the cities of the state opposed the bill, and both Democrats and Republicans from such sections voted against it in sufficient number to defeat the Republican vote from rural sections that had rallied to the support of the bill.

Ask Six Projectionists

The projectionists' unions in the Twin Cities has demanded that six men be employed to run the Vitaphone programs at both the Minneapolis State Theatre and the St. Paul Capitol, in which Finkelstein & Rubens has installed Vitaphone equipment. The M. P. T. O. is said to hold that the demand is unjust and that it will not surrender to the unions even though the presentation of Vitaphone programs is delayed.

Move Production

Gloria Swanson will go to Hollywood to produce her second independent United Artists picture. She announced her decision after signing a contract for an original scenario by Ouida Bergere for her next picture. It is two years since Miss Swanson has made a film in Hollywood.

Bray Begins Suit

The Bray-Hurd Process Company, Inc., owners of patents under which animated cartoons are made, has started to serve papers on all producers deemed to be infringing on their patents. These companies include many of the best-known producers of this type of short subject. It is claimed that the only companies now licensed under these patents are the Bray-Hurd interests and Fables Pictures, Inc., producers of Aesop's Film Fables, the last-named having secured a license in September, 1926, after the suit brought against them had been settled out of court.

New Children's Bill

Under the provisions of a bill introduced in the New York State Legislature this week by Senator B. Roger Wales of Binghamton, a person who, without authorization of a parent or a guardian, either accompanies or assists a child under 16 years of age to gain admission to a picture theatre would be guilty of a misdemeanor. The bill is intended by its introducer to put a stop to the practice of children standing in front of a theatre and soliciting anyone who may come along for the privilege of taking them into the house.

Goulden Forms New Co.

Louis B. Goulden, president and general manager of the Goulden-Feldman Theatres, Inc., of Indianapolis, which controls eight houses in that territory, has formed a new operating company, the Fountain Square Theatres Corp., with the following officers: Louis B. Goulden, president and general manager; A. H. Feldman, vice-president; Isaac F. Nier, vice-president; Ben Sagalowski, secretary, and Morris Horwitz, treasurer. A long lease has been obtained on the Fountain Square Theatre and Dance Hall to be erected at Prospect and Shelby streets.

New Trouble Over Children

The Albany Humane Society is still at work visiting the picture theatres in Albany, N. Y., in an effort to nab exhibitors who admit unaccompanied children under 16 years of age. Julius Berinstein, owner of the Colonial, was apprehended and is due to appear in police court on March 11 for a hearing. Abe Stone, another exhibitor, owner of the Arbor Hill Theatre, was in police court during the past week and pleaded not guilty to the charge preferred by the Humane Society. He also will have a hearing.

Gets New M-G-M Contract

Agnes Christine Johnston, for several years a member of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer scenario staff, has been given a new contract with that organization. She will write a number of original stories for screen production, as well as adapt the stories of other authors. Miss Johnston recently returned to California from an extended vacation abroad.

Foreign News

Fifteen million marks, it is said, are to be granted by the German Government as a subsidy to the film industry. The Ministry of Economics has put the subsidy through in principle and it remains to be passed through the Reichstag. The distribution is planned along such lines as, for instance: 10,000,000 for the subsidizing of the Ufa Company (who claim to turn out 80 per cent. of the productions in the whole industry in Germany), leaving 5,000,000 of the total for the whole of the rest of the industry, with special consideration for the Deulig Company (Mr. Hugenberg) on account of its business with foreign countries.

From another point of view it is stated that the Central Party in the German Parliament would oppose the subsidy being passed by a committee debate, and would demand a full parliamentary debate on the question of such a subsidy, while at the same time the one-sided political tendencies of Ufa would have a strong bearing on the passage of such a bill. The statement that Ufa turns out 80 per cent. of the whole production is not supported by other producers. The desire of the government appears to be to furnish film firms with export credits. In political circles, also, reference is made to the latest "Kultur" films of Ufa.

The titles of latest films from the French studios are:

"The Enchanted Isle," by Henry Roussel. Jean de Merly. Leads: Rolla Norman, Mme. Forzanne, Gaston Jacquet. "Florine, the Flower of Valais." Mr. Aubert has exclusivity. "Joan of Arc." Just begun. M. Natan Studios. "Chopin." To be made shortly. "Belphegor." Produced by Films de France. Best detective film to date. "La Vestale du Gange." Just finished Joinville studios. "Devil May Care." Just finished. Joinville, for Films de France. "The Cross." To be made shortly. "Kiss Me Quick." Just being finished.

Mr. Osso, general manager for France of Paramount, has just gone to Egypt to study the possibilities of extending the field of action to Egypt as well as to Turkey.

Last Minute News Flashes

The deal is all set for Warner Bros. to sign for the purchase of the Cosmopolitan Studios over the week-end. It will be used for the production of Vitaphone. All equipment has been bought. H. M. Warner and E. B. Hatrick both leave for the Coast this week-end. No more big studios are available in the East to independent producers. "Bob" Kane, who starts "Dance Magic" at the Cosmopolitan next week, probably will be allowed to complete it there, and perhaps another picture.

Kennedy to Open Screen Lectures at Harvard Soon

First Date Is March 14, Hays Talks 15th

The Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration announces that March 14 will inaugurate the series of lectures and discussions by leaders in the motion picture industry which will form an integral part of its curriculum in the course in Business Policy for the second-half-year.

This series will be given under the direction of Joseph P. Kennedy, Harvard '12, president of F. B. O. The first address, "Introduction To Discussions On Motion Picture Industry," will be delivered by Mr. Kennedy on March 14, and on March 15 Mr. Kennedy will introduce Will H. Hays, who will speak on "The Motion Picture Industry."

The rest of the schedule follows:

March 17, Jesse Lasky, "Production Management Problems"; March 19, Adolph Zukor, "Executive Management"; March 22, S. R. Kent, "Distribution"; March 24, R. H. Cochrane, "Advertising and Exploitation"; March 26, Dr. A. H. Giannini, "Finance"; March 29, William Fox, "Foreign Development"; March 30, Marcus Loew, "Theatre Management"; March 31, H. M. Warner, "New Developments in Motion Pictures"; April 2, J. P. Kennedy, "The Future of the Industry."

The lectures will run about fifty minutes each.

Although Cecil B. De Mille and Milton Sills were previously scheduled to speak with the others, they have been unable to get away from the West Coast in time to be included in the above schedule. They will, in all probability, deliver their lectures in the second or fourth week in April. Cecil De Mille will talk on motion picture directing, while Milton Sills will concentrate on motion picture acting.

Brill Joins Tiffany

General Sales Manager Ed. J. Smith of Tiffany Productions, Inc., has appointed Dave Brill sales manager of the New York Tiffany exchange in charge of feature productions. Ben Schwartz becomes office manager and will be in charge of the Short Subjects Department.

Colleen Moore, First National star, making the longest telephone call in history. From the studio at Burbank, California, she telephoned J. Franklin Brockliss, managing director in the British Isles, making first public call over this new service.

Cry of Bribe Raised By Missouri Lawmakers

Uproaring shouts of bribe money and graft were heard in the Missouri Legislature last week. Although the rumors pertained to several pending bills before the Legislature, the bulk of interest was directed at the 10 per cent. amusement tax bill, which has been passed by the house and now is pending in the senate.

Theatre owners and others opposing the measure denied any sum of money was being raised for lobby purposes.

Norma Begins Work

Norma Talmadge began work this week on "The Dove," her first United Artists Picture, under the direction of Roland West, at the United Artists Studio, Hollywood. Gilbert Roland is leading man.

P. D. C. has taken the Gaiety Theatre, Broadway and 46th street, New York, on a lease beginning April 10 and will present there on the evening of April 15 the premiere of Cecil B. De Mille's "The King of Kings," from a story by Jeanie Macpherson. Dr. Riesenfeld is in the midst of orchestration John C. Flinn, vice-president and general manager, now in Los Angeles, will return to New York the third week of March.

Our Stock Market

By ERVIN L. HALL

Merger programs are absorbing the attention of industrial leaders in every branch. Executives of the picture industry are more than ever occupied in planning important consolidations. The present administration, Congress, the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, if they do not encourage, certainly do not frown upon these various merger programs. Efficiency in operation and increase in earnings should result. Some of the common stocks of picture corporations, therefore, afford opportunities for speculators. Conservative investors also may find in the moving picture industry securities of merit in bonds and preferred stocks.

WARNER BROTHERS PICTURES. Earnings have been falling off during the past year and the quotations for both the A and B stocks have suffered marked recessions. Within the last few days, however, prospects look a little brighter. The company is making Vitaphone installations at the rate of about five a week. Before the year is up they expect to have it installed in 300 theatres. The company receives a royalty of 10 cents per seat from theatres in which the Vitaphone is installed. Consequently, earnings should increase. It is conjectural as to whether or not the Vitaphone will be a factor of lasting benefit to the company, but there should be for the rest of the year such an impetus to business as would justify hope of the stock, now quoted very low, attaining higher levels.

LOEW'S INC., DEBENTURE 6s of 1941. These bonds are a direct obligation on the company and are a senior capital issue. They bear a good rating but the interesting feature is the detachable warrants entitling the bondholder to purchase the stock of the company on the basis of five shares for each $1,000 bond, at $55 per share, any time before April 2, 1931. As the stock is now selling around 57 and ought to go much higher this year, the opportunity afforded is obvious to the investor.

EDUCATIONAL PICTURES 8% PREFERRED. Selling at 100. Earnings for the past three years are more than 3 1/4 times the dividend requirements on this preferred stock issue. There is no reason why the earnings should not continue to increase. The yield is above the average and the stock carries warrants entitling the holder up to Feb. 2, 1932, to purchase common stock at $35 a share at the rate of one share of common for each share of preferred—another advantage.

DIVIDENDS

Motion Picture Capital Corp. quarterly of 25 cents on common, payable March 15 to holders of record March 11 and on the preferred a quarterly of 2 per cent payable April 15 to holders of record April 1. International Projector quarterly of $1.75 on Preferred and 25 cents on common payable April 1.

Universal Pictures Co. quarterly of 2 per cent on 8 per cent First Preferred payable April 1 to holders of record March 21.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD has been telling the trade for the past three years that it was the leader in this field.

It was.

No amount of bunkum can down that fact.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD tells the trade now that its leadership in exhibitor circulation and general purchasing power is more solid than ever.

The Audit Bureau of Circulations in its audit just completed establishes our claim of 7,337 paid exhibitor circulation.

This---by far the largest A. B. C. verified exhibitor circulation of any trade paper in the field---is exactly what MOVING PICTURE WORLD sells its advertisers.

AS FINAL EVIDENCE

The CHALMERS PUBLISHING COMPANY, for the three year period referred to above, and in the future, guarantees to rebate on a percentage basis any money that any advertiser spent or spends in MOVING PICTURE WORLD whenever the Audit Bureau of Circulations shows us to have less paid exhibitor circulation than we claim in our own Publisher's Statements.

CHALMERS PUBLISHING COMPANY.

It's a Damned Hard Road to Travel

Undeveloped Opportunity

AT a luncheon last week the trade paper editors were asked to judge the entries in the last Laugh Month competition for the best campaign. The exhibits were interesting, but the outstanding point was that few of them submitted a Laugh Month campaign. The bulk of the entries had to do with the putting over of a single special comedy program during that period. Some of these programs ran for a week; some only for a half week. Very few of the competitors made the fullest use of the opportunity in which time, money and intelligent effort had been liberally expended.

This is akin to smoking an inch of an expensive cigar and throwing the remainder in the gutter. One exhibitor did even worse than that. He figuratively cut off all but the last inch and a half and smoked that, for he did not launch his campaign until the month was drawing to a close.

The idea of Laugh Month was to hold up business in the slump which in most localities seems to follow the gaieties of the Christmas season. Most sections suffer from a drop in business the first two or three weeks in January. For this reason, January was picked for Laugh Month. The usual takings could not be had through the presentation of the usual programs. Stress on the comedy; the natural reaction to any special effort was to be used to build business to normal or beyond.

The underlying idea was that it would not only help business in a dull period, but that it would create an interest in the shorts that would extend far beyond the period, just as Greater Movie Season in August is supposed to get the pictures over to a good start for the entire season.

And it was significant that practically only three real campaigns were submitted, materially reducing the labor of the judges. The real difficulty lay in properly placing the next seven. Outside of the three leaders, the campaigns dropped surprisingly.

Yet perhaps "surprisingly" is not the proper word, for exhibitors seldom make the fullest use of any aid given them by the production companies. They do not develop their business to the fullest extent merely because they do not seem to realize that the more they do, the more they get.

This does not mean, of course, that every change of program should be put over with a flourish of trumpets. It does mean that a large majority of exhibitors are not fully awake to their advantages. We never yet have judged such a contest where, in our estimation, the results showed an adequate return on the time and money invested by the producer for the exhibitor benefit.

Publicity is a Fine Art, But—

*He Gets More Knocks,
Than Pats on the Back—
His Responsibilities Are Great, His Duties Onerous*

By

Merritt Crawford

*But His Pay Check Is the Smallest of All the Important Executives—
Why Is That?*

IS motion picture publicity a profession, just a job, or a disease?

A quick check-up of the field, looking over the men who hold the important publicity positions in this industry and considering their manifest and manifold abilities from all angles, seems to indicate that it is all three.

Film publicity, in its broadest and most inclusive sense, is intensive, highly specialized work. It requires an unusual variety of initiative, creative ability and executive and administrative talent in the top hole positions at least, such as is required in no other branch of the motion picture business. Exceptions noted, of course, are the rubber stamps who now and then edge their way into big jobs.

Yet, for some obscure reason, seemingly, it is the least considered of all the important jobs which have to be filled in carrying on the complex business of making and selling motion pictures. Certainly, it is the least rewarded.

The highest paid publicity director seldom gets as much in a month as the average film director gets in a week. His weekly stipend is put in the shade by the salary check given to even the lowest paid directors employed by any of the big companies.

The film director has one picture at a time to worry about. The publicity director is responsible—and importantly so—for the success of all the pictures made by his company, whose directors may number a dozen or more. His is the job to bolster up the weak ones, ballyhoo the lemons and give thanks for the occasional "natural" that comes along, because it gives him a chance for a much needed night's rest.

In between he has to battle to keep other departments from piling some of their "overhead" on his department, for the publicity end, being the only part of most film organizations which does not have to show a profit at the end of the year, outside of the office and bookkeeping divisions, is regarded by the other departments as a soft and easy mark on which to shift figures from their own cost sheets.

On the other hand, as noted, the film director has only one picture to worry about at a time. And he has plenty of assistants for alibi and other purposes. If perchance he makes a "flop," he blithely passes on eighty-six per cent. of the blame for the film's failure to various causes, besides himself, including the publicity and exploitation department, and merrily goes on to make his next picture, often at a raise in salary.

If a picture happens to be "box office" the share which the publicity manager may have had in augmenting its attraction value is liberally discounted. For the publicity man to get any recognition, let alone praise or an increased salary check, is rarer than a January day in June.

Either way the publicity man is the goat.

At all times, the director of publicity sits

between the deep sea and the devil, the one being the temperamental production department and the other the high powered sales organization. He gets it going and coming and gets it good. On top of him, right on his collar, as it were, sits the "main squeeze," the all-knowing, all-seeing boss of the works.

When there comes a lull, and sometimes, when there cometh not a lull in the pressure of the publicity department's routine, it is frequently the pleasant duty of the publicist to proclaim for the nth time to an eagerly awaiting world, the big boss's greatness and his inspired plans for remoulding the industry nearer to the heart's desire.

Take it all around, it may be seen, that the job of the chief publicity executive in any sizable film company is no sinecure any way you look at it.

I have heard some of our leading film magnates freely assert that the publicity end of their business represented at least fifty per cent. of the whole. Upon its proper functioning and its meeting all the sudden, widely variant demands upon it, capably and without delay, largely depends the company's financial success. It furnishes the ammunition for the sales department's pot hunters to shoot with, the inspirational "bushwa" for the production department's ego.

The domain of the publicity director is the keystone of the arch—if it is not the arch itself—between the production and the sales department, reinforcing and amplifying the work of both, and essential to the successful operation of either. It is also the bridge which carries the company's product into the theatres, without which the production and sales departments would function more or less in vain.

No wonder that the big chiefs of all companies watch their publicity departments with jealousy and unremitting care. They need to. Yet the instant that retrenchment becomes necessary for a company the publicity department is first to suffer.

To slash production overhead is a sign of weakness, of cheapening product, which may have a bad reaction on exhibitor confidence. So it is never done, except in direst extremity. To radically reduce the sales force, also, unless the stress is desperate, is a policy seldom carried out. But the publicity, advertising and exploitation department—poof! A publicity director is supposed to function quite as well with a half or quarter of his organization as with his full staff.

Strange to say, in most cases he seems to do so. But the really astonishing thing about the whole matter is how the Class A publicity executives, who might be described as the spinal cord, if not the brains, of the industry, seem to like it. At any rate they make no effort (with occasional rare exceptions) to break away and seek other activities in the industry for which their training and experience pre-eminently fit them. And they make no effort to connect with the production end, where their knowledge of box office values and their writing and creative talents would command far greater financial rewards. In most cases they grin and bear it—and stay put.

The big boss of any company is about the last one who would give his publicity director an opening in his production or in his scenario or titling department. He isn't willing to take a chance. Good publicity men are hard to find, whereas he can get a director or a scenarist offhand.

Which is one of the peculiarities of this industry. When a man makes good in a particular job, this being largely a business of specialists, unless he knows enough to organize himself out of it, he stays there. The more valuable he becomes in it, the more certain he is to stay where he is and not have a Chinaman's chance for advancement. He can only die or get fired to get out of it. Unless the company busts. And it won't if he is really a good publicity man.

Probably one reason why the average good publicity man stays in his more or less lean pasture, instead of climbing the fence into the fat lands of production, is because he is more of a newspaper man than a motion picture product. He is loyal, conscientious, fairly modest and not particularly temperamental. If he were more temperamental he would get farther.

THE SUBSTITUTE by EPES W. SARGENT.

WHEN the laugh insurance policy brought Hank Johnson an extra $250 on "For Heaven's Sake" he wrote a memorandum on the back part of his mind to get back of the next Lloyd comedy he played at the Grand Palace, and he made an additional note to the effect that the ambulance stunt seemed to be the best bet.

That is why Hank got a hustle on as soon as he booked in "The Kid Brother." Also it was why he had given a special matinee a couple of months before, when the Samaritan Hospital had been conducting a drive for funds. Hank knew that he presently would want the Samaritan to be good to him.

It was a little difficult to get the idea through the head of the Superintendent, who knew much more about emergency cases than exploitation. Hank told his story, retold it in words of one syllable and then drew diagrams. Somehow the Superintendent seemed to get the idea that Hank wanted to beat up a man to advertise a funny picture at the Grand Palace and then turn him over to the hospital for repairs. The best Hank could do was drive it through the other's dense head that no violence would be used.

This got him permission to work the stunt if Dr. Hartley, the interne, could understand and would approve the idea.

Hartley was easier. He was younger. He liked the pictures. And he appreciated the season pass Hank used instead of a card of introduction.

"It's dead open and shut," Hank explained. "All I want you to do is to say 'Honest' when I tell the lie."

"I'll dig up a man with a big laugh and have him at the theatre for the opening matinee. There won't be many on Monday afternoon."

"Along about the second reel this guy starts to laugh. Of course he's been laughing from the start, but now he's run the pressure up and the orchestra gets discouraged and quits playing. He's beating them out."

"I tell him to shut up or get out, and that only makes him laugh a little harder. When he falls out of his seat I put in a call for you. You take him to the hospital, keep him there a while, make the proper records, and when the newspaper boys ask about it, there it is in black and white."

"That sounds simple enough," agreed the interne. "What do you think about it, Pat?"

he added, turning to his driver, who had been sitting silent and glum through the interview.

"Jake with me," responded Pat, "but look here. Pick out a skinny guy, will you. I got the rheumatism in my left arm something fierce. Get a nice thin guy we can snake up the aisle easy."

Hank promised, and he kept his word. Only a few days before a man had asked for work as a ballyhoo, explaining that he was a circus clown in the summer time. "I used to be the Living Skeleton," he had added with a sign for past glories, "but my fool wife made me take a tonic and it fattened me up. I weigh 120 pounds now and I have to be a Joey."

Hank outlined the idea, conducted an impromptu rehearsal, swore the man to secrecy and telephoned Dr. Hartley that he had a 120-pound man on the job. It looked like the perfect stunt.

It did not look so good Monday noon. The former living skeleton had been warned not to come around to the office, but to purchase a ticket and go in as a regular patron, but Hank hung around the entrance to make sure he went in.

And he didn't go in. By the time the comedy went on Hank was in despair, and the perspiration beaded his face and wilted his collar. Even the roars of delighted laughter that came through the doors did not cheer him up much. At every gag there would be the instantaneous burst of laughter that assures the experienced manager the comedy is going over. There was one laugh, shriller and louder than the others, but it was a woman's voice, and the skeleton had a 300-pound bass voice in a 120-pound frame.

But this woman was good. With each recurrent gag her voice rose to a hitch pitch. Hank edged down the side aisle to locate the laughter, and shuddered, as in the dim light he traced it to a woman who looked as though she might weigh more than 300. Even as he mentally prayed that nothing would happen to her, the woman gave one scream that excelled all her previous efforts and slid out of the narrow confines of her seat onto the carpeted aisle.

The house was in an uproar as she lay on her back, still laughing hysterically, and a well-trained usher, not waiting for instructions from the frantic manager, turned in the ambulance call.

Hartley and Pat were in the hospital garage, all ready to go, and it was only a minute or two before the white suit of the interne loomed at the head of the aisle. He started as he saw his patient, but Hank managed to whisper, "My man fell down. This case is on the level, Doc."

Hartley signed to the driver to bring in the stretcher, and the old man came down the aisle breathing profanity and vengeance. It took five men to load the hysterical woman onto the stretcher and eight were required to aid her slow progress up the narrow aisle.

Now and then she would pause a moment to regain her breath, but only to break into a fresh outburst of laughter. Out on the sidewalk the pavement was packed by the late luncheon crowd, and wild rumors ran through the gathering, the report gaining the greatest favor running to the effect that a woman had discovered her husband with another woman and had carved her rival literally to pieces. Certainly the shrieks coming from the theatre seemed to justify the report, and an awed hush fell on the crowd as the panting bearers staggered out of the lobby and with infinite difficulty loaded the elephantine mass into the waiting ambulance.

"Better come along," suggested Hartley to the manager. "This looks serious."

Hank nodded and climbed to the seat with the doctor as the bell clanged and the ambulance started for the hospital with its still hysterical load.

It was not until they reached the hospital garage that the laughter abruptly stopped and the woman half sat up. "I can stop now, can't I?" she demanded. Hank's eyes popped.

"I wish you had stopped before you began," he said. "What's the big idea?"

"Jim was sick," she explained. "He's always overeating and getting the stomach ache. He didn't want to disappoint you, so he sent me. We were in the same side show. We can't afford to lose that $25 you promised."

Pat, still rubbing his rheumatic shoulder, favored Hank with a glance so malevolent that Hank hurriedly skinned a ten spot from his roll.

"That's all right, Boss," Pat said, as he slipped the sawbuck into his pocket. "But the next time you pull a stunt, for the love of Mike call in the piano mover. That dame's out of my class."

The Patron Buys Your Theatre

His Ticket Is a Bill of Sale That Entitles Him to Enter, Possess, and Enjoy Possession, So It's a Manager's Job to Make Contract Good

By James D. Kennedy

Manager, Apollo Theatre, Indianapolis, Indiana

HALF A DOLLAR is an absurdly low price to pay for a theatre; what would you say to buying a theatre for a dime? Whether the price is two dollars or two bits that a patron slides across to your cashier, it gives him a ticket that is a deed to the theatre for the time he is there, gives him the right to demand respect and courtesy, to exact the utmost in comfort and convenience. To see that he gets everything that he buys is the job of the manager.

I have been in the theatre business for the past nineteen years and I have always found it to be a great game. The manager has to be on his toes if he expects to keep up with the rapid advancement that the industry is making; and the patrons' requirements are right on the front line of this advance, don't forget that.

The first purpose of the theatre manager is, naturally, to entertain the patrons. To this end he selects his pictures, environs them with music and gives them adequate projection, chooses whatever surrounding program his theatre facilities will permit. The program that you offer is far more important than anything else in your theatre for it is the program that the temporary owner of the house has purchased his ticket to enjoy.

It is the picture that draws the crowds and the wise manager will gamble as little as possible on poor pictures, and will make every effort to obtain winners that are a hundred per cent.

Although the attracting of a large patronage is the first aim of the theatre, it is by no means the end of the manager's effort. To give these temporary purchasers of the theatre's facilities for entertainment the urge to return for further delights is quite as important.

If you give the patron full deed and title to what he buys, you will create within him the good will that brings him back, again and again.

James D. Kennedy

You may not always be able to guarantee the reaction of an audience to a picture, but the reaction of the audience to your theatre is well within your control. It is exactly the reaction that you want it to be, because it depends entirely on the personality of your theatre. Patrons like to buy a theatre that they like to be in, and this liking depends upon the things with which you stimulate good will.

Ventilation is of great importance to the theatre. It is not going too far to say it is the very breath of life of the theatre. Ventilation should be looked after by one, dependable employee, trained to see that temperature and freshness of the air are right, and able to maintain them so by reason of a clear understanding of the importance of his duties.

If ventilation is the breath of life, projection is the heart of the entertainment. The patron isn't coming back to buy in again on a theatre with a bad heart.

Music, of course, is of utmost importance and that this should be not only the best possible but, as well, the most exactly tuned to the mood of your entertainment is well understood.

The personality of the theatre is a powerful factor in patronage building. Keep the personality of the house up to the standard by changing the lighting effect and the decoration so that the theatre will have a new appearance, appeal to the patron as always fresh and inviting.

The employees contribute vastly to the personality of your theatre. Avoid grouches and that type, choose for tranquility and good nature.

At the Apollo everything runs on an exact schedule and every employee is furnished with a schedule showing what is going on or what will go on at a certain time.

My employees are carefully trained to be, and are always considerate of the rights of our patrons. They never argue with patrons under any circumstances, remembering at all times that the theatre is operated primarily for the benefit of these people who have, in a way, become their bosses. They are always cognizant of the truth that without the patron there could be no Apollo.

And they are made to realize, too, that once a sharp word is spoken or ill temper is shown to a patron, he will leave your theatre and not all the apologies or kindnesses of the entire staff can atone for the discourtesy of one careless employee.

It is emphatically urged that all managers remember that when a patron buys a ticket at the box office he becomes the guest of your theatre, looking at it from another angle, and it is up to you to make him feel that he is a guest and a welcome one, by showing him every courtesy possible.

Dr. Shallenberger's New Company

BIG BUSINESS has been heavily interested in motion pictures for a long time, but it is only in recent months and after several years of considerable grief which tended to make it wary, that Big Business has really succeeded in taking the measure of this industry.

IT has been evident from the first that the great financial interests and banking groups, which have underwritten motion picture activities and to an ever increasing extent directed and controlled them, once they were fully in the saddle would bring about many radical changes in the contour of the industry.

INDICATIONS are that this day has at last arrived and the era when a single individual or a small group, through showmanly genius or sheer opportunism, could build up a great film organization, is now gone forever.

BIG BUSINESS demands economy of operation, and efficient functioning all along the line, such as has not hitherto been possible in this rapidly growing industry under the highly competitive conditions which have prevailed and which must continue to exist as long as the motion picture business remains as individualistic as it has been.

BIG BUSINESS obtains its results either by a process of elimination of the unfit, or by bringing into harmonious relationship competitive and frequently mutually destructive elements under a uniform policy which operates for the best interests of all.

ECONOMIC conditions in the industry have steadily forced the issue, now seemingly about to be realized, with the result that there have been mergers almost without end and interlocking combinations of producer-distributor groups and theatre-holding companies, all bent on securing some solution of the mounting costs of operation and obtaining a strategic advantage over other competitors.

IT has been a question of the survival of the fittest, with big combinations and alliances matching other big groups, but with no single company and its subsidiaries actually dominating and overshadowing the whole field.

FROM the viewpoint of the banking interests, however, only temporary benefits have been derived from all these concentrations and now apparently we are about to see a merger, compared to which all former mergers are but trifles, and which will be to the motion picture industry what the great United States Steel Corporation was to the steel industry when it was first formed.

A HALF billion dollar corporation, bringing together four or perhaps five of the big national producing-distributing organizations and including theatre interests blanketing the country from Coast to Coast, which now control upwards of a thousand theatres, most of them of first run class, although handling different types of pictures, is soon to be an accomplished fact.

THAT it will be completed within the next sixty days seems to be the general opinion in Wall Street circles, although this seems none too long a time to perfect and iron out the countless details inevitable in a gigantic combine of this kind when so many big interests require to be considered.

THE next few months are surely going to be important ones in this industry.

NEWSPAPERS that the N. Y. Evening Telegram has withdrawn from the stand taken by other New York newspapers and has signed contracts admitting motion picture advertisers to the use of its pages on a run of paper basis, instead of the higher amusement directory rate, is distinctly encouraging to all who wish to see a closer co-operation between the motion picture and the press for their mutual advantage.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD has consistently campaigned for this change of rate, but the Telegram's action is a distinct feather in the cap of H. M. Newman, publisher of The Fourth Estate, the newspaper's trade paper, who has steadily advocated in his columns a broader and more intelligent consideration of an advertising precedent, which ought to have been obsolete long ago, and which is operating to the injury of both the newspapers and the film theatres.

H. A. GUINZBERG, treasurer of the Federation for the Support of Jewish Philanthropic Societies, furnishes some interesting figures on the splendid work this great organization is doing and the progress which it has made during ten years.

AMOUNTS pledged have increased year by year from $2,370,877 in 1917 to more than $4,720,000 in 1926, while the percentage of money pledged, but unpaid, has declined from 14 per cent. the first year to 7.1 per cent. in 1926.

DURING the ten-year period more than $30,000,000—truly a stupendous sum—has been subscribed, surely a splendid tribute to the management of the Federation and the generosity of its supporters.

ANNOUNCEMENT that Producers Distributing Co. has leased the Gaiety Theatre for Cecil B. DeMille's "King of Kings," which is to have its premiere about April 15, reminds us that the motion picture season at last is in full swing, even if the Roxy opening had not been sufficient to do so.

WITH the greatest motion picture theatre and what has been heralded as the greatest motion picture ever produced opening in New York barely a month apart the season promises to be an interesting one.

DR. W. E. SHALLENBERGER and his newly formed company, Plaza Pictures, Inc., will be warmly welcomed by all men of good will in the industry.

A GOOD friend, a square shooter, and invariably constructive and progressive in his ideas, Dr. Shallenberger's is a personality such as we have all too few of in the film business.

MAY he and his new company, Plaza Pictures, Inc., which by the way is a name distinctly suggestive of class and quality, have a full measure of success.

WILL THE SCALPERS SCALP THE MOVIES?

By

Sumner Smith

Broadway Pictures May Attract the Agencies As Well As Legitimate Shows and Much May Happen If They Do

WILL the decision of the United States Supreme Court allowing ticket scalpers to fix charges at will have any effect upon motion pictures? It seems a far cry from the usual activities of the scalper, who has made his bank roll out of legitimate shows, to motion pictures. Yet, now that the "movies" are, even in New York, drawing heavily upon legitimate theatre patronage, it is not beyond the range of comprehension.

"Abie's Irish Rose" shows the way to all shows in theatre attendance, but "The Big Parade" looms up importantly as third in the list of great successes and threatens to eclipse even "Abie" in the matter of box office receipts. Why shouldn't the ticket agencies become interested in really big pictures, and seek to get a cut in the profits?

Agencies Already Have Underwritten Pictures

Furthermore, the agencies have several times underwritten a motion picture. One agency now has a large interest in "Tell It to the Marines," and it is said that Joe LeBlang, possessor of a wad entitling him to respect, is interested in seeing whether he can execute a financial coup by backing a couple of "movies" on Broadway when the right ones come along.

That being true, isn't it possible that an agency magnate of the calibre of Joe LeBlang may, in the near future, have something to say about motion picture production policies, if not, in the case of some small companies, really dictate them?

Lots of people besides Wall Street bankers would like to get their fingers in the motion picture pie, and in the case of some well heeled, determined souls it would take a severe scorching to make them cry quits once they got the bug.

The court decision permitting any extra ticket charge that a sucker public will stand for enables the agency magnate to experiment with motion pictures. He can adopt the same policy that he follows for stage shows—play several at one time with the expectation of more than recouping his losses on most of them by the profits from one hit.

So far as this writer knows, no agency has ever had a voice in determining the production policy of a picture or show. They have seen the finished product and have agreed, by purchasing outright a large number of tickets, to gamble on its becoming a hit.

Financial emergencies make strange bedfellows. Several small producers now are traveling a rocky road in their struggle to remain in existence. These times are hard on the little fellow.

Is it possible that one of them may, in an emergency, effect an agreement with a ticket agency on a picture-to-picture basis, and avoid bankruptcy by insuring small but sure profits?

LeBlang owns the Cohan Theatre and is in a position to put pictures in it on a percentage basis very liberal to himself. And it is within the realms of possibility that he can obtain control of other theatres. So, later on, LeBlang may have the opportunity, if he chooses, to dictate the production policy of some producing company and, by degrees, get directly into the picture game himself. It is said that he is hugely interested in the money-making probabilities of new films.

No Show Sure Fire Till Public Says So

The chief difficulty in visualizing an agency as dominating production is the all too well known fact that no show, dramatic or pictorial, is sure-fire before the public and the critics have passed on it.

A picture may have, prior to production, an outstanding star, capable support, a wonderful story, an expert director at the helm and the finest of technical equipment, and still, for reasons as yet unknown to man, register a decided flop. And agencies probably won't be willing to gamble on production as fearlessly as producers do.

The prevailing opinion on the lifting of the price limit on theatre tickets is that the scalpers eventually will, through avarice, make lifelong enemies of the public and hurt the theatre business. It is to be hoped that motion picture men will foresee this and, by avoiding unnecessary dealings with the agencies, win the esteem of the public for themselves while the legitimate theatres are losing it.

BOB KANE'S next picture coming through First National looks to be a sure winner and will give lustrous Lois Wilson her first chance to show the fans that she is quite as much at home and twice as winsome under the bright white lights as she is among the prairie flowers or riding wild to escape oncoming redskins.

"Broadway Nights" which is just being finished at the Cosmopolitan studios, with Joe Boyle directing, Bob Haas looking after the decidedly glamorous settings and Forrest Halsey sketching in the big dramatic situations, is the name of the new Kane feature and, it spells box office. Bob Kane, himself, has been working about sixteen hours a day with the enthusiasm that comes to a producer, when he knows he has a sure-fire bell-ringer coming through under his hands.

One set, alone, at regular Hollywood prices, must have cost at least $20,000. What it represented to the Kane bank-roll at the Cosmopolitan, we don't venture to figure, though it is said big sets come much less expensively here than on the Coast. But whatever it may have cost it was worth the money.

Visualize a set, consisting of a large sized theatre stage and effects, from the proscenium arch to the orchestra, with the upper and lower proscenium boxes, showing on both sides of it. Put into the set a full sized orchestra and a ballet of sixty or seventy-five besides the principals and you get some idea of the bigness of the big scene in the picture. No one, who hadn't seen it on the studio floor would believe it to be a set, but would conclude that the producer had leased the Metropolitan Opera House or the Century to stage his big scenic effect.

"Broadway Nights" promises to be the attraction de luxe of the important list Bob Kane has sponsored to date and that is saying a lot. Watch for it.

Bob Haas, art director of the Robert H. Kane Productions, had the slot-machine concession at the "honky tonk" party given in the Cosmopolitan Studios last week in honor of the completion of "Broadway Nights." After slipping in about a half ton of nickels, himself, he got every one else to try their luck, mostly with indifferent success. Herb Cruickshank, alone among the critics, beat the game, departing with a couple of hatfuls of five cent pieces, more or less jubilantly, although declaring, like everyone else, that he had put more in than he got out.

Bob Haas, however, according to studio reports, was set on trying his luck with a screw driver and jimmy after the party was over. But he returned too late. Some one had been ahead of him with an axe, and all the nickels were gone.

Bob called Charley McGuire and they hunted all over the studio, but couldn't find the miscreant.

Now he is trying to figure out just what the "concession" cost him, first, in the nickels he invested to lure the unwary "come-ons" and second, how much he will have to pay the slot-machine man for the smashed machine. Which proves that even art directors at times have their troubles.

When authors write, direct, title and edit their own pictures, then will come the movie millennium. So, at least, we have heard.

Now we learn that Harry Langdon is going to do just that from now on, having decided to start the ball rolling with "The Butter and Egg Man," his next First National comedy feature. In addition, he will also star in the picture, so that he will have an edge on most other authors right from the go-off. Our bet is that "The Butter and Egg Man" will be a riot, provided Harry doesn't insist on being the camera-man, too.

Mabel Livingstone mimeographs that Sylvia Golden, is to conduct a new department in Theatre Magazine devoted to pen portraits of notables in the film world. Exclusive sketches, photographs and informing interviews will be features of the new department.

Bert Ennis properly calls our attention to the fact that his name was omitted in a recent article anent the press agents of the early days.

How Bert escaped mention in any list of pioneer P. A.'s is difficult to figure out, for though still a youngster, he must be rated with the first four or five of the real argonauts who set out to tell the world that the movies were here to stay.

He started in 1910 with the old Vitagraph and has been playing big timers ever since, among the more recent being Roxy and the late Barbara La Marr. More recently still Bert has been doing much magazine and newspaper syndicate work, his fund of information about this industry being well nigh inexhaustible.

Now we know why Congress adjourned without passing so many important bills. Also, why not a single piece of unfriendly movie legislation got by at this session.

During the closing hours about half the solons were over in Statuary Hall looking at Harold Lloyd's latest laughmaker, "The Kid Brother," which was shown by special request. Incidentally, "The Kid Brother" has thus the distinction of being the first motion picture to be shown in the Hall of Fame in Washington.

Hand it to Joe Reddy, Harold Lloyd's capable young press agent. He knows how to do these things.

The recent pronouncement of Thomas A. Edison to the effect that "talking moving pictures" would not prove highly successful, sounds just a little like sour grapes. After the experiences the Sage of Menlo had with the "talkies" he developed some years ago, it isn't particularly strange he should have had but little faith in them since.

ROXY made his radio return on Monday night after nearly a year's absence from the air and through WJZ and some eighteen or nineteen other radio stations talked to two or three million radio fans whom he hopes to entertain at the Roxy Theatre following the official opening Friday, March 11, during the coming year.

Practically all the famous Roxy Gang were with him, from the popular "Gamby" right down the line, together with a lot of new talent and all got away to a great start.

The feature of the "air" bill, however, which was unannounced in the newspaper advertising, was Gloria Swanson, whose first United Artists picture, "The Love of Sunya" will have its world premiere at the opening of the Roxy. She came from a wedding party at her home atop the Park Chambers, just to tell the Roxy fans that she was glad to be with them and to wish Roxy luck in his new adventure.

With her was another personage, whom Miss Swanson addressed as "Henri" somewhat to the puzzlement of many radio fans, inasmuch as Roxy failed to introduce him.

Our guess is, that it was no other than the Marquis de la Coudray de la Falaise, in private life the lovely Gloria's husband. If mistaken, we present our apologies, herewith, to save future correction.

Colvin W. Brown, vice president of F. B. O., and his attractive wife, return on the Aquitania, which docks March 15, after a trip through England, France and Germany in the interest of Greater F. B. O. lasting more than three months. About the best thing Colvin will say he has seen in that time, to risk a casual guess, will be the New York skyline next Wednesday. After all Broadway has it on the Bois de Boulogne, Piccadilly and Unter den Linden in a lot of ways. It looks much more like home.

Somewhere we read that more silver is used in making film, than is required to mint the silver coins of the nation and that only about fifty per cent. of it is recovered by chemical treatment of old film. Nonetheless as a sovereign alchemist, capable of transmuting the silver in the films' emulsion to gold at the box office, we claim that the motion picture industry is in a class by itself.

Harry Pollard To Be Director Of "Show Boat"

Harry Pollard will direct the "Show Boat," scheduled as one of the biggest Universal super-jewels for 1927-28. Pollard, as soon as he completes "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which has been in production over a year, will take a large company to a southern point on the Mississippi River where considerable of the Edna Ferber novel will be filmed.

The cast for the Ferber story is not known, except that Norman Kerry has an important role.

Actual shooting on "Uncle Tom's Cabin" which, it is already said at Universal City cost a million and a half dollars, will probably be completed within the next month.

Virginia Corbin And Mother Are "Pals"

That Virginia Lee Corbin, one of Hollywood's most attractive seventeen year old leading ladies, and her mother, Mrs. Virginia Lee Corbin, are inseparable was brought to light this week when it became known that the recent illness of this blond actress was due also to the recent illness of her mother.

Since Virginia was four years old, her mother has guided her in her theatre career. Last July Mrs. Corbin was taken ill and two months ago her condition was pronounced critical. Mrs. Corbin has just recovered and little Virginia will be ready to don the grease paint again within the next two weeks.

Walker Promoted

H. M. Walker, production manager of the Hal Roach studios, has been appointed vice-president of the concern succeeding F. Richard Jones, who recently resigned.

Eastern Production Fully As Economical As Western

That Is Experience of C. C. Burr, Whose Johnny Hines Picture Is Due
For Distribution May 1

Jewel Spencer

JEWEL SPENCER'S original story, "The Flag Maker," which was purchased and screened by Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, is shortly to be published in novel form. This information was learned coincident with the news that this prominent authoress is now in New York at the solicitation of a most prominent publisher.

Trixie In Movies

Trixie Friganza, screen and vaudeville star, has been selected for one of the important roles in the forthcoming "Red" Grange opus for F. B. O., "The Motor Maniac." At present, Trixie is touring over the Orpheum with her present location on the west coast.

ON May 1 exhibitors may secure from First National Johnny Hines' latest in exactly 5,700 feet. It is "All Aboard" and the first of the Burr and Hines Enterprise specials to be made on the West Coast. In connection with Hines moving for the first time his production activities from the heart of New York, a word passed to us by Business Manager Charles Burr, and one which should be of especial significance to the trade at this time when Hollywood seems destined as the one factory center for all producers, is that the Burr and Hines Enterprises find it not a penny more economical to produce a picture here than in Manhattan.

This comes to Moving Picture World directly from Burr, who is conceded to be one of the most astute producers in the business. Since Burr and Hines became affiliated in 1920, they have averaged three pictures each year, none of which have been financial flops, but all of which exhibitors themselves have labeled excellent box office bets. An illustration of how they run things may be gotten from production data on their last four pictures. Of the three which were made in New York and the one which is just being completed in Hollywood, Burr tells us that there is not $4,000 difference in production cost and not three days difference in time devoted to shooting any of the four, and that the film total which went into the cutting room for each of the four was approximately 100,000 feet.

Gathering material on "All Aboard" from Burr was almost like reading a book twice. We had watched Johnny work on various stages in the Tec-Art studio and also on location on the Lasky ranch. In New York we had reviewed other Hines pictures, each of which we said was better than its predecessor. We thought his "Speed Spook" was the best, after watching Hines' work in "All Aboard" we feel that exhibitor reports are going to record this Hollywood production as the greatest thing Johnny has done.

About New York and Hollywood Burr told us sweeping his arms about him at the same time: "This is the place to make pictures."

When we queried him for details, he stated: "Climate is the only reason. That makes Hollywood easier for a producer, but not more economical. We can make a picture back East for the same cost. If there were not such terrific competition out here for good actors, it would be more economical. The good actors want to live out here and that is the reason why the East will never be a production center until Wall Street steps in and regulates our industry and tells employees where he shall be employed. As things now stand you have to pay a good actor out here at least twenty-five per cent. more than you would think of paying him in New York. If he is good, you have to meet

JOHNNY HINES

GEORGE PETERS

EDDIE DENNIS

P EOPLE that see Johnny Hines on the screen have him sized up as a bundle of wit, nerves and courage. He is all of that and a great deal more on the set. Johnny not only acts. He does his bit in directing and he also knows how fast the crank of a camera should turn during the filming of certain scenes.

There is a reason for the knowledge that Johnny has about lights and everything else that makes up a studio. He was an actor on the legitimate stage at the age of seven, and, as a youngster, he played the big boy role in that famous stage success, "Alias Jimmie Valentine."

Hines has also a successful period of two years in vaudeville in addition to his lengthy screen career. He went into the picture game in 1916 and achieved stardom exactly one year later. Since then Johnny has been the kind of a star which service has only caused to be brighter. His illumination in this respect has reached its peak since he became associated with Charles Burr in 1920.

Johnny is that rare type of actor-producer who knows the game so thoroughly that he is able to follow a Burr-Hines Enterprise picture not only in its activity on the set, but long before a camera eye is fastened upon it. As a matter of fact, Johnny collaborates with many writers preparing original stories for his productions. After that, he takes an active part in preparing the script which guides the action in the plot. More than one entire night we have known Johnny to sit in the circle with his gag men.

C HARLES HINES is the brother of the well-known Johnny, in business as well as family ties. He directs Johnny and acts in his pictures. When he acts, Johnny takes the megaphone, so that the combination is one of the most ideal ever heard of in Hollywood.

Not only is Charlie a director, but he is also the chief gagman for Burr and Hines Enterprises. Some of the incidents in "All Aboard," his latest, place him on record as not only a top-notch director, but also an unusual comedy constructionist.

So far as the careers of the two Hines brothers are concerned, they are almost parallel. Charlie also started as an actor on the legitimate stage at an early age. About ten years ago he entered the film industry as an exponent of the grease paint before cameras of the old World Company.

A few years ago the brothers decided that they should combine their talents, so Charlie went with Johnny and directed him first in "The Speed Spook."

In "All Aboard," Charlie proved to be a most unusual sight for a director. Instead of the ordinary business suit which the average Hollywood director dons upon sitting in the canvas-back chair on the set, Charlie had a turban and a generous portion of dark tan grease smudged over his face. The reason for this was apparent, when now and then he would suddenly rush upon the set waving a sword or ordering servants, since he also plays the villain role of the sheik in his brother's picture.

N OT one cameraman but six—all experts on various phases of cinema photography—worked on "All Aboard."

George Peters, who has photographed Hines' two previous pictures, was chief cameraman. Under him were:

Byron Houck, who was borrowed from the camera staff of Buster Keaton.

"Doc" Travers, who is noted on the West Coast as one of the film colony's most expert trick photographers.

Milton Krassner, Stanley Kranz and Murray Lafayette, three men well known in Hollywood's cinematograph circles, comprise the rest of the "All Aboard" battery.

In all, these men exposed 100,000 feet of negative from which the 5,700 feet, in which "All Aboard" will be released, were selected in the cutting room.

The mechanism of several of their cameras narrowly escaped being ruined during one part of the production. This occurred on an interior set which appears on the screen as a lion tunneling his way to freedom. The lion was incarcerated in a cage with wooden bars in the Tec-Art studio at the time of this action. In order that every movement of the beast might be secured, bars were cut away sufficiently to admit the lenses of the six cameras. The cameramen set themselves for a day of waiting, since it is a known fact that not a day but often a week has been spent in a studio endeavoring to get an animal to perform at the right time. In this case, the animals did perform.

C AMERA pests are reminiscent of the marathon walkers on a transoceanic steamer, and just about as jarring on the nerves.

Eddie Dennis, pictured above, gives a vivid pictorial delineation of the "camera-hound" in "All Aboard" and his work is so realistic that one almost wishes that the ship might be maliciously submerged under plenty of water, thus ending his career and forever relegating his troublesome picture box to the bottom of the ocean. This, even though a flock of innocent souls would necessarily go to the bottom with him.

Eddie was born "south of the slot" in San Francisco, which in that city constitutes a substantial claim to fame. Many a famous character of stage and civic fame sighted light for the first time in this sector.

While he is in the "extra" column, Dennis is really a character actor of no mean ability and is much in demand among the studios for important comedy parts. For the past fifteen years he has been laboring on, dividing his time between stage and screen. That he is eminently successful on the latter is evidenced by the fact that his services are in constant demand.

He was playing around the studios back even unto the mirthful days of the old Keystone custard pie operas, when a comedian was assayed on the accuracy of his pie-throwing arm. Much of his picture work has been for Fox of late, but this has been interspersed with a flyer at Educational and other studios occasionally.

"All Aboard" With Johnny Hines For Laugh Land

Western Production Scheduled For a Healthy Jump in Future

Movement Westward, Started by F. P., Augurs Increased Work For Denizens of Studioland

PRODUCTION activities on the West Coast are billed to take a healthy jump with the recent action on the part of Famous Players-Lasky in transferring practically all production work from their Astoria, N. Y., studios to Hollywood. With the finishing up of the few pictures scheduled in the East, the stars now in Gotham will move their belongings westward and take up their duties there.

The Astoria, Long Island, plant will be virtually abandoned. In future it will be devoted merely to producing Paramount short features, now being prepared for release starting next August. The laboratories will be used in handling the Paramount News Reel and short features. The studio stages will be used for rehearsing prologues for the Public theatres. These are among the facts Moving Picture World gathered at the Paramount Studio this week.

W. C. Fields, we hear, is now completing his current picture at the Long Island studio, and, upon its conclusion, will immediately trek west to join the local film colony. Due to extensive preparations already made for three other pictures, they will be made in the East before the final curtain is drawn. Meighan, Richard Dix and Herbert Brenon are interested in this particular trio. However, they also will do their future work on the coast when they finish the business at hand.

Jesse Lasky, vice-president of official statement to the press gave as his reasons for the important move the wealth of space now available in the Hollywood plant for handling production. Heretofore, due to cramped quarters on the coast, approximately 25 per cent. of Paramount production was centered in Astoria. With the present huge plant here, there is ample room, which makes it not only advisable but a matter of good judgment in thus concentrating production in one place.

Within two months it is expected that the present personnel of the eastern headquarters, including executives, technical men, artists and writers, will have arrived in Hollywood.

Production on a mammoth scale is now underway at the Hollywood studio. The consolidation of eastern and western plants is one of the most important moves in official circles, and undoubtedly sounds the death knell for New York as a big production center.

First National is now producing most of its pictures on the coast, with the Robert Kane unit their single eastern contact.

With the present huge Fox plant in Westwood, and their immense studios in the heart of Hollywood, it would not be surprising to see the entire production efforts of this company centered on the coast in a short time, although nothing to this effect can be officially gathered at this writing by the World.

The Hollywood home of Famous Players-Lasky covers an area of twenty-six acres and has adequate facilities for handling the increased output that will result with the closing of the eastern plant, insofar as feature productions are concerned.

"There will be no reduction in our production," declared Lasky. "on the other hand, we shall make as many pictures as last year and possibly more. Our West Coast studio is one of the best equipped in the world and capable of taking care of all our production activities."

Frank A. Galloway, president of the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, declared:

"The loss of Paramount production at Long Island is our gain. Indeed, it is a wonderful thing to have the concentration of one of the greatest industries in the world in Hollywood. I congratulate Famous Players-Lasky and welcome the oncoming units from the East."

Willat Takes Up Reynolds' Task

Irvin Willat, Universal contract director, has been assigned the task of completing the filming of "Back to God's Country," the picture Lynn Reynolds was directing at the time of his recent suicide. When he finishes this production, Willat will immediately prepare for the photographing of "The Big Gun," a special from the Universal City studio.

Jones To Direct Fairbanks Films

R. Richard Jones, until recently associated with Hal Roach comedies as supervising director, has been signed by Douglas Fairbanks to direct the next Fairbanks production. This information comes officially from the star's representatives.

The story that will serve Fairbanks in his next picture still remains doubtful, although he is considering a number of likely prospects. It is quite probable that the locale of the final selection will be in South America.

Barney Oldfield Enters The Movies

Barney Oldfield, noted figure of the speedway a few years back, has been signed by Warner Brothers for an important role in "The First Auto," a picture glorifying the benzine buggy of a decade or so ago.

Patsy Ruth Miller is starred in the auto story and is supported by a strong cast, including Charles Emmet Mack in the featured male role. Roy Del Ruth is directing.

Notables in the News

Murnau Will Become Fixture At Fox Studios

F. W. Murnau will be a fixture at the Fox studio upon his return from Europe, where he is going to direct one picture as per a former contract with U. F. A.

This was the substance of an announcement by Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president of the Fox organization, at a luncheon staged at the Writers' Club in honor of the foreign director, who is about to depart for Germany with the completion of his first American production, "Sunrise." After fulfilling his U. F. A. engagement, he will return to Hollywood for a term of years.

The luncheon was attended by a large number of film notables and newspaper and trade paper representatives. Murnau was given a rousing reception after gracefully acknowledging the bon voyage tribute of those gathered to wish him goodwill.

Maria Corda Will Be 'Helen of Troy'

Maria Corda is the final choice of First National to play the name role in "The Private Life of Helen of Troy," according to official announcement at the Burbank Studio. For a time it appeared that Billie Dove, just recently elevated to stardom, would be given the choice role.

Ms. Corda attained considerable success abroad as a screen player and as a consequence was brought to this country by First National and placed under long term contract. Lewis Stone has the featured male role.

"T. R." Film Opening

The New York premiere of "The Rough Riders," Paramount's portrayal of Theodore Roosevelt and his famous regiment, has been set for March 11, according to an announcement on the coast. Frank Hooper, Noah Beery, George Bancroft, Charles Emmett Mack, Charles Farrell and Mary Astor, have the feature roles in the picture.

Choose Ruth Dwyer

Ruth Dwyer has been given the feminine lead in Monty Banks' current picture, "The Perfect Gentleman." Clyde Bruckman is again directing the Italian comedian. Others in the cast are: Ernie Wood, Hazel Howell, Magda Foy, Henry Barrows and Arthur Thalasso.

Hollywood Soon To Be Busier Than Ever

"Quarantined Rivals" Shows Straining After Much Comedy

By Jim Powers

West Coast Staff Writer

AN over effort to inject comedy in "Quarantined Rivals" was palpably evident in the preview of the latest Gotham production. Robert Agnew and Kathleen Collins have the romantic leads, but the story gives them a little opportunity to display their respective talents.

The screen adaptation is from the story by George Rudolph Chester and was prepared by Jack T. O. Jevne. Throughout, there seemed to be evident too great a tendency to forget everything else in a desire to create laughs. Thus many of the situations were protracted, especially one in the barber shop, where John Miljan plays the part of a jealous barber in love with the pretty manicurist in the person of Veora Daniel.

"Big Boy" Williams is good as the plumber. He strikes a responsive chord because of his utter disregard for social conventionalities. Cast in the role of a prizefighter, with plenty of comedy relief, Williams would prove a good bet in any production.

George C. Pearce as the father of the girl and the henpecked husband of Clarissa Selwynne, his snobbish wife, appeared in such mortal terror of his spouse that he probably had the sympathy of many a cowed male in the audience. Their situations were so overdrawn, however, that they lost much of their comedy value.

Ray Hallor, as Agnew's rival for the favor of the girl, had little to do other than quarrel with Robert occasionally. Josephine Borio made a demure maid.

Clarence Brown On Location With Large Cast For M-G-M

Clarence Brown, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "ace" director, is now settled in Corona, Colo., for the present with one of the largest companies ever taken on location for the filming of exteriors. "The Trail of '98," Brown's next production effort, is planned as one of the big releases of the year, according to studio reports.

A party including thirty-four members of the cast, two business managers, and assistant-director, five camera men and a bevy of technical experts departed from Los Angeles on the special that was to carry them to their destination.

According to plans, a miniature city will be thrown up that will serve as the domicile for the film folks during the shooting of the picture. Brown went on a few days before the main body of the party to complete necessary arrangements and work on the story.

Among the better known members of the cast now on location are: Ralph Graves, Harry Carey, Tully Marshall, George Cooper, Carl Dane, Emily Fitzroy, Polly Moran and Kate Morgan.

Ray Enright Is Back From Work On First Picture

Director Ray Enright and his company of Warner Brothers' players have returned from Arizona, where they were engaged in filming exteriors of "Tracked By The Police." Bob Perry has an important character part in this production starring Rintin-Tin.

Incidentally, this is Enright's first directorial attempt since being promoted from the cutting room. The outcome of his initial effort is being watched with keen interest.

Sign Paul Kelly To Play Leading Part For Warners

Paul Kelly has been signed to play the male lead for May McAvoy in her latest starring vehicle for Warner Brothers, "Irish Hearts." Kelly started on the screen years ago as a kid actor and then deserted the flickering celluloids for the legitimate stage, only to return later to the silent "drammer."

On the stage he played the lead in a number of Booth Tarkington plays. Lloyd Bacon directs "Irish Hearts."

his price because if you don't, other producers will."

Why New York is more economical otherwise is reflected in the fact that they save money in the studio, such as building sets without scaffolding back of each one, requiring quantities of timber, and with the idea of semi-permanence and not having to remain for months to be deteriorated by climate, and they only have to use but a fraction of the electricians they do out here. Another angle on sets and economy which Burr expressed is that Hollywood property today is exceedingly valuable and is daily increasing in value to such an extent that a set built upon a foundation hardy enough to accommodate a house wastes acres of land with inactivity. It costs as much to rebuild or revamp a set as to build another, and as directors really control the situation, they won't refuse each other's sets without materially altering them.

The Hollywood climate, on the other hand, Burr figures, stimulates workers, so that production may be accomplished more speedily and under better health conditions than in the East.

All in all, Burr is of the opinion that the economical equation between producing in New York and Hollywood is about balanced and the same. How Burr and Hines Enterprises regard Hollywood, however, is reflected in the fact that they are here for the next two Hines pictures, any way.

More time is spent in preparing a Hines comedy than in its actual shooting. For instance with "All Aboard," preparation on the original story by Matt Taylor started in New York on September 1 and lasted through October and a part of November, when the company entrained for Hollywood. Here, actual shooting started on "All Aboard" on December 7 and occupied eight weeks thereafter. The majority of the picture was made on interior sets, the most novel of which was a shoe store where Hines, as a clerk, gets fired for his forgetfulness, but is immediately hired by a tour company because of knowledge of foreign countries which he has gained through reading. The interior of the sheik's palace, where most of the action in the picture takes place, with Hines and his leading lady, Edna Murphy, imprisoned by a Lord of the Sands, represented a value of $18,000 and is by far

Considerable of the exterior shooting took place on a set which had been erected for scenes in "Old Ironsides" on the Lasky ranch. For the rental of this set Burr said he paid $1,000 per day. The writer visited the company while on location on this ranch and found that the set had been converted into a Tripoli street with sand piled up before its gate. One of the novel gags effected on the Tripoli street, and one which caused Hollywood "All Aboard" preview audiences to roar with laughter shows Hines rescuing Miss Murphy and driving her away in a flivver that had been buried by a sandstorm. Several wind machines sprayed the sand while a huge five-ton truck, with a skillfully fastened cable, actually freed the little car from its tomb. On the screen, however, the flivver seems to live up to its reputation and do the impossible.

The picture also shows a lion pawing through the sand doing tricks in the Arab castle and making himself menacingly evident throughout a good part of the picture. As a matter of fact, five lions were used—each performing the stunt with which he was familiar. The rental of these lions alone cost Burr and Hines Enterprises $3,000 for the three days which they worked.

Six cameramen turned their cranks on "All Aboard" while Hines and Miss Murphy and a notable cast pranced about, Burr figures that with such a battery of cameras, all angles will be covered and at the same time the necessity of making re-takes will be eliminated.

The first time it was previewed, the audience witnessed "All Aboard" not in less than six reels, but in its original length of fourteen reels. When "They laughed," a corps of Burr-Hines critics okayed that part of the script. An instance of how much they were guided by these laughs is witnessed in the fact that an entire sequence, including Bull Montana and Anna May Wong, was eliminated. From the standpoint of the average critic, this elimination was totally unnecessary. It had ninety per cent laugh pressure behind it. However, one hundred per cent was the Burr-Hines mandate, so the shears were used.

"All Aboard" Required Six Cameramen

Stanley-First National Merger Gives Exhibitors Upper Hand

John McGuirk of Stanley Company to Preside Over Destiny of the Gigantic Amalgamation

By Tom Waller
West Coast Representative

NOT producers controlling exhibitors but theatre owners having the upper hand over the makers of pictures, is the status of the new alliance of First National Pictures Corporation, the Stanley Company of America and the West Coast Theatres Company. Moving Picture World was the first publication on the Coast to learn that the deal involving over $140,000,000 had been officially closed.

Who will be the active head over the amalgamated interests representing individual assets of approximately $30,000,000 in First National, $90,000,000 in the Stanley Company and over $20,000,000 in the West Coast chain was the question that immediately arose on the Coast following the reports, at this writing, that the deal was only in embryo and would not be closed for the next few days.

After a careful investigation, the World learns that John McGuirk, head of the Stanley Company, will also preside over the destiny of this merger, one of the most gigantic which has occurred in the film industry in years.

From the same sources, the World is informed that the Stanley Company, now boasting a chain of about 400 theatres in the East through acquiring during the past year many independent but powerful theatre chains, was the outstanding factor in bringing about the merger. With the hundred and thirty or more big houses coming within the scope of the West Coast chain, the theatres to which First National now will directly book its product total well over 500 houses.

The First National is now on its most solid basis, and that from the standpoint of theatres it is as powerful as Famous Players-Lasky and their Public chain, was gathered by the World at Burbank, where $200,000 is being expended in two new huge stages which, when completed within the next two weeks, will undoubtedly give the merged interests the largest studio in the world.

Even at this writing, when the machinery of the amalgamation has not yet had an opportunity to be oiled the World gathered also from unquestionable sources that doubtless First National will now make bids for the leading stars in filmdom. These stars, it reached us, will be enrolled under the First National banner. First National, it was said in this respect, will probably establish its own stock company of featured players.

The World was given to understand at this time that First National's present system of depending mainly upon units for product to be distributed will possibly be abandoned, except in a few cases. Instead of being largely a distributing agency as has heretofore practically been the case First National, under the new regime, will set about to produce most of the pictures which it will distribute.

From what we can learn, the merger interests may cause a change to be made in the 1927-28 production schedule of First National. Although this has not yet been officially announced, the

They're Still Talking Of Fred Thompson

The signing of Fred Thomson, F. B. O. western star, by Famous-Players-Lasky, continues to give coast writers a topic to bandy around. Thomson has been signed at least a dozen times by Famous to date—but not officially on the dotted line.

Thomson is now completing a picture at F. B. O. and it would not be at all surprising to hear of him signing with Famous after it gets to the cutting room. The official announcement of his change of studios, however, will come from New York, as told Moving Picture World several weeks ago.

Famous Now Owns "Abie's Irish Rose"

Famous Players-Lasky has purchased the screen rights of "Abie's Irish Rose" from Anne Nichols, author and producer of the stage play. The terms of the sale were not made public, but it is understood that she will receive one of the largest sums ever paid for picture rights.

World learns that 52 regular pictures, 6 productions by Ken Maynard and 4 specials are scheduled for a 1927-28 release,

Jean Hersholt as "Dr. Juttner" in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's
"Old Heidelberg."

Billie Dove To Appear In Four Pictures Again

The sceptre of stardom has been bestowed upon Billie Dove by First National and now we can look forward to some really pleasing performances from the beautiful artist. Already the four pictures in which she will be starred during 1927-28 have been decided upon.

Her contract calls for four productions a year. The first year's bouquet includes "The American Beauty," an adaptation of Wallace Irwin's story: "The Heart of a Follies Girl," "Once There Was a Princess" and "Eternal Lamps."

Since the release of "An Affair of the Follies," in which First National co-featured her with Lewis Stone, there has been a general suggestion from exhibitors that Miss Dove be elevated to stardom, according to John McCormick, west coast chief.

Goldwyn Enlists Famous Gilda Gray

Gilda Gray, famous shimmy-shaker, is certain of employment for the next five years at least. She will appear in Samuel Goldwyn productions at the rate of one a year. These, it is claimed, will all be of the super-special variety at an expenditure of at least $1,000,000 per super.

Miss Gray will arrive in Hollywood shortly to await the selection of her first story, as yet indetermined.

Patsy Miller To Leave Warners

With the completion of "The First Auto" for Warner Brothers, Patsy Ruth Miller will sever her relations with this company, according to an announcement from Warner Brothers studios. Miss Miller, who was elevated to stardom by the latter company a short time ago, will turn her hand to free-lancing.

Von Sternberg Will Direct "Underworld"

Josef Von Sternberg has been definitely decided upon by Paramount to direct "Underworld." George Bancroft has the chief role of a gangster, with Evelyn Brent cast as his sweetheart.

For the reliable facts from Hollywood watch Waller—more news to a page of his writing than a bookful of hokum.—The Editor.

"U" Capitol In Somerville, Mass., Opened

The Universal Chain Theatrical Enterprises added an important link to that corporation's holdings this week when the new Capitol Theatre in Somerville, Mass., was opened. "The Cheerful Fraud," the latest Reginald Denny picture, which recently broke records at the new Paramount Theatre, New York City, was the initial offering.

The Capitol in Somerville, an 1,800 seat house costing more than $250,000, is the most modern and best equipped house in Somerville. It ranks as one of the show-places of New England. Running on a first-class vaudeville and feature picture policy, it is destined to be a most important unit in Universal's proposed New England chain.

Roy Calderone, formerly the head of the Calderone circuit on Long Island and later with the B. F. Keith interests, is manager of the new Universal theatre. He was joined in the opening festivities by Harry Goldberg, assistant to the head of the Universal chain theatres, and by William (Doc) Stevens, of the Unity Theatrical Agency, which supplies vaudeville to the new house.

"White Gold" Has Small Star Cast

"White Gold," which motion picture critics have proclaimed one of the most unusual studies of life ever filmed, has only five characters and no "extras" and the action of the story occurs within a space of twenty-four hours. Jetta Goudal is the star and William K. Howard is the director. Kenneth Thomson, George Bancroft, George Nichols and Clyde Cook complete the cast.

Maynard's New Film Under Way

Ken Maynard's new picture, "The Country Beyond Law" is under way, on location near Fresno, California, for big ranch scenes. H. J. Brown is directing the Western drama which Charles R. Rogers is producing for First National. Dorothy Dwan, leading woman, together with Tom Santachi, Noah Young, Gibson Gowland and Billy Butts are taking part in the opening scenes of the story.

A "Tiffany" Ready

Blanche McHaffey plays one of the leading roles in the Tiffany Production, "The Princess From Hoboken," an original story by Sonya Levien, which is now completed and read for release early in April. Others in the cast are Edmund Burns, Lou Tellegen and Ethel Clayton.

Showmen Acclaim Lon Chaney Film As Great B. O. Attraction

Demure Louise Fazenda, the Warner Bros. star, who is called the funniest woman of the screen.

New Wm. Fox House Ready; "Glory" Starts

"What Price Glory," the William Fox picturization of the celebrated stage play, "What Price Glory," now playing at the Sam H. Harris Theatre, New York City, will open an engagement in Philadelphia at Fox's new million dollar playhouse, The Locust, within a fortnight.

"Tell It To the Marines" Receives Glittering Reports From Chicago, Indianapolis, Easton, Pa., and New Bedford

"TELL IT TO THE MARINES," one of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's special productions, has established a great name for itself, as one of the greatest box office record smashers in the history of the film industry.

Since its world premiere at the Embassy, New York City, four months ago, this picture has played to a capacity house twice daily, and shortly after its New York opening at $2 prices was released throughout the country.

Lya de Putti Will Keep 'Em Guessing

When "The Heart Thief" is presented to the public, lip readers are due for a severe setback. This is due to the manner in which Lya de Putti, who plays the leading feminine role opposite Joseph Schildkraut, the star, speaks the lines of her portion of the picture story, which P. D. C. will release.

In the long shots, Miss de Putti speaks Hungarian; in the medium shots, Miss de Putti speaks in German, and in the close-ups she speaks her lines in English. So she therefore openly defies the lip-reading fans to interpret her words.

Reports from the various critics and theatre managers pertaining to this film have indicated that the picture is one of the biggest box office scoops of any season, and is booking months in advance.

Wires of enthusiastic comment have poured in daily at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer office.

"Can honestly advise any exhibitor to pay highest price they have ever paid for a feature for 'Tell It to the Marines' and still make a handsome profit," is the report of Mr. Harry Zeitz of the State Theatre, New Bedford, Mass. He adds, "'Tell It to the Marines' did one of the biggest week's business in the history of the theatre. Intend to bring it back for another week's showing."

The following wire was received from Max Balaban, of the McVicker Theatre, Chicago: "Am pleased to inform you that 'Tell It to the Marines' has smashed all records in the history of the theatre. The third week, now, is doing more business than the second week. Business for this picture beyond all my expectations."

Harlan E. Woehrle, manager of the Third Street Theatre, Easton, Penn., wires: "'Tell It to the Marines' broke all house records at our regular prices."

James D. Kennedy, manager of the Apollo Theatre, Indianapolis, reports: "'Tell It to the Marines' broke all existing house records on the opening day. The picture is one hundred per cent. entertainment. My patrons unanimous in giving it the highest praise possible. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer are again to be commended for keeping up their high standard of production."

H. B. Walthall Cast

The cast for the next Tiffany production "Enchanted Island" includes Henry B. Walthall, Char-Pat Hartigan and Floyd Shackelotte Stevens, Pierre Gendron, Ford.

Irene Rich scores a bull's eye on the target, as well as in her picture, "Don't Tell the Wife," for Warner Bros.

F. B. O. Working Throughout All Of Current Year

Months of preparation on the part of Edwin King, vice-president of Film Booking Offices in charge of production, and his executive staff will take concrete form within the next few days when work on a schedule of 104 pictures will get under way.

Commenting on next season's output, Mr. King said:

"Both President Joseph P. Kennedy and I have gone on record with the statement that 1927 will be the greatest year in the history of F. B. O. and while this sounds like the expected and stereotyped statement, we mean exactly what we say.

"We have been at work for months organizing a rock-bound organization in the matter of executives, directors, stars and stories, and we shall carry on along these lines until we get an organization second to none in pictures."

The honor of starting the new program goes to Ralph Ince, master director at F. B. O. who will shortly start work on "Not For Publication," adapted by Ewart Adamson from a story "The Temple of the Giants," by Robert Wells Ritchie.

Brice Directs Beery Comedy

Monte Brice, who has just completed "Casey at the Bat," Wallace Beery's first starring vehicle, as his first megaphone assignment, will direct Beery again in "Fireman, Save My Child," according to announcement by B. P. Schulberg, West Coast executive for Paramount.

Brice has already been announced to make "Sheiks and Shebas," the Paramount "youth" picture as his next, the Beery film to follow.

Rin-Tin-Tin is a contented dog beside Dorothy Dwan in Warner Bros.' "Hills of Kentucky."

A Charmer From The Far East

Oriental Anna May Wong, the Chinese siren, cast in support of Lon Chaney in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picture, "Mr. Wu."

Reynolds to Direct "Show Boat;" Irvin Willat to Do "The Big Gun"

SEVERAL WEEKS ago, Carl Laemmle advertised in the public prints for two directors, the theory being that when one had literary material like Edna Ferber's "Show Boat" and Richard Barry's "The Big Gun," one must get the best directoral brains in the industry to produce them on the screen.

Possibly Mr. Laemmle got the answer to his question at the banquet given to him last week in the Biltmore Hotel in Los Angeles by the Universal Alumni. The men he chose were Universal alumni, in its strictest sense, for both these directors were given their first opportunity and did their first moving picture work for Mr. Laemmle.

"Show Boat" will be directed by Lynn Reynolds.

"The Big Gun" will be directed by Irvin Willat.

Splendid Cast Chosen To Do New Fox Film

"Rich But Honest," from the story by Arthur Somers Roche, has been started in production at Fox Films West Coast Studios under the direction of Albert Ray.

Nancy 'Nash, 1927 Wampas Baby star, has the leading feminine role with Clifford Holland, an Allan Dwan discovery who just signed a five-year contract with Fox, playing opposite her.

Charles Morton is cast as the heavy and J. Farrell MacDonald has the leading character part. Others in the cast are Tyler Brooke, Ted McNamara, Marjorie Beebe and Ernie Shields.

olds has been on the Universal City lot directing Hoot Gibson. At the present time he is directing the James Oliver Curwood story, "Back to God's Country."

Irvin Willat is one of the real original Universal alumni. He started his career with the old Imp Company less than a year after it was first organized. His first role was a small one opposite Mary Pickford and was given to him not on account of any histrionic ability but because he was a snappy dresser. He had been given a job in the studio by C. A. ("Doc") Willat, the Imp studio and laboratory manager.

Buys "Golden Calf"

The rights to Aaron Davis' story, "The Golden Calf," have been secured by First National Pictures, Production Manager Richard A. Rowland announced.

N. B. Lists All "U" Product In Separate Chart

The Weekly Guide to Selected Pictures put out by the National Board of Review, recently had an all-Universal issue, in which the selected pictures for the week were all Universals.

This unusual event came about as the result of the high rating given by the National Board to the following Universal pictures, "The Love Thrill," Laura LaPlante's latest Jewel; "Les Misérables," the Universal Film De France, and "Youth and Beauty," a two-reel Gump comedy.

Marie Prevost Signs

Marie Prevost has signed a contract for another year with the Metropolitan Pictures Corporation to be starred in four productions. E. Mason Hopper, who directed her in several of the past year's releases for the same company will direct her in her quartet of forth-coming stories.

Miss Vidor's Next

Doris Henderson is preparing the screen adaptation for Florence Vidor's next starring vehicle for Paramount, "The World at Her Feet." Production is scheduled to begin within the next two weeks.

Dolores Costello In Broadway Films

When "The Third Degree," one of Warner Bros. feature pictures opened at the Paramount Theatre, February 12, Dolores Costello, the daughter of the one-time screen idol, Maurice Costello, enjoyed the distinction of seeing her name in electric lights on Broadway in two pictures at the same time.

This unusual happening falls to a young woman who had her name in electric letters for the first time at the premiere showing of "When a Man Loves" at the Selwyn

Alma Rubens, now featured in "The Heart of Salome," for Fox.

Fox Film Schedule For March

Lists Feature From Tom Mix

FOX FILMS releases for March will include five feature length productions, three two-reel comedies, two one-reel varieties and the usual Fox News Reel issues, according to James R. Grainger, general sales manager for the corporation.

The feature releases are: "Love Makes 'Em Wild," "The Secret Studio," Tom Mix in "The Broncho Twister," Buck Jones in "Whispering Sage" and "The Heart of Salome."

The two-reelers are: "The Last Word," "Birthday Greetings" and "Man About Town." The Varieties subjects are: "Everybody's Servant" and "Rock Ribbed Maine."

"Love Makes 'Em Wild," released March 6, is based on Florence Ryerson's humorous story, "Willie the Worm," wherein romance turns the office mouse into a roaring lion. Albert Ray directed.

Olive Borden is featured in "The Secret Studio," released March 13. It is based on the newspaper serial by Hazel Livingston and is a story of New York's celebrated Greenwich Village. Kenneth Harlan, Margaret Livingston and Earle Fox are Miss Borden's chief supports.

In "The Broncho Twister," also released on the thirteenth, Tom Mix scores again. Orville Dull directed. Helene Costello plays the leading feminine role opposite Mix.

Buck Jones is at his best in "Whispering Sage," released on March 20. Natalie Joyce is the feminine lead.

Laughs galore are contained in "The Last Word," Helen and Warren Married Life two-reel comedy released March 13, featuring Kathryn Perry and Allan Forrest.

"Birthday Greeting" an Imperial brand comedy released on March 20, maintains the high laugh traditions of these two-reelers and much is claimed for it. Georgie Harris and Dorothy Kitchen are featured.

"Man About Town" is an O. Henry two-reeler and as such is provocative of all sorts of laughter. It is released on March 27.

"Everybody's Servant," the one reel Variety released on March 6, is entertaining and instructive on a subject everyone is interested in today, namely, electricity.

"Rock Ribbed Maine," released March 20, is, as the title implies, a trip with motion picture camera through that beautiful State, done in such a manner as to give ten minutes of unalloyed pleasure to all who see it.

Miss Ruben's Role

"Heart of Salome," Victor Schertzinger's eighth production for Fox Films, is nearing completion at the West Coast Studios. Alma Rubens has the outstanding role. The cast includes "Walter Pidgeon and Holmes Herbert.

Lionel in Cast

Lionel Barrymore has been added to the M-G-M cast that will play in "The Thirteenth Hour."

Conrad Veidt and his wife. The German star is at work on his first picture for Carl Laemmle, "The Chinese Parrot."

June Marlowe, of Universal, in a Hollywood bathing suit.

Baxter to Coast

Warner Baxter, who has just completed his work in the leading male role in "The Telephone Girl," Herbert Brenon's latest effort for Paramount, left last week for the West Coast. He next will appear in "Drums of the Desert," a Zane Grey-Paramount production.

Roxy Booking

Roxy has booked "Fighting Love," a P. D. C. picture starring Jetta Goudal, for the new Roxy Theatre. It will be played there among the first half-dozen pictures seen in that house.

SHORT TALKS ON SHORT FEATURES

Reputation

Otto H. Kahn has just addressed to the students of Princeton University some excellent advice. The "ten rules of success" which Mr. Kahn offers would be excellent thoughts no matter who wrote them, but his remarkable career in the banking world gives them real authority.

The rule that impressed me most was this: "The most serviceable of all assets is reputation."

Why is one man's word as good as his bond, while another's means but little? Why is one company's good will valued in millions; another's hardly recognized at all? Reputation!

It is reputation that builds up for a theatre that steady week in and week out business that makes fortunes—reputation for always giving the patron a good all around show for his money. It is reputation that has brought Educational to its position of dominance in the short features field—reputation for the best pictures, the best service, the best advertising support, and for keeping faith with you at all times. And it is reputation that makes our promise of a splendid program for 1927-1928 a serviceable asset for you as well as for us.

"College Days" And Vitaphone In Flower City

At the inaugural showing of the Vitaphone at Fay's Rochester Theatre the Tiffany production "College Days" featuring Marceline Day and Charles Delaney, was selected for the feature picture attraction.

A Tiffany production "Redheads Preferred" with Raymond Hitchcock and Marjorie Daw was selected to show simultaneously with the premier presentation of the Vitaphone at the Circle, Theatre in Cleveland.

"Lost At Sea" For The Ritz Premiere

"Lost At Sea," a Tiffany production featuring Lowell Sherman, Jane Novak and Huntley Gordon, was selected as the opening feature attraction for the initial week's program of the new million dollar Ritz Theatre, Indianapolis' newest picture palace, on Washington's Birthday.

Louis Marcum, of the Marcum Circuit of theatres selected the Twenty Gems from Tiffany for his new theatre, and of the first seven features booked for the Ritz, four are Tiffany features. In addition the opening bill also included a Tiffany Color Classic "The Barefoot Boy."

Camera Expert

Assurance that Emil Jannings will have in his first American motion picture, "The Way of All Flesh," the same splendid technical advantages of photography and lighting that have made his Ufa films so distinctive, was contained in the announcement by Paramount that Victor Milner has been assigned to the camera work on "The Way of All Flesh." Milner did "The Wanderer."

Runaway Girl

Jetta Goudal, star of "White Gold," began her dramatic career in France when she ran away from home to join a troupe of traveling players. She is now under contract to the DeMille studio.

M-G-M Signs A Dramatist

Sam Janney, author of "Loose Ankles," the play which recently ran for six months in New York City, has been signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as a screen writer.

Janney recently went West to witness the opening of his play at the Columbia, in San Francisco, but was persuaded to remain in California and write for the films.

Josephine Dunn and James Hall in Paramount's "Love's Greatest Mistake," in a firelighted pose.

Columbia's "Wandering Girls" Has Big Broadway Premiere

"WANDERING GIRLS," Columbia's drama of modern youth, had its first New York showing at Moss' Broadway Theatre.

This is the fourth production of the company's present season releases to play at this theatre, the others being "The Lone Wolf Returns," "Obey the Law" and "Stolen Pleasures."

"Wandering Girls," directed by Ralph Ince, deals with the timely problem of the modern girl. Today more than ever feminine youth is in the limelight.

The reason "why girls leave home" is treated with intense understanding and interest in "Wandering Girls," which presents the arguments of both the parents and the children in an entertaining way.

Dorothy Revier plays the modern girl. Prominent in the supporting cast are Robert Agnew, Mildred Harris, William Welsh, Eugenie Besserer and Armand Kaliz.

Vilma Banky and Ronald Colman in "The Night of Love," for United Artists.

Edward Hyman Files Reports On the Big Hit

Following the opening of "McFadden's Flats" at the Brooklyn Mark Strand, Edward L. Hyman, managing director, sent the following wire to General and Production Manager Richard A. Rowland, of First National:

"Worst storm in forty years failed to hurt opening of 'McFadden's Flats' and business is so good we are opening at 10:30 every morning. Patrons declare it's a wow. Picture has the stuff that's needed for box office and audience. Congratulations."

A week later Mr. Hyman wrote: "Because of the fact that it is seldom we continue a photoplay for two weeks, I feel that you will be interested to know that 'McFadden's Flats' has entered its second week here to business that places this attraction in the 'exceptional' class. Our records disclose that 'McFadden's Flats' is the second picture in five years to play a second week, the other being Charlie Chaplin in 'The Gold Rush.'"

Fitzmaurice Directing

George Fitzmaurice is directing "The Tender Hour," for First National release, with Billy Dove and Ben Lyon featured.

Tennis "Champ"

Josiana Vander Ende, tennis champion of Holland, has been cast for a role in "Where Do We Go From Here," which First National previously called "Big Bertha."

Miss Rork Cast

Ann Rork, the charming daughter of Sam E. Rork, has been cast for an important role in "His Son," which John Francis Dillon is directing for Mr. Rork, for First National release.

In "Vamp" Role

Lilyan Tashman has been cast for a "gold-digging" role in Sam E. Rork's production for First National, "His Son," based on Garret Firt's magazine story "Lorenzo, the Magnificent."

Lloyd's Picture In Washington

Harold Lloyds latest comedy, "The Kid Brother," which Paramount is releasing, has the distinction of being the first picture to be shown in the Hall of Fame at the national capital in Washington. As the result of a special request, the picture was presented to a party of fifty congressmen in Statuary Hall last Friday evening.

Hope For New Stars In F. P. L. Stock Project

PARAMOUNT'S determination to bring new faces to the screen has crystallized into a fixed policy with the establishment of the Paramount Stock Company.

This new organization, which is to include every player under contract to Famous Players-Lasky, except the stars, is to have as its primary purpose the development of the screen possibilities of every member to the fullest extent, as well as to acquire other promising players who reveal the possibilities of future stardom.

B. P. Schulberg, West Coast executive for Famous Players-Lasky, who has been one of the outstanding proponents of the "new faces" policy, conceived the stock company plan, which received the emphatic approval of Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the company, who declared it to be one of the most important moves ever made for the development of players within the industry.

The stock company has as its primary duty the task of keeping the contract players busy so that their screen possibilities will have the opportunity to develop, Schulberg stated. When there is no role in any of the productions being made at the Paramount Studio which particularly suits them, they are to be loaned to other producing companies. In this manner, they will be cast in a varied type of roles calculated to give full play to their talents, Schulberg said.

Maynard Cast

Ken Maynard, one of the most popular of Western stars, whose phenomenal rise is current comment, is leading man in "North Star," a current Pathe feature with the famous canine Strongheart.

All-Star Stuff

Ethel Clayton, popular favorite, who has grown up with the cinema is prominently cast in "The Princess on Broadway," a new Pathe feature.

May Robson's Play Coming In Film

After playing "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary" on the stage for season after season, on tour after tour that carried her into every nook and corner of America, May Robson will now bring her beloved character to the screen.

Metropolitan Pictures will sponsor the film version of Miss Robson's perennial footlight success. Zelda Sears had begun the adaptation.

Colleen Moore and Gwen Lee in First National's "Orchids and Ermine."

Beranger In the Leading Role In "Small Bachelor," For "U"

ANDRE BERANGER, popular screen actor, has been selected by Universal to play the leading role in "The Small Bachelor," the P. G. Wodehouse story recently acquired by Carl Laemmle.

The picture will be made by William Seiter as a Universal-Jewell for next season. It will be an all-star picture.

Seiter will go on an extended honeymoon in Europe with his bride, Laura La Plante, after the Wodehouse picture is finished.

Miss La Plante will be working in Universal's screen adaptation of "A Pair of Silk Stockings," the successful play by Cyril Harcourt, under the direction of Wesley Ruggles.

Tiffany's Plans

Tiffany Productions Inc., announces through M. H. Hoffman, vice-president that his company will make a maximum of twenty-six feature productions for 1927-1928 and three special super productions for long run Broadway presentations.

New Rork Film

Casting has been completed on "His Son," the Sam Rork production for First National Pictures. Lewis Stone is featured. Ann Rork, Lilyan Tashman, Tyler Brooke, E. J. Ratcliffe, Priscilla Bonner and Arthur Rankin complete the cast.

Jean Arthur and Mae Busch in "Husband Hunters" for Tiffany.

Johnny Hines Picks Story By Elmer Davis

An announcement comes from C. C. Burr's headquarters in Hollywood that the producer has secured Elmer Davis' Liberty Magazine story, "White Pants Willie," as Johnny Hines' forthcoming First National vehicle.

The story ran about a year ago as a serial in the national weekly, and attracted wide attention.

The comedian and C. C. Burr are now engaged with their scenario and gag staff, composed of Peter Milne, Howard Green, Kerrie Clark, Horace Woodmansee, George Amy and Director Charles Hines, and are constructing the comedy sequences for the new picture. Production will start about April 1st.

Nancy Nash Has No Leisure Time

Nancy Nash, one of the new "finds" on the Fox Films West Coast Studio lot, has little leisure these days. Her time is divided between the role of "Michaela," Don Jose's sweetheart in "Carmen" and that of the vivacious flapper around whom the plot of "Rich, But Honest" centers.

"Rich, But Honest" is based on an original story by Arthur Somers Roche and is being made for Fox Films under the direction of Albert Ray.

Stage to Screen

Kenneth Thomson, leading man opposite Julia Faye in "Turkish Delight" was signed to a long-term contract after Cecil B. DeMille saw him opposite Mrs. Fiske in a New York play.

Camera Appeal

Louis Natheaux, who appears in "Turkish Delight" for the DeMille studio, was born in Danville, Illinois. He wanted to be a doctor, became a soldier instead, and now is an actor.

Chicago Societies Honor Will Rogers

Honors continue to be heaped upon the head of Will Rogers, America's "poet lariat," who is returning to the screen in a series of little Pathe features depicting his European travels.

Will made such a good picture in "With Will Rogers in Dublin" that the United Irish Societies of Chicago gave him an official christening the other day under the Gaelic equivalent of his name, "Liam MacRuadhri."

George O'Brien and Janet Gaynor in "Sunrise" for Fox, directed by F. W. Murnau.

Norma Talmadge Starts Work On First United Artists Film

Miss Talmadge had two days' rest between completion of "Carmille" and the first day's "shooting" on her initial United Artists Picture.

"The Dove," which in screen form is laid in mythical semi-tropical land, gives the star a new type of role.

Roland West, associate producer in the Joseph M. Schenck organization, and the director of "The Bat," also directed "De Luxe Annie," one of Norma Talmadge's greatest successes.

Real New Yorker

Paul Sloane, directing "Turkish Delight" at the DeMille studio, is a New Yorker. He was born and educated there. Sloane started in the picture business with the old Edison company, as a writer. Then he took to directing for Paramount. Cecil DeMille took Sloane with him when he started his own organization.

Cast Complete For "Quality Street"

With the exception of the role of Napoleon, the entire cast of Marion Davies' "Quality Street" has been selected, it was announced last week at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio by Irving G. Thalberg, who assigned Marcelle Corday to the role of Henrietta Turnbull and Margaret Seddon to the role of Fanny Willoughby.

Conrad Nagel will again play opposite the blonde star. Helen Jerome Eddy has the role of the heroine's maiden sister, while Flora Finch and Margaret Seddon have the roles of the Willoughby sisters.

The picture will be directed by Sidney Franklin. The screen story, based on the Barrie play, was written by Arthur Lewin and Hans Kraly.

"First Degree" Ready

Reginald Wright Kaufman's "In The First Degree," has been completed by Sterling Pictures, according to an announcement from Henry Ginsberg, president of Sterling, now in Hollywood. Alice Calhoun heads a strong cast, with consistent support by Gayne Whitman, Gareth Hughes, and Bryant Washburn. Minor roles are played by Trilby Clark, Joseph Girard and Charles Meaken.

Henry Ginsberg Announces His 1927-28 Program For Sterling

EIGHT feature pictures of generous proportions will constitute the production line-up of Sterling Pictures Corporation during the coming production year, 1927-28, Henry Ginsberg, president of Sterling, announces.

For the past three months Ginsberg has been buying up special feature stories by well known writers, feeling that essentially noted author-names combined with a judicious selection of box-office star names and experienced production workers will put Sterling over big.

The titles on the Sterling line-up for 1927-28 are: "Stranded," by the world-famous Anita Loos, author of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes"; "It Might Happen to Any Girl," by Cosmo Hamilton; "Pretty Clothes," by Peggy Gaddis; "Outcast Souls," by John Peter Toohey, from his Collier's story "On the Back Seat"; "Undressed," by John Leeds; "Marry the Girl," by Norman Houston; "Burning Up Broadway," by Wallace Irving; and "A Million For Love," by Peggy Gaddis.

Mrs. Wallace Reid to Produce Two Specials For Lumas Film

SAM SAX, president of Lumas Film Corporation, states that contracts have been signed for the exclusive distribution rights to two special productions made by and starring Mrs. Wallace Reid.

The stories and titles have already been selected and preparation has started on the scenario and advance production plans. The first is entitled, "The Satin Woman," and the second is "Hell Ship Bronson," each subject being of a widely different nature and calling for entirely different methods of treatment.

The productions will be made under the personal supervision of Mrs. Wallace Reid, who will also be started in each picture.

The box-office success of "The Red Kimona" and "The Earth Woman," both produced by Mrs. Reid last season, led to the new contract.

M-G-M Purchases "Engaged", New Stage Comedy By Hurlbut

"ENGAGED," a comedy from the pen of W. J. Hurlbut, author of many successful stage plays, has been purchased for the screen and will be filmed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"Engaged" is a modern New York and Paris story of a thrice divorced woman who became engaged to a mooning youth in order to capture the heart of his uncle. The woman succeeded in her plan, despite the fact that the three former husbands and the young fiancee claimed she belonged to each of them individually.

The play, just written, has not yet been produced on the stage, but will be offered soon in New York.

J. Frank Brockliss, managing director of First National, repeats a message from Robert Lieber, president, telephoning from New York to the sales convention in London.

Ralph Ince and Margaret Livingston in "Breed of the Sea," an F. B. O. Gold Bond.

Elinor Patterson, "Miracle" Nun, Signed to "U" Picture Contract

CARL LAEMMLE has signed Elinor Patterson for Universal pictures. Mr. Laemmle saw Miss Patterson in her role of the Nun in "The Miracle." He sent for her. Her father, Joseph Medill Patterson, of the Chicago Tribune and the Daily News of New York and owner of Liberty Magazine, accompanied her to Universal City for a test. This test was so satisfactory that a contract was entered into immediately.

Miss Patterson has had no experience on the screen, but was chosen by Morris Gest for the role of the Nun on the stage after a number of celebrities and international beauties had played it.

It is Mr. Laemmle's intention to give Miss Patterson an intensive training in picture work leading her gradually through its intricacies to eventual stardom.

Miss Patterson has two younger sisters. Her mother was Alice Higinbotham of Chicago.

Lease Signed

Rex Lease has been signed to a long term contract with that organization by Edwin King, vice-president in charge of production of F. B. O.

A-B-C on studio lot—Just because these little ones are movie stars is no reason why their education should be neglected—and it isn't—Fox Films has built this beautiful schoolhouse and supplied real teachers. Authors Must Be Showmen, Says Schnitzer

"The showman-writer," says J. I. Schnitzer, senior Vice-President of Greater F. B. O., "will be a development of the swiftly-changing motion picture scene."

"What the industry requires now," says the F. B. O. executive, "are showmen-writers rather than merely literary writers. The writer who can write from the angle of the practical showman and at the same time put across character and plot effectively in the terms of motion pictures, will prove a most helpful factor in the season to come."

"The crying need of the business, as I see it today, is showmanship. We must have showmen-directors, showmen-writers, showmen-producers, showmen-distributors. The beginning and end of our business is showmanship."

"We are interested, of course, in certain art phases of the motion picture, but in our efforts to achieve perfection in the technical forms, we cannot afford to overlook the all-vital angles of showmanship on which this fascinating business is built."

Twelve Productions Under Way At M-G-M West Coast Studios

THERE is no let up in production activities at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, for during the past two weeks twelve companies have been working on as many pictures, all of them in the camera stage of production.

Ernst Lubitsch is in the midst of production on the special, "Old Heidelberg," in which Ramon Novarro and Norma Shearer are co-starred in leading roles.

King Vidor has under way another M-G-M special, as yet untitled, with Eleanor Boardman and James Murray in the featured parts.

The new Marion Davies production, "Tillie the Toiler," is now nearing completion under the direction of Hobart Henley.

The Reginald Barker production, "The Branding Iron," a story of the Swiss Alps featuring Aileen Pringle, Lionel Barrymore and Conrad Nagel, has been in production for four weeks.

William Nigh, who made "The Fire Brigade," has just completed "Mr. Wu," Lon Chaney's latest starring vehicle, with an all-star cast in support.

"The Unknown," a new Lon Chaney special, is now making ready under Tod Browning's direction.

Harry Millarde, who made "Over the Hill," is directing a French comedy-drama, "On Ze Boulevard," featuring Lew Cody and Renee Adoree.

"The Trail of '98" is under way under Clarence Brown's direction, on location in Colorado. Ralph Forbes, Tully Marshall, Karl Dane and Harry Carey head the cast.

The third Tim McCoy production, the third to be directed by W. S. Van Dyke, went into production last week.

"The Thirteenth Hour," directed by Chester Franklin, has a cast which includes Lionel Barrymore, Jacqueline Gadsden and Charles Delaney.

"The Bugle Call" stars Jackie Coogan, supported by a strong cast.

Colleen Moore's Newest Picture, March Release

"Orchids and Ermine," Colleen Moore's latest John McCormick production, a March release, has been pre-viewed for First National officials at the New York home office.

This is the picture that Miss Moore came East to shoot exteriors on several months ago. Alfred A. Santell directed. Appearing opposite the star is Jack Mulhall.

Miss Moore has the role of a telephone girl in a New York hotel and her eventual capture of an honest-to-goodness millionaire. The production is breezy, slangy and true to life.

In the supporting cast are Sam Hardy, Gwen Lee, Alma Bennett, Hedda Hopper, Kate Price, Jed Prouty, Emily Fitzroy, Caroline Snowden, Yola d'Avril and Brooks Benedict.

Chaney Special For M-G-M Hit In Philadelphia

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's special, "Tell It To the Marines," starring Lon Chaney with William Haines, Eleanor Boardman and Carmel Myers featured, recently opened at the Stanton, Philadelphia and was hailed by all the newspaper critics as the most sensational and entertaining picture of "Leatherneck" adventure in film history.

The production is playing to capacity crowds throughout the country, as well as at the Embassy, New York City, where it is in its fourth month.

Powell Signed

Russ Powell, noted character actor, who recently played the burgomaster in Marion Davies' "The Red Mill," has been added to the cast of Jackie Coogan's new M-G-M starring vehicle, "The Bugle Call," now in production.

"The Crystal Cup" Will Be Screened

John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production for First National Pictures, announces that "Wid Gunning," who produced "Babe Comes Home" will, as his next production for First National, make "The Crystal Cup."

This was Gertrude Atherton's best seller in book form. The treatment for the picture is now being prepared by Jessie Burns and Bernard Verhaus.

"Thanks for the buggy ride," says Marion Davies in her Cosmopolitan M-G-M picture, "The Red Mill"

Tiffany Productions Booked In Chicago's Big De Luxe Theatre

TIFFANY PRODUCTIONS, INC., have booked their pictures in the leading Chicago theatres through their Chicago Exchange manager, A. J. McLaughlin.

"The First Night" with Bert Lytell and Dorothy Devore was played in the Roosevelt, Diversy and the Pantheon, all de luxe houses.

"Redheads Preferred," with Raymond Hitchcock and Marjorie Daw is booked to play the Granada, Marks Brothers' finest theatre on the North Side and in Schoenstadt's Piccadilly.

"Husband Hunters" with Mae Busch, plays Jones, Linick and Schaefer's Rialto Theatre, in the Loop.

Romance blooms in "Young April," the DeMille production with Joseph Schildkraut and Bessie Love.

Marion Davies in J. M. Barrie's "Quality Street"

Conrad Nagel, who appeared opposite Marion Davies in "Lights of Old Broadway," will again be seen with this star in "Quality Street," her next starring production according to announcement by Irving G. Thalberg.

Nagel will have the male lead in the famous Sir James Barrie play, and Miss Davies will play the stellar role of the whimsical and quaint heroine of the story, laid against a background of the Napoleonic wars 'early in' the nineteenth century.

The film rights of this immensely popular Barrie opus were recently acquired especially as an exclusive Davies vehicle, and the blonde star will be seen in the role which Maude Adams made famous in America.

The picture is to be directed by Sidney Franklyn, who directed Marion in "Beverly of Graustark."

Chicago Critics Lavish Praise On McCoy Film

"Winners of the Wilderness," Tim McCoy's second starring Western and directed by W. S. Van Dyke, who directed McCoy's first production "War Paint" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer recently opened to an enthusiastic audience at Chicago.

Joan Crawford, Roy D'Arcy and Edward Connelly are in the supporting cast.

M-G-M has now started production on McCoy's third Western, a story by Peter B. Kyne of California frontier life as yet untitled, with Van Dyke again directing.

Miss Levien Busy

Sonya Levien, who recently completed the continuity on "The Heart Thief" which stars Joseph Schildkraut and which Nils Olaf Chrisander is directing for Metropolitan, is now preparing the continuity on "Harp in Hock," which will soon go into production at Metropolitan.

"Lonely Ladies" To Be Screened

"Lonely Ladies," a story by Lenore Coffee, will be the vehicle in which Lewis Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson will next be co-starred, according to John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production for First National Pictures. Ray Rockett will produce the picture.

Gilbert-Garbo Production Is "Cleaning Up"

"Flesh and the Devil," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production starring John Gilbert with Greta Garbo and Lars Hanson, continues its success inaugurated at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, where it had a triumphant record-breaking four week run.

The production, according to Manager R. Brown of the Cameraphone Theatre, East Liberty, Pa., has been the best bet his theatre has had in the last six months.

John Gilbert and Greta Garbo were unanimously acclaimed the most marvelous combination this part of the country has seen in years. "Give us more pictures like this one," wired Manager Brown.

On the opening day of "Flesh and the Devil" at the State Theatre, New Bedford, Mass., it was necessary to call on the police to handle the crowds. The manager intends to bring it back soon for another week's showing.

Louis B. Mayer, in charge of production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"The Fourth Commandment," "U" Special, For Release March 20

UNIVERSAL announces the release of "The Fourth Commandment," Emory Johnson's screen epic of family life, for March 20th. The picture is a super-production and takes its place on the Universal schedule along with the outstanding releases of the past such as "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "Merry Go Round," and similar "specials."

"The Fourth Commandment" has been hailed by those who have pre-viewed it as the greatest picture of "mother-love" ever made. In it Belle Bennett has exceptional opportunities to play the wide variety of girlish, matronly and mother roles for which she is famous. The story was written by Mrs. Emilie Johnson, the director's mother, and mother and son adapted it for the screen.

An unusual cast was given to Johnson by the Universal studio executives, for the making of this picture. Mary Carr, that other grand old mother of the screen, plays a role little if less important than the mother role played by Miss Bennett. Then, too, there is Bobby Agnew, Henry Victor, June Marlowe, Leigh Willard, Brady Cline, Catherine Wallace, Kathleen Myers, Frank Elliot, and little Wendell Phillips Franklin.

Ivan Petrovitch, Ingram "Find," Medal Winner

Ivan Petrovitch, Rex Ingram's latest "discovery," playing the leading role in Ingram's current production "The Garden of Allah," for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's release, has just been decorated by the Serbian Government with the "SVETI SAVA," Serbian Medal of the Legion of Honor, for his work in motion pictures. The ceremony took place in Paris, when the actor's latest film opened.

Petrovitch, a Serbian, born in Novi Sad. Ingram found him about a year ago, and chose him to play the lead opposite Alice Terry in "The Magician." Miss Terry has the feminine lead in "The Garden of Allah."

This is the second decoration Petrovitch's native country has given him. During the war he was decorated with the SVETA ANA, the greatest honor Serbia can confer.

Capt. Salvation's Wild Crew Now Sails the Main!

John S. Robertson, who is directing the production of "Captain Salvation," with seventy-five members of the company, is at Catalina Island, to film the sea sequencer of this new Cosmopolitan Production, adapted from the novel by Frederick William Wallace.

After making the exterior scenes on the island, the company will spend two weeks on the high seas, living aboard a large sailing vessel which has been converted into a convict ship for the purpose of the picture. Much of the dramatic action of the picture takes place aboard this ship.

Among the leading members of the cast who accompanied Robertson are Lars Hanson, the Swedish actor who has the leading male role in the picture; Ernest Torrence, who plays the part of the captain of the convict ship; Pauline Starke, Marceline Day, George Fawcett, Flora Finch and Sam de Grasse.

Fox Picture In "Roxy" Theatre, Week, May 15th

"Ankles Preferred," a Fox Film's production featuring Madge Bellamy and Lawrence Grey, has been booked by S. L. "Roxy" Rothafel for his new Roxy theatre for presentation during the week beginning May 15th.

Based on an original story by James Hamilton, "Ankles Preferred" tells an amusing tale of how a young girl of great beauty found it impossible to use her brains. J. G. Blystone directed this picture as his fortieth production for Fox Films.

An excellent supporting cast aids the principals and includes such capable players as J. Farrell MacDonald, Barry Norton, Joyce Compton, Marjorie Beebe, Arthur Housman, Allan Forrest, William Strauss, Lillian Elliott and Mary Foy.

Long Contract For Anton Grot

Following his excellent work in the art direction of "Vanity," Leatrice Joy's current starring picture, Anton Grot's contract with DeMille Studio has been extended for a long period, according to information from William Sistrom, general manager.

Blystone Starts 'Grand Flapper'

J. G. Blystone has started directional on his forty-first production for Fox Films.

Nina Wilcox Putnam's story, "The Grand Flapper" will be the basis of this veteran director's efforts.

Holmes Herbert has the leading male role with Olive Tell in the role opposite him. Character support will be given by Earle Foxe, Margaret Livingston, Richard Walling, Evelyn Keefer and Mary Foy.

Norma Shearer Scores In West In 'Demi-Bride'

Norma Shearer's latest Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle, "The Demi-Bride," opened to record business at the State, Los Angeles, despite torrential rains which prevailed throughout the first five days of the engagement.

Miss Shearer, as the charming little Ciquette scores another hit to add to her long list of successes.

The film will have its New York premiere at the Capitol within the next few weeks. Miss Shearer is now co-starred with Ramon Novarro in making M-G-M's elaborate screen play, "Old Heidelberg," which Ernst Lubitsch is directing.

Gilbert's "Show" Scheduled For Capitol Theatre

John Gilbert's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle, "The Show," follows M-G-M's "The Taxi Dancer," at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, where Gilbert's last starring release, "Flesh and the Devil," recently set a new world record by chalk-ing up a four-weeks' engagement to a business of almost $250,000.

"The Show," in Los Angeles registered one of the most profitable engagements in the history of the State, and drew "raves" from coast reviewers.

FACING TEMPTATION—Conway Tearle and Irene Rich in Warner Bros. "My Official Wife."

Ivan Doline and Eileen Percy in "Burnt Fingers" for Pathe.

Director Frank Strayer wields the baton for Shirley Mason and Cullen Landis in "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," a Columbia Production.

Fuzzy Woodruff, Alanta's Critic, Praises Shorts

Fuzzy Woodruff, widely known dramatic and motion picture critic of the South and The Atlanta Georgian's dramatic critic, likes Educational Comedies and admits it. In his daily theatrical and movie column of the Georgian, he recently came out flat-footed for these Short Feature comedies as follows:

"House managers are gradually awakening to the fact that Educational Comedies can go a long, long way toward strengthening a movie program. There's a corker at Loew's this week.

"In the past three weeks the picture show that I enjoyed most was a picture show that displayed one of these offerings. I don't say that they make a tremendously outstanding feature, but I do say they go a long way toward relieving movie monotony that threatens all too often."

Geo. Gray Goes West To Build Up His Serial

J. E. Storey, Assistant General Manager in charge of short subject production for Pathe, has assigned George Gray, Patheserial author to West Coast production unit, where he will collaborate with Director Spencer Bennet on the filming of his new serial story, "The Hawk of the Hills."

George Gray is a well known newspaper man, and writer, and is the author of the True Detective Series of two-reel dramas released by Pathe. He also wrote the novelization of "Leather Stocking," one of the most successful Patheserials, and for five years edited the Pathe "Sun."

The Patheserial "Crimson Flash" launched Gray on his career as a chapter story writer.

Lead With Banks

Ruth Dwyer has been selected as the leading lady for Monty Banks in a forthcoming Pathe comedy "A Perfect Gentleman," according to announcement from A. MacArthur, associate producer in the Banks Enterprises.

Chase Does It

Charley Chase, the debonaire Hal Roach comedy star, wrote the story for his latest production, "A One-Mama Man." Chase is an accomplished scenarist, and is responsible for most of his own comedy stories.

Edna Marion Signed

Edna Marion has been signed by Jess Smith for a role in "The Poor Nut."

Two New Comedies Completed By Al Christie For Educational

"Poodles" Makes Circus Picture

"Poodles" Hanneford, premier bareback rider of the world and well-known circus clown, who is making two Mermaid Comedies for Educational, has completed his first comedy, "Circus Capers." His antics, riding bareback, now famous in North and South America as well as in Europe, are featured in this first picture, which was produced under the supervision of Jack White.

Mermaid Completed

"Brain Storms," an Educational-Mermaid Comedy featuring Clem Beauchamp, George Davis and Phil Dunham, has been completed at the Educational Studios. It was directed by Stephen Roberts under the supervision of Jack White.

Here Comes Ruth

The initial picture in which Ruth Perrine, winner of the Film Fun girl contest, appears has been titled "Dumb Belles." It is an Educational-Billy Dooley Comedy with Billy Dooley in the principal comedy role.

Charming Scenics

Remarkable "shots" of a light shining in a harbor lighthouse off the coast of Hawaii form one of the outstanding features of the new Bruce Scenic Novelty for Educational.

"Cash and Carry" and "Jail Birdies" To Be Released Shortly; Neal Burns and Bobby Vernon Starred

"CASH AND CARRY" AND "JAIL BIRDIES" are the titles selected for two new comedies just finished at the Christie Comedy Studio and soon to be released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. "Jail Birdies" stars Bobby Vernon in an original story by Sig Herzig, directed by Walter Graham. Frances Lee, one of the most promising of the Wampas Baby Stars of 1927, appears opposite Bobby as leading lady.

Buddy Roosevelt's Newest Western

Buddy Roosevelt, Pathe's young Western star, has just completed "The Fightin' Comeback" a story of love and recklessness characteristic of Buddy. Clara Horton plays the part of Goldie, the girl who falls in love with the dashing Buddy. Others in the cast are Richard Neill, Robert Homans, Hank Bell, and Sidney Goldin.

"Lucky Star's Secret" was written by Christopher Booth, and appeared in Western Story Magazine. It will be directed by Richard Thorpe.

Pathe Author

"Slim" Whitman, who signs his checks (if any), Philip H. Whitman, was recently discovered by a long lost cousin in the town of Dalton, Ga. Whitman writes Pathe comedies for Mack Sennett and gets his name on the screen for so doing.

"Jail Birdies" finds Bobby Vernon as a college student, arrested for speeding on the day he was to have graduated. Large sets which include jail scenes and a scene showing Bobby at work on a rock-pile are employed in this comedy. A large cast speeds up the action, the supporting roles being taken by George Hall, George Burton, Phil Salvadore, Jack Gray, Tom Dempsey, Bob North, Georgia O'Dell, and Charles Meakin.

"Cash and Carry" boasts of an entirely different story. It features Neal Burns, with Edna Marion heading another big supporting cast. This comedy is a hilarious treatment of the lighter side of department store work, with Neal and Edna as two clerks, Bill Irving as a floorwalker and Billy Engle as the owner. Arvid Gillstrom directed, from an original scenario by Frank Roland Conklin.

Lupino Lane, In Hollywood, For Comedies

Lupino Lane, comedian starring in his own series of comedies for Educational release, is back before the camera at Educational Studios, where he will complete his current series of six two-reel comedies.

The popular screen star recently closed an engagement with the Hollywood Music Box Revue which had the longest run of any musical production ever to play in Hollywood.

Lane is working in a two-reel comedy written by himself and directed by Charles Lamont, who is so widely known for his splendid direction of Juvenile Comedies.

Doing Interiors

Pathe's "Crimson Flash" serial unit is now filming interiors at the Cosmopolitan Studio in New York, following two months' location work at Charleston, S. C., and on shipboard.

Like a Ton of Lead

Sally Phipps In Trio Of Roles Simultaneously

Sally Phipps, Fox Films Wampas Baby Star, holds the record for versatility and work among the younger players on the lot.

Before Sally completed the leading feminine role in "Girls," a comedy in which she and Richard Walling are featured, she was given the role of one of the flappers in "Cradle Snatchers" under the direction of Howard Hawks and the lead in "The Midnight Kangaroo," another comedy—all of which were in production simultaneously.

Far from complaining, Sally thought it a great idea and welcomed a chance to prove that she could play three parts at once.

Epic of the Tanks

"The Patent Leather Kid," Rupert Hughes' great story of the World War, for which Al Rockett is handling the production management for First National Pictures, is to be one of the biggest pictures from this organization in years. It is an Alfred Santell production. With Richard Barthelmess starred in the title role, Molly O'Day as his leading lady, and an all-star cast surrounding them, Rockett is sparing no expense to make this epic of the tank corps of the American army a super-special.

Al's Stunts

Al St. John, in addition to appearing in a rough-and-tumble wrestling match in "Roped In," the new Educational-Mermaid Comedy released this month, does some of his typical athletic stunts, including some acrobatics from an express loading truck, a slide from a second story window and some tumbles from a train and automobile.

Kiddies' Record

Sixty comedies stand to the credit of the children who make up "Our Gang," for Pathe, a survey of the last five years shows.

Awaits Title

Agnes Ayres has completed the Hal Roach-Pathe comedy upon which she has been engaged under the direction of Leo McCarey.

Banks' Comedy

"Horse Shoes," Monty Banks' new feature comedy for Pathe, was given a ripping previous showing at the Pasadena Theatre, Pasadena, Cal.

Ex-School M'am

Julia Faye, featured player in "Turkish Delight" being made at the DeMille studios, was once a school teacher.

Over The Top

Jimmy Finlayson and Martha Sleeper, Pathe stars in an athletic scene.

Christie Comedians Developing Novel Characters in New Films

CARRYING OUT Al Christie's instructions for Christie Comedies for the season of 1926 and 1927 that each release through Educational shall as nearly as possible present the star comedian in a characterization which is different from all the others, the various stars have developed a vast variety of comic personages and are appearing as the releases come out in a wide range of characters.

In Bobby Vernon's latest film, "Duck Out," he starts as a callow country youth and breaks out as a French chevalier and as a magician's assistant. In a previous film he was topped out as a Latin bandit, and in the next one to be made he will be a modern college boy.

Billy Dooley has remained a

Phil Dunham finds recreation in "His Day Off," an Educational Cameo Comedy.

Three Chicago Theatres Book Columbia Film

Three first-run houses in Chicago played Columbia's "Wandering Girls" during the week beginning March 7. The theatres are the Rialto, Granada and Capitol.

It is unusual for a picture to be booked by three first-run theatres in one city during the same week. "Wandering Girls," one of Columbia's most recent releases, is fast taking its place among the company's best bets of the season.

Henri Ellman, Columbia's representative in the Chicago territory, closed the deal.

In Colleen's Cast

Edythe Chapman has been signed by John McCormick, producer of all Colleen Moore's pictures, for a supporting role in Miss Moore's next starring picture for First National, "Naughty But Nice," which is now in work at Burbank. Donald Reed has the chief supporting male role.

Harlan in Cast

Otis Harlan, well known character player, has been added to the cast of "Old Heidelberg," which Ernst Lubitsch is directing at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, to play the role of the innkeeper in the new romance.

sailor through all of the season's releases but he has been investing each of these characterizations with a little different wrinkle to make them stand out. Jimmie Adams has appeared as a cannibal chief in "Wild and Woozy" and is also seen as a beauty parlor doctor, a soldier, a mountaineer and other characters in various films.

Jack Duffy appears as a Scotchman in kilts with Bobby Vernon in "Hoot Mon" and then switches to his own grandpop character in "Chicken Feathers," also appearing in part of the picture dolled up as an ostrich.

Neal Burns will appear in part of "Cash and Carry" as a clothing store dummy.

Star in Comedy

Mae Busch, having signed with Hal Roach, is featured in his "Love 'Em and Leave 'Em," for Pathe, a two-reel comedy.

Polly Returns

Polly Moran, the two-gun Sheriff Nell of Keystone days, has returned to the screen, and she has a role in a Jimmie Smith comedy, shortly to be released by Pathe.

"Spring Fever," Starring Film For Wm. Haines

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has begun work on William Haines' first starring vehicle, "Spring Fever," a screen adaptation of Vincent Lawrence's golfing comedy. Haines has just completed the role of a diamond athlete in "Slide, Kelly, Slide."

"Spring Fever" is being directed by Sam Taylor, famous for his work on many Harold Lloyd features and other outstanding films.

Production has also started on Tim McCoy's third Western starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, with W. S. Van Dyke directing. The new features is an original story of California frontier days by Peter B. Kyne. Dorothy Sebastian will play opposite McCoy.

The amazing progress of pictures will be described in accurate detail by the best trained writers of the business in the Twentieth Anniversary issue of Moving Picture World—out March 26. Step by step the history of the industry will be traced by men who know. Watch for the Special Edition.

Six Special Comedy Companies Rushing Fox's Summer Films

RESUMPTION of comedy activities at Fox Films West Coast Studio finds six companies shooting and a number of others getting ready for the spring and summer fun-fest, according to George E. Marshall, supervising director of Fox comedies.

Benjamin Stoloff has completed and is titling and editing "A. W. O. L.," a pretentious five-reel comedy based on the more humorous phases of the World War. Sammy Cohen and Ted McNamara, the unforgettable comedy pair of "What Price Glory" fame, are included in the cast. Gene Cameron and Betty Francisco have the romantic leads. The cast includes Holmes Herbert, Judy King, Jerry Madden and others.

Other comedies now in production include:

"Not the Type," a Van Bibber story, featuring Earle Foxe and Virginia Whiting. Jess Robbins is directing.

"Extra — Extra!" featuring Jerry Madden and Leliah Lewis. This is directed by Zion Myers.

"The Midnight Kangaroo," a Jules White production, featuring Gene Cameron and Sally Phipps.

Harry Sweet is directing the latest "Helen and Warren" release, with Kathryn Perry and

Yola d'Avril in "The Tender Hour"

Yola d'Avril, First National contract player, has been added to the cast of George Fitzmaurice's production, "The Tender Hour," and will play a supporting role. The cast includes Billie Dove, Ben Lyon, Alec B. Francis, Montagu Love, T. Roy Barnes, Charles A. Post, Laska Winter and George Kotsenaros.

Miss d'Avril, who is being heralded by First National as a genuine discovery, recently finished a role in "Orchids and Ermine."

Critics' Praises For Billie Dove

Billie Dove's talents as a screen actress of unusual distinction were recognized by metropolitan reviewers last week following the premiere of "An Affair of the Follies" at the New York Strand.

The picture received high praise on all sides and it was conceded one of the most entertaining pictures on Broadway in many weeks.

The beautiful First National player, who was recently signed by John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production, will be starred next season.

Allan Forrest in featured roles.

Ray Flynn has launched an Imperial comedy, with a carefully chosen cast, while Eugene Forde is cutting and titling "Girls," an O. Henry comedy with Richard Walling and Sally Phipps in the leading roles.

Mr. Marshall announces that the next few weeks will be the most active in the history of Fox Films comedies. Virtually every unit in the comedy division will be in work within a short time.

Anne Cornwall and Jack Duffy in the Educational-Christie comedy, "Love Off."

Sennett and Roach Comedies For Pathe Release March 20

MACK Sennett and Hal Roach divided two-reel comedy honors on the Pathe Short feature program for the week of March 20th. "A Small Town Princess" is the Sennett offering and "Duck Soup" is the Hal Roach Star Comedy.

Other releases of the week are: Pathe Review No. 12, the eighth chapter of the current serial "On Guard," "The Frost Line" a Grantland Rice Sportlight, Topics of the Day, No. 12, "The Magician," an Aesop Film Fable and issues Numbers 26 and 27 of Pathe News.

Pathe Review No. 12 presents: "Teamwork in Art": How modern industry has allied with art to aid the artist to cast from a completed model. The pouring of the bronze; Miss Brenda Putnam, sculptress, at work; American National Parks: The beauty and grandeur of our forest reservations. Zion Park, in the Utah country, caught from various angles by the camera's eye; "Trapping Wild Game in Africa," beginning the remarkable series of pictures made by Staff Camera-man Charles Charlton while with the Smithsonian-Chrysler Expedition to Tanganyika.

"The Frost Line" is the bi-weekly release of the Grantland Rice Sportlight series, a peculiarly beautiful subject from the land of snow and ice, no barriers to the hardy sportsmen and woman. The sports of the white spaces—dare-devil stunts, grace and beauty, the champions of ski and skate.

Topics of the Day No. 12 present the latest wit and humor culled from the international press. "The Magician" is the Aesop Film Fable offering for the week, which program is drawn to a close with Pathe News issues Nos. 26 and 27.

Universal Announces Release Of "Oscar, the Rabbit," Cartoons

ONE of the first releasing companies in the business to make and release animated cartoons was Universal. Windsor McKay's first pictures went through Universal hands, many of Pat Sullivan's, Hy Mayer's, and the only cartoon ever made by Milt Gross, called "In the Dumbwaiter," was a Universal product. Ten years ago Universal ceased to make them, and from that time to this, no animated cartoons have played any part in the Universal program.

Exhaustive investigations of the market and the demand on the part of theatres for a really funny animated cartoon have convinced the Universal sales force that there is an exceptionally good field for a cartoon made, released and backed by a reputable international releasing corporation. For three months negotiations have been going on with various cartoonists and manufacturers of animated cartoons. As a result of this, a contract was this week entered into between Universal and Winkler Pictures for 26 cartoons, the first of which is to be delivered in time for release September 1st.

The cartoons will be drawn by Walt Disney about the fortunes of a rabbit named Oswald, an exclusive creation of the artist, which the sales force is already variously designating as the Welsh Rabbit or the Lucky Rabbit. They will be released under the brand name of Snappy Comedies.

The contract was signed on Friday, March 4th, between Charles Mintz, President of Winkler Productions, and R. H. Cochrane, Vice-president of Universal. Mr. Winkler took the train Saturday for California, where he will establish a specially constructed studio for the purpose of turning out these Oswald comedies.

Of the twenty-six Snappy Comedies, thirteen will be made starring Arthur Lake, under the general series title of "The Drug Store Cowboy." The other thirteen will be known as the "Harold High-Brow" series and will feature Churchill Ross, who came into a great deal of popularity in "The Collegians" series.

On March 26 the Twentieth Anniversary Edition of Moving Picture World will make its appearance. Watch for it. It will be worth while.

Timely Reviews of Short Subjects

Edited By C. S. Sewell

"Grandpa's Boy"

Educational—Two Reels

Here is another crackerjack comedy in the popular series starring Big Boy. This time he appears as a lad raised by a poor woman with a large family and suddenly adopted by his rich grandfather and taken into his palatial home. With his dog he manages to upset the place considerably but finally wins over the grouchy old man. There is a lot of good human interest in the situations and bright kiddie comedy. The scenes around the poor home introduce some excellent touches as when the kiddie tells goodbye by kissing the animals, but draws the line at kissing the pig. There is also some clever and original slapstick. Robert Graves as the grouchy grandpa.

"Backward George"

Universal—Two Reels

Sid Saylor appears as a farm hand in this issue of the "Let George Do It" series. He loves the farmer's pretty daughter, but has a city slicker for a rival. The slicker plans to marry the girl so as to gain control of the father's valuable oil property and he imports a vamp to win George. The scheme fails, for the vamp double-crosses the slicker and marries the father, while George gets the girl, despite his bashfulness. It is moderately amusing comedy with considerable "rube" stuff and burlesque melodrama. Some of the gags are good for laughs and as a whole it should prove an average attraction with the majority of spectators, but it is not up to the best of this series.

"Petering Out"

Bray—One Reel

THIS HOT DOG CARTOON by the familiar combination of cartoon work and photography shows Pete the Pup and Walter Lantz, the artist, attempting to paper their home. Both are rank amateurs and, of course, get things in awful shape with Lantz being so covered with the striped paper a policeman mistakes him for an escaped convict. It is good slapstick stuff that will probably amuse the majority of patrons.

"The Crawl Stroke Kid"

Pathe—One Reel

SWIMMING THE English Channel furnishes the inspiration for another cartoon. This Aesop's Fable shows the cat training the mouse who, of course, proves a winner over the elephants and other animals. It is up to Paul Terry's usually high standard of amusement and cleverness and have several good gags.

"With Will Rogers in Dublin"

Pathe—Two Reels

Pathe, with this issue, inaugurates a new series of Will Rogers two-reelers based on his recent trip abroad. It is in the nature of a travelogue of places of interest in Ireland, with Rogers appearing in the different scenes and is embellished by a number of witty subtitles in Rogers' original and decidedly amusing style. It should prove a popular attraction anywhere. There are views of Trinity college, other places in and around Erin's capital, Rogers taking a ride on one of the jaunting cars and bantering with the driver, and several other enjoyable situations, making it a worthwhile offering.

"Icy Eyes"

Educational—One Reel

FELIX FALLS IN LOVE with a beautiful lady cat who gives him the icy stare. Broken-hearted, he captures a crook who is using a trained crow to rob houses and wins a big reward. The lady cat hears of this and sends for Felix, who gives her the icy stare when he finds she has grown large and ugly. This is a familiar subject, but it has been cleverly handled and is an amusing cartoon.

"Pathe Review 9"

Pathe—One Reel

OF ESPECIAL INTEREST in this Review is the first installment of pictures of the Putnam Expedition to Greenland under command of Capt. Bartlett, who also commanded Peary's ship on the discovery of the North Pole. Various views in Pathecolor of the city of Mexico are included in another section, while the third deals with sheep raising and shearing in Australia.

"Rock-Ribbed Maine"

MAINE'S ROCK-RIBBED coast, together with its wide varieties of topography and industries are interestingly shown in this Fox Variety. Among the subjects are salmon-catching, raising and harvesting potatoes, the sardine industry, a sheep farm, old landmarks and the pinewoods made famous by Longfellow's poems.

"The Mail Pilot"

Pathe—One Reel

THIS IS ONE OF THE subjects which could only have been produced by means of animated cartoons, so wildly imaginative and impossible are the stunts. It is clever and amusing, however, with several good gags. The mouse is shown as an air mail pilot attacked by bandit birds and rescued by his sweetheart, who appears in the nick of time hidden in a pelican's mouth.

"Ask Dad"

Educational—One Reel

Lewis Sargent has the leading role in this Cameo Comedy which concerns a young chap and his affair with his sweetheart and her irate father. It proves to be fairly amusing slapstick with most of the situations of a familiar type which have proven their worth as laugh getters in the past. Robert Burns appears as the butler, Audrey Ferris as the girl, and Henry Murdock as the father. Lew's flivver runs into a store and he picks up a girl. Later, he gets caught without his trousers when he takes them to a cleaner's and a traffic cop gets after him. He grabs an old man's trousers in a tunnel and of course this old man is the girl's father. Lew finally gets in right when he rescues the girl from a fake kidnapper.

"Pedigreed"

Educational—One Reel

THIS AMUSING CARTOON shows Felix the Cat inventing a pedigree so as to gain admission to an exclusive cabaret. He tells how one of his ancestors helped sail the ark and saved Noah from drowning, another taught the Egyptian pharaohs to Charleston and a third proved to Columbus that the earth is round by throwing a brick around it.

"Are Brunettes Safe?"

Pathe—Two Reels

An exceptionally good Charles Chase comedy and that is saying a lot. It should go over well with any type of audience. Charlie, in connection with his duties as editor of a "Helping Hand" column on a newspaper, decided to impersonate a chap who is his double. He finds out the other fellow is a crook and of course there is a general mix-up all around. Lorraine Eason appears as the girl and Kate Bruce, a real old timer, as the crook's mother. There are some exceptionally good gags in this one, especially where Charlie tries to sing after taking alum by mistake. This scene is a riot. There are a number of genuine laughs, even the critics who saw it cold in the projection room were laughing out loud.

"Bruce Scenics"

Educational—One Reel

TWO SUBJECTS PHOTOGRAPHED by Robert C. Bruce with his experienced eye to beautiful shots are included in this reel. "The Joys of Camping" shows a party with a dog on an auto tour camping in the forest and by a beautiful lake. The second, "The Wide Open Spaces," is like the story of the farmer who said there was no such animal when he saw a giraffe. Mr. Bruce pictures the open spaces as either covered by mountains or lakes, with villages and towns filling the spaces that nature left "wide open." It is well up to the average of this attractive series.

"The Jailhouse Blues"

Universal—One Reel

This single reel comedy starring Arthur Lake is built around the idea of two kids in jail for flirting and speeding respectively who tell wild yarns. Arthur makes himself out a great hero and Isobel Milestone poses as an international crook. Arthur gets out first and tries all kinds of schemes to get back and succeeds just as Isobel is released. The jailer refuses to have him around and throws him out with a warning to keep away and he makes good by going with Isobel. It is amusing farce and slapstick.

ROBERT Z. LEONARD, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer director, who has just finished Norma Shearer's new starring vehicle, "The Demi-Bride."

DOLORES COSTELLO, the Warner Brothers' star, in "The Third Degree," in a particularly striking pose.

THE famous "one-eyed Connelly" crashes the Universal City gate to see the fight staged by Norman Kerry and Arthur Edmund Carewe, in "The Claw."

W. C. SMITH is the new President of the Pathe Club, succeeding L. S. Diamond, who recently resigned.

JUNE MARLOWE, the Universal player, wants to make you believe that she downed the elephant with a snowball. As a matter of fact, he'd play dead for her any time.

Kansas City, Mo.

Kansas City, Mo., Mar. 10.*

IF the first week's attendance, backed up by a big business the second week, can be accepted as a barometer, Kansas City has accepted the Mainstreet Theatre's new policy of a movable stage and presentation type of vaudeville unanimously. Gail and Bob Sherwood's orchestra, which predominated throughout the program, has been engaged for a period of sixteen weeks, the vaudeville acts performing in front of the orchestra on the stage, which is 33 feet wide and 15 feet deep, its motive power being an elevator motor. As it now is arranged the stage may be made to move about forty feet. By changing the tracks it may be made to enter from the sides of the proscenium and completely disappear, if necessary, the surface being arranged so that it can be constructed at various levels.

For the third time in little more than one year the Elms Theatre, suburban house of Kansas City, was the victim of a fire this week, the damage this time being estimated at $800. The cause of the fire, which is said to have originated under the stage, was not determined.

At the first meeting last week of the Kansas City Film Board since the election of new officers. E. C. Rhoden, retiring president, was presented with a leather billfold and keyholder as a token of appreciation for his services of the past. The meeting was at the Hotel President. Guy Navarre of United Artists, new president, presided.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City, was the victim of a fire this Harpole, Dodge City, Kas.; Blaine Cook, Beatrice, Neb.; Tom MacGruder, Iola, Kas.; A. B. McCullough, Neosha Falls, Kas.; Oscar Reinert, Humboldt, Kas.; G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.

Ed Alpers, former Warner Bros. branch manager at Kansas City, who the other day was promoted to be district manager, left for Omaha Tuesday, where he will make his new headquarters. His successor will be Harry Strickland, whose activities have been confined to St. Louis. The personnel of the Kansas City P. D. C. branch is throwing out a proud chest this week because of the fact that District 6, of which Kansas City is a part, won the national P. D. C. contest. Laurel Ringler, booker at Capitol Enterprises, Kansas City, took a bride unto himself last week, but did it so secretly that no one yet has been able to learn who she was.

R. O. Pearson, Pathe branch manager, made a hurried trip to the Kansas key towns this week, while Leo Adler, Pathe auditor, spent three days at the Kansas City branch. M. C. Sinift, city representative for Warner Bros. branch, forgot all about economy the other day and came rolling down movie row in a new Buick sport roadster. Fred Willoughby of the Haywood-Wakefield Co., was initiated in the Educational Screening Club the other night, singing a few songs and amusing the crowd between reels. W. P. Bernfield, manager of the Tiffany branch, has added George Baumliester, booker, and Miss Mildred Angell, cashier, to his staff. Sam Shopin, Warner Bros., home office representative, was a Kansas City visitor. Bob Withers, branch manager for Enterprise spent a busy week in the territory. W. G. Bishop Metro-Goldwyn field publicity representative, is in Kansas City "putting over" the "Red Mill" at the Newman theatre.

Severson Bought Film, So Knows How to Sell It

Clarence J. Severson bought film in his many years of activity in the theatre field: it is only natural that he knows the arguments and the selling angles, now that he has become manager for Universal's prosperity branch in Butte, Montana. Mr. Severson came conspicuously into prominence in Montana through his theatre work in the State. Originally he was a banker but left the financial circles for the lure of the Liberty at Wolf Point.

During fifteen years he owned several other successful theatre ventures. But with all this experience in combating the sales pressure of the hosts of film salesmen he had undoubtedly been "up against," Mr. Severson decided that he could be a pretty good example of high-grade salesmanship in his own person—so he associated himself with the Universal Film Co. out of Butte, and in a short time his ability to "talk the language" and his executive ability were so noticeable that he was given the very first possible chance to put them to the highest use, and with the promotion of W. J. Heineman to the Salt Lake City exchange, Mr. Severson got into the Butte exchange managerial chair—and can he sell!

THE Colonial Theatre, New York and Illinois streets, has been temporarily closed by William T. Rasmussen, receiver of the Indianapolis Amusement Company, operator of the theatre.

A case of vandalism was brought to the attention of police here this week when K. L. Huddleston, assistant manager of the Producer Distributing Company found that two reels of valuable film were destroyed. The films were torn beyond repair and strewn over the hallway and washroom.

Ace Berry, manager of the Circle theatre, has announced that his theatre will give the first Vitaphone program in the city next week. In order to meet the increased expenses, the house has issued a new price list and changed the time of opening to permit a special show from 11 a. m. to 1 p. m. at a very cheap admission.

Iowa

C. J. Jordan has leased the Royal Theatre at Golden Oak, Iowa, to L. A. Bramson. The theatre will henceforth be known as the Royal Oak.

H. N. Davies has leased the Star Theatre in Sioux Rapids, Iowa. Mr. Davies already operates the Soloh and Frazer theatre at Spencer, Iowa, and has interests in the theatres at Spirit Lake and Milford.

Frolic Drew 5,000

5,000 people are reported to have attended Tacoma's second annual Film Frolic, held under the auspices of the Tacoma Theatre Owners' and Managers' Association, the Theatre Musicians' Association, and Association of Motion Picture Operators & Stage Hands, at the Greenwich Coliseum, on Washington's Birthday. The event lasted from 3:00 P. M. to 3:00 A. M., and was punctuated by a continuous entertainment of vaudeville, full length picture programs, and music from five rotating orchestras and a brass band. H. M. S. Kendrick, Pantages theatre manager, and president of the Tacoma Theatre Owners' and Managers' Assn., was Frolic Director and he has certainly given any future successor a high mark to shoot at.

Seattle's magnificent new Orpheum theatre is entirely under roof and work of lathing and plastering has been begun.

COMINGS and goings along Film Row during the past week brought W. H. Linton and his son into town from Utica, for dating up pictures that will be shown at the Olympic. Tom Thornton was up from Saugerties, while Amos Leonard of Syracuse, a Pathe salesman, was in town Monday for a sales conference and then swung out over the field. Mr. and Mrs. Alec Herman, together with Leon Herman, motored to Hartford, Conn., for the week-end, with the mother of the Herman boys. Moe Streamer of New York, connected with United Artists, was in town as was also Sydney Katz, district manager for F. B. O. Dave Bader of Universal's New York office, was in Albany Saturday for a conference with Julius Singer.

Howard Morgan, manager of the Educational exchange in Albany, is visiting the tailor's these days in anticipation of the trip which he will take to Los Angeles some time in April, attending the convention which his company will hold at the West Coast city, at that time. Mr. Morgan, who is one of the old-time exchange managers in Albany, expects to be away for three weeks, and upon his return he will be asked to address the Albany Film Board of Trade, on conditions as he finds them in Hollywood.

Hobart

With the approach of spring, some of the smaller theatres are preparing to reopen. Mrs. Ida Grant, of Hobart, will reopen her house soon, according to letters received by the film exchanges. The house in Constableville is also scheduled to reopen, while in Potsdam, Harry Papayanakos, operating the Rialto, may shortly reopen the Star.

Tannersville

Julius Byck, the deaf mute, who operates the theatre in Tannersville, is spending the winter at Lakewood, N. J. He is running the theatre in Tannersville only one day a week, that being on Saturday, but Mr. Byck journeys up from Lakewood each week to be on hand when the cash is counted at the end of the day.

Ticonderoga

Al Barton, manager of the Playhouse at Ticonderoga, and Lew Fischer, of Fort Edwards, who owns this theatre as well as several others, are spending a few days in Asheville, N. C. While they never showed any great ability as songsters in their home towns, it is said that Mr. Barton and Mr. Fischer are said to be now starring in a duet entitled: "When the Moon Shines on the Moonshine."

In Rouses Point all the residents are congratulating Mrs. Henry Sequin these days, over her recovery from a very serious operation performed at the Plattsburg Hospital. Mrs. Sequin runs the Liberty Theatre and is now back home.

Sam Slotnick, of Utica, made a trip to Albany last week for the purpose of dating up a number of pictures for his new theatre. The trip will be one that will not be soon forgotten by Mr. Slotnick, for he figured in an automobile accident that might have cost him his life. Mr. Slotnick was injured somewhat but congratulated himself as he climbed out of the wreckage and decided that he was alive.

Watertown

The northern New York headquarters of the Schine circuit will hereafter be located in Watertown instead of Ogdensburg. L. J. Carkey, manager of the northern circuit, will shortly move to Watertown, all depending upon how soon he can find a suitable house for himself and family. The change

Rieffel Gets 'Em, Even If They Take to Tall Timber

Franklin, N. Y., March 10.—There's no stopping O. R. Rieffel, that salesman with the Albany Paramount organization. He is there to sell and he goes after that and nothing else. It doesn't matter whether the exhibitor is sitting at his desk or—well, when he called to see E. D. Woodward, a well-esteemed exhibitor of Franklin, that gentleman had gone four miles into the woods. No, don't misunderstand—not to avoid the salesman, but to cut timber. Just as though hunting was his gravy, Rieffel went woodward after Mr. Woodward. And when he came out of the timber belt he had the contract.

is brought about by the recent acquisition of three of Watertown's theatres by the Schine brothers. Incidentally, a new organ is being installed in the Olympic in Watertown, the Schine brothers placing no less than ten new organs in as many houses in the state.

The Liberty Theatre in Watertown, managed by E. H. Arnold, was burglarized one night last week, and about $35 taken from a steel cash box. The burglars left no traces of their identity. Police claim that the burglars possessed a key to one of the doors of the theatre.

Changes along Film Row during the week included the resignation of Betty Donnelly as billing clerk for Pathe. She was succeeded by Dorothy Sheridan. Leroy Breitbrath resigned during the week as First National salesman and has returned to New York City. Ralph Pielow has been added to the sales force at the Metro-Goldwyn exchange.

Ausable Chasm

Charles Marshall, owner of the Bridge Theatre in Ausable Forks, is journeying back and forth to Palm Beach these days. Mr. Marshall has already made two trips to Florida.

Utica

Many friends of Bob Wagner, former well-known manager of the Rialto in Little Falls, now running an inn near Rome, will be surprised to know that Mr. Wagner has been seriously ill, losing eighty pounds in weight. He is once more on his feet, however, and met several of the film boys last week in Utica.

Cohoes

Louis Buettner, owning and operating theatres in Cohoes and Hudson Falls, left during the week with Mrs. Buettner, on a six weeks' trip to the Coast.

Northwest Kansas

John Graham has been added to the sales force of the Warner Bros. branch, covering Northern Kansas. A bridge party was given for women of the First National exchange Saturday by Miss Ruth Brewer, of First National, at the latter's home. C. A. Jones, Educational branch manager, is out in the territory looking for more contracts. The new Tiffany exchange is almost ready for its formal opening, being located at 113 West Eighteenth street. W. P. Bernfield, a veteran of many years, is the branch manager. All that can be said of W. C. Haynes of Universal and W. G. Bishop of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exchanges is that they are growing mustaches for no apparent reason.

MANAGER "Cap" Kinder, of the Brookline Theatre, held a potato matinee one afternoon recently, and admitted the kiddies upon presentation of five cents and at least one potato. The line-up of children extended two blocks, and when the show was all over, "Cap" had three bushels of potatoes, which he donated to the Parting of the Ways Home.

"Bob" Dunbar, booker at M.-G.-M., is back on duty after having been confined to his home for a week suffering from a severe cold.

H. R. Dennison, shipper at P. D. C., spent the past week-end in Cleveland, visiting his fiancée.

Miss Lottie Baer, for many years a well-known member of the Film Row Colony, most recently with the Film Distributing Company, this week took up her new duties as cashier at the Warner exchange.

George F. Callahan, Jr., of the Exhibitors Service Co., was married in Pittsburgh on Monday morning, February 28, to Miss Gertrude Bolkey. After an extended wedding trip to Porto Rico, the young couple will make their home in the Steel City. Congratulations!

West Virginia

M. A. Seybert is to spend $10,000 remodeling and improving his Park Theatre at Moundsville, W. Va. Work is to start in the early spring.

Harold Weinberger, formerly assistant manager of the Universal branch, has just joined the sales force of the Tiffany exchange in this city.

Vandergrift

The New Casino Theatre, Vandergrift, was reopened on Wednesday, March 2, after having been closed to undergo remodeling and enlarging to 1,000-seat capacity. The Indiana Theatres Company is owner of the house.

Turtle Creek

Anthony Jim has again added to his theatre holdings in Western Pennsylvania, having just acquired I. Golden's Colonial Theatre, Turtle Creek. Mr. Golden reports he is now in the market for another theatre.

Franklin

Grant Bolmer is now sole owner of the Ritz Theatre at Franklin, having recently purchased the interest of Mr. Bacharach, his partner. There will be no change in the policy of the house, and Mr. Bolmer will continue to serve as manager.

Meadville

Ralph Shadley, owner of the Academy of Music, Meadville, has more than made good at this house. When Ralph took the house over, some time ago, business was at its worst, and seasoned showmen shook their heads anent his chances to put it over. However, he has made the wise ones sit up and take notice, and the house is now a consistent money-maker. Improvements are constantly being made, and only recently new projection equipment has been installed, as well as a large new organ. A former Film Rowite, Charlie Lynch, has been manager of the house for the past several months.

Verona

Sam Navary, of Navary Bros., owners of the New Liberty and Pleasant Hour Theatres, Verona, has gone to Daytona Beach, Fla., for a month's vacation.

THE Bellingham Development Co., building the Mount Baker Theatre in Bellingham, Wash., has purchased the powerful one-ton searchlight from the old Battleship Oregon, and will place it in the 100 foot tower of the building. It will throw its powerful rays a distance of 16 miles and will be a unique form of advertising.

Elma

A theatre and hotel building to cost $40,000 will be built at 4th and Young streets, Elma, Wash. Work of razing one of the oldest buildings in town, the old blacksmith shop, is under way to make room for the modern improvement.

Seattle's oldest theatre, the Dream, built and operated by James Q. Clemmer, for many years considered the finest picture house in town, is being torn down and will be replaced by a commercial building. Clemmer was himself the first one to eclipse the Dream, with his Clemmer theatre at Second and Pike streets.

Tacoma

H. T. Moore, long associated with the Moore Amusement Co., of Tacoma, has incorporated with Calvin Heilig and Scott E. Henderson, under the name of City Theatres, Inc. Incorporation is for $20,000. Details are not known but it was learned here that Mr. Moore had sold his former interests to Ed Dolan, a partner of the Moore Amusement Co., connected with Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc. (Harry Arthur).

W. A. Tebbets was in Seattle from Portland this week, coming up to study the 5th Avenue theatre, which has probably brought more exhibitors who are contemplating building to its doors than any other house on the Pacific Coast. Tebbets has leased the new house building at Grand and East Morrison streets, Portland, from the owner, George Wetherly.

Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., have closed the Neptune in the University district, for extensive remodeling. The house will reopen as the Liberty with Paul Larson as manager.

Renton

B. W. Fey & Son, owners of the Renton Theatre, Renton, Wash., who recently purchased C. M. Dunn's Grand, eliminating competition, are remodeling the Grand extensively, completely altering the building front and foyer.

Portland, Ore.

An interesting announcement from Portland, Ore., has it that a Mr. Lloyd, former resident, was has amassed a large fortune in California oil lands, will return to his home town, investing not less than a million dollars annually in the development of Portland real estate. His first venture, scheduled for the immediate future, will be a large development at Grand and Killingsworth avenues, the center of which will be a 2,000-seat motion picture theatre of magnificent proportions. The house will be leased to outside management.

Because some fool in the audience of the Theatre Francais, St. Catherine Street East, Montreal, raised the cry of "Fire" without cause, the Quebec Minister of Justice has been asked to formulate additions to the Criminal Code to provide heavy penalties for persons inducing panic or disturbance in theatres or halls without reason. The crowded Francais Theatre was emptied within one minute and a half, the 1,800 patrons proceeding orderly to the street through the exits which were thrown open by ushers immediately. Thanks to fire drills, the theatre employees sprang to their emergency posts instantly and the crowd was well handled.

WITH the sale of four theatres by the Ascher circuit to the Cooney and Brunhild chains, several changes have been made among the managers. Harry Ruda, who has been at the Colony theatre which was sold to the National Playhouses, Inc., was transferred to the management of the Lane Court theatre, succeeding William Michaelson, who took over the direction of the Portage Park theatre for the Ascher circuit. Tom Norman at the Portage Park has resigned and will go into other lines of business. Manager Tibbitts will continue at the West Englewood theatre with the Cooney circuit and manager Miles will remain at the Highland theatre under the Cooney management, according to word from that house.

E. L. Thum will build a new movie theatre at Villa Park, Ill., that will seat one thousand and work will start at once, so as to have the house ready for late summer opening.

Clark and Bianchi circuit will start work at once on a modern 500 seat movie theatre at Vandalia, Ill. It is expected to have the house ready for opening this summer.

Morrison

The Morrison Theatre Company will soon start work on a new movie theatre at Morrison, Ill. Local capital will build the house.

Glencoe

A new movie theatre is projected for Glencoe, Ill., by a Chicago circuit, and it is expected that work will start at an early date. The projected theatre will seat 1,200.

A. G. Stolte with the Blank circuit is in Chicago for a few weeks making a close inspection of the Balaban and Katz system, which he will introduce in the management of the new Riveria theatre to be opened at Omaha, Neb., under his direction. He recently opened the new Englert theatre at Iowa City and new Newton theatre at Newton, Iowa.

The trade is sorry to hear of the death of C. C. Jones, formerly owner of the theatres at Johnson City and Cambria, Ill.

Ted Schlanger of the Chicago Universal Exchange has been appointed manager of the Washington, D. C., exchange by the company. He is succeeded here by Ben Eisenberg, who will have charge of the short subject department of the Chicago Exchange.

The Pathe Chicago executives held a meeting at the local offices with the managers from Milwaukee, Omaha, Detroit, Minneapolis and Des Moines offices. The chief topic was the Will Rogers one reel films that the Pathe offices will distribute to the trade at an early date.

Michigan City

Morris Rubin has taken a lease to the Dreamland Theatre at Michigan City.

Kankakee

The Vialta Theatre has been opened for business at Kankakee, Ill., and will show moving pictures only to their patrons.

AN auspicious opening party marked the premier of the new Keith-Albee Uptown Theater last Monday night, and dignitaries from the city and state were present. The house is situated far from the center of the city in a newly populated district, but is the largest neighborhood house in the city, seating close to 4,000. The opening pictures was a first run.

Contracts have been let on the new theater, store and office building at Redford, recently taken into the city of Detroit, and it will be one of the most imposing edifices in that neighborhood. John H. Kunsky has already leased the theater.

The Oakman Boulevard Theater, recently operated by Henry Keenan, has been sold to the London Operating Co., and possession has already been taken. The London Co. now has the Ferry Field, Oakman and Gladwin Park theaters and is negotiating now for one of the largest theatres in the downtown section.

Fire recently did considerable damage to the Strand Theater, Pontiac, now operated by the Butterfield-Michigan Theater Co. The blaze started in an adjoining candy store and most of the damage to the theater was done by water.

"What Price Glory" leaves the Shubert-Lafayette Theatre this Saturday night after a seven weeks' engagement, marked by good consistent business throughout the run.

Miss Hattie Rein, 26 years old, a book-keeper for the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, was wounded one day last week when a fellow-employee pointed an "unloaded" revolver at her and pulled the trigger. The bullet took effect in Miss Rein's neck. She will recover.

Peter A. Hughes, of the Detroit First National office, has left for the East, where he will sail some time this month for Ireland. He will spend several months with his parents there.

Lloyd A. Turrel, in charge of shipping at First National for the past two years, has resigned to become the manager of the Library Theatre, owned by William Slocum.

Charles A. Meade, for many years manager of the Regent Theatre and later a local film exchange manager, is renewing old acquaintances in Detroit while acting as manager of the road show of "What Price Glory," now in its fifth week at the Shubert-Lafayette.

Fred Shafer, associated with his brother Walter in the management of the Koppin Theatres in Detroit, was seriously injured in an automobile accident a few nights ago. He remained in the hospital several days and ROCHESTER, N. Y.—Bemat Amusement Corporation, Webster avenue, has plans by Leander McCord, Taylor Building, for brick theatre to be located on Webster avenue.

The Burt County Center Hall at Bertha, Neb., has been opened as a movie house. A. Southwell is manager. E. L. Sherbourne has bought the Crystal Theatre at Arapahoe, Neb., from W. P. Newbold.

Held a Special Laugh Feature in Butte With Thermometer 28 to 50 Below Zero

ALTHOUGH the thermometer in Butte, Montana, dropped to fifty below zero during the wind-up of Laugh Month at the American Theatre, the celebration was far from being a frost. The theatre had been trailing with Laugh Month all through January, but C. P. Scates planned a special laugh program, along the lines laid down by the Pathe Exchange for January 21-24, and brought the season to a close with heavy receipts. The house shows two changes a week, and Mr. Scates gave the laugh event the four-day half. It was put over through the aid of W. M. Hughart, of the Butte Pathe Exchange, who arranged to hook Harold Lloyd to a resemblance contest and Mack Sennett to a bathing beauty contest.

The program included Lloyd in Now or Never, Ben Turpin in a Harem Knight, Our Gang in Telling Whoppers, Kitty from Killyarny and a Felix the Cat; all but the cartoon are Pathe releases.

A week in advance newspaper teasers were hooked to painted boards in 24-sheet size announcing that "Anything can happen at the Comedy Carnival." These boards were all over town, and aroused much speculation.

At the same time a sporting good store blossomed out with the announcement of a bathing beauty contest to be held at both the American and the Winter Garden. A cup was presented in the name of Mack Sennett to the winner and all selected contestants were given new bathing suits by the store. Even with the thermometer at fifty below the contest gained impetus and proved one of the best bets.

At the same time a Harold Lloyd impersonation contest was arranged at the Winter Garden, which is a dance hall and not a theatre.

The exchange arranged for telegrams from Lloyd and Sennett to be sent from Los Angeles.

The rather small marquee was dressed with comedy cutouts and a banner proclaiming the Carnival, and two laughing heads, set in a V above the box office masked a phonograph playing the Okeh laughing record. It was kept repeating and the patrons began to laugh even before they had purchased tickets and entered the theatre.

In addition to the film program there was a dance novelty based on the Felix idea, and the entire program was a solid laugh.

Opening on a Friday, the theatre played to standing room that evening, and both on Saturday and Sunday large a large turnout, with a decidedly good Monday business, though Monday is not good as a rule.

It made a splendid wind-up to the comedy season, and at the same time it left the house in shape for a repeat whenever business drops, for the Comedy Carnival or the Comedy Carnival is a winner that can repeat

TWO OF THE WINDOW DISPLAYS AND A BILLBOARD ON BUTTE'S KOMEDIE KARNIVAL

C. P. Scates, of the American Theatre, Butte, Mont., put on a Carnival to close Laugh Month, collaborating with the Winter Garden dance hall in a Harold Lloyd resemblance contest and a bathing beauty contest for a Mack Sennett Cup. With a practically all-Pathe program the business was S. R. O. for three days with the thermometer 50 below zero. This entry won second prize in the Laugh Month Contest.

every few months. It does not depend upon any particular season. It is a business tonic good for any one of the twelve months.

If you are hazy as to any of the details, get one of the special campaign books from the Pathe Exchange, which will give full suggestions and also line up a number of advertising novelties.

Try an all-comedy event just once. Work it properly, and you will understand why we lay so much stress upon the idea.

Mr. Scates made a clean-up—so can you.

Matched Cards Were Kid Brother Seller

Membership cards in The Kid Brother Club were distributed by E. R. Rogers when Harold Lloyd came to the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga. These cards were serially numbered, and if you could find the duplicate of your number both yourself and your fellow member would be admitted to the theatre as guests. But with 3,000 of the cards distributed throughout the city, there was not a great deal of successful matching, though the children could think of nothing else out of school hours.

On a small distribution it is possible to play safe by not matching all numbers, but on a large distribution it will pay to be fairly generous with the duplicates since not many will match up. With a smaller number it might be well to number in triplicate and require all three to attend in a body. It's a great idea, however you work it.

Will Rogers was playing a date for one night, and Mr. Rogers paid for printing the programs of the opposition show, printing on the lower half; "Mr. Rogers, of the Tivoli, would like to have Mr. Rogers, of Beverly Hills, Cal., see Harold Lloyd at The Kid Brother at the Tivoli all this week."

A Dark Secret

The Saturday night before "Paradise for Two" opened at the Lincoln Theatre, Lincoln, Neb., W. S. Perutz got the loan of a window in a furniture store and stretched a sheet between two pillars. Back of this he set a man and a woman and threw their shadows on the screen with a flood light. The couple made love to each other all evening.

A CURB LINE TENT ON THE SILENT LOVER FROM DALLAS

The Melba Theatre obtained permission to come out to the curb. The box office was enclosed in a smaller tent and an awning ran along the entrance doors. The rental of the material was only $75.

A CLEVER FOYER BANNER FROM THE MAJESTIC THEATRE

T. Wilson Erwin of Austin, Texas, uses a fabric back for a display banner in the foyer of the Majestic Theatre, with indirect lighting. It is attractive and in keeping with the decorative design. This shows the Upstage announcement.

Started a Serial With A Formal Safety Drive

Most serials are put over with some special effort, generally a parade or a free matinee, but Peter D. Latchis, of the Colonial theatre, Keene, N. H., worked along new lines when he showed the first chapter of The Fire Fighters. He organized a safety drive.

At the close of the episode, he gave the children a talk on the Montreal disaster and told them how to get out of the theatre safely and quietly in the event of a panic. He was followed by a local insurance man, who gave a general talk on fire prevention and the importance of reducing fire risks in the home, pointing out that the fire heroes would have far less work if people would be a little more careful.

Following this the children were invited to entertain the others, and about twenty accepted the invitation, prizes being awarded by the applause of the audience, and following this the boys drum corps gave group and solo numbers, the latter also carrying prizes.

The result was that the children went home bubbling over with enthusiasm for the new serial, and the newspaper gave more than half a column to the story.

Blonde and Brunette Had Natural Colors

E. R. Rogers got out a novelty folder on Blonde or Brunette that involved die cutting, which removes it from the list of generally available material, but he worked an idea which is more cheaply copied.

The piece is a sheet of card about three by six inches. The left hand third folds over and is tabbed into a slot. The face of the card shows a man's back with his hand raised to scratch his head. On the reverse, placed so that it shows when folded over, is "B or B" with a question mark below. This side is printed in yellow and black so that there is one blonde and one brunette B. The hidden part of the card contains text for the picture at the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga.

Mr. Rogers also used his head to get some lipstick samples on this picture. He knew that there was a cosmetic with one shade for every complexion instead of the half dozen sorts most brands offer, and he obtained a supply of samples to go with a card reading, "Whether you are blonde or brunette, use this lip rouge." It helped to put the idea over, and gave reason for a lipstick matinee at which every woman was provided with a free sample; this being done in advance of the picture. The samples left over were handed to later patrons. It was effective and cost only the cards.

Reliables For Lloyd

Ernest Morrison used tried stunts for Harold Lloyd in The Kid Brother at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta. The best bet was a trackless train, the driver of which handed out heralds and goggles. An order of 10,000 goggles was used up and 15,000 programs were distributed at the theatre. Of course laugh insurance was taken out and an insistent billboard and newspaper campaign was carried out.

Working Again

Kenneth Tallmadge, of Pantages theatre, Vancouver, B. C., has revived the automobile reward idea and gives the traffic cops twenty passes each week to be awarded by them to the most careful drivers.

Permitting the police to make the awards gives the stunt a semi-official stamp that makes the idea more effective than ever.

Valencia Pottery Helps Mae Murray in a Window

A SILHOUETTE EFFECT FOR A LITTLE JOURNEY

Designed by Frank J. Miller for the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga. The rear of the car is a flat painting, but it would be even more effective with a two or three plane building and a shadow box silhouette effect.

Clever Questionnaire Got Much Attention

This will come too late to help you on this year's income tax, but salt is away. You can use it next year. It was devised by W. S. Perutz to advertise "Paradise for Two" at the Lincoln Theatre, Lincoln, Neb., but it will work on almost any picture not too dignified. It is headed with a black "Supplemental Income Tax" and a smaller "Business Questionnaire No. 23."

The questions are provided with blank spaces for reply, and run:

Are you married or single?

Why?

Did you withdraw any money from the bank the past year?

If so, where did you get it to put in the bank in the first place?

Are you on friendly terms with your relatives? . . . your wife?

If so, why?

When the volume of business is slow during the winter months, do you wear a belt or suspenders?

State average grocery bill and payments, if any?

Do you drink? . . . If so, where do you get it?

Exclusive of bootleggers, how many people are dependent on you for support?

Do you keep chickens? . . . Does your wife know it.

Are you troubled with cold feet? . . . whose?

It tallies with "Official advice. For further information see other side."

This is good for distribution where men congregate, but not so good for house-to-house, naturally.

Relics Helped Frontier

While The Flaming Frontier relates to the Indian Wars, the picture was helped over in Northampton, Mass., recently by a display of relics of the Civil, Spanish-American and World wars, donated by the G. A. R. and Veterans of the Foreign Wars. The collection was supposed to contrast the Custer equipment, as represented by the Civil War material, with the later fighting tools.

Boy Scouts distributed heralds and the Superintendent of Schools recommended the picture to all grade and high schools. A department store arranged a window of cowboy and Indian play suits, with a set of stills, and an interesting display was made in a vacant store window, all of which helped business at the Academy of Music.

A VALENCIA WINDOW FROM THE ALLEN THEATRE, CLEVELAND
Valencia ware is a new style of Spanish type pottery, and the theatre had several windows making a display of the new goods hooked to the Mae Murray picture. This one was augmented by a display of Spanish shawls.

Two Giant Lloyd Heads Helped The Kid Brother

G. R. Stewart made ten cutout heads of Harold Lloyd for an earlier picture and used them to help put over "The Kid Brother." Two of these he separated by an eight-inch box, which was just large enough for the head of a man who was employed to go about the streets with these heads on his shoulders.

THE TWO-FACED LLOYD

The cut gives the effect of the facing head, but the reverse was even more striking, since it suggested that the comedian was going down the street backwards. The head was adjusted on the shoulders so that the motive power could look through two holes just below the nostrils and scarcely noticeable. This stunt attracted more than the usual attention.

Mr. Stewart also effected an arrangement whereby any yellow taxi would carry a patron to the theatre during the run.

Michael Strogoff Has Colorful Lobby Decoration

Exceptional Campaign On Blonde or Brunette

Roy L. Smart, of the Rivoli theatre, Greenville, S. C., worked a fine campaign on Blonde or Brunette when he got the picture for two adys. He not only worked the usual press and litho campaign, but he got out a special edition of the local paper with a mass of interesting information dug out by the editorial staff through visits to the girls' college, the license bureau, beauty parlors, high schools, magazine stands and similar places. Most of the stories had to do with the relative number of blondes and brunettes visiting these places, but there were other stories on the difference in their actions, the preferences of blondes and brunettes and other features. It all made really interesting reading, very different from the usual press stuff.

Two days before the opening the newspaper tabulated the number of each visiting the Rivoli and Textile Hall and the day before the opening a man in a tuxedo was stationed at the local four corners to count the passers-by. He wore a large chest card lettered "I am checking blondes and brunettes." He carried two checking machines to do his tabulating and everyone was interested in the story which resulted.

A store carried a window display with blonde and brunette dummies and a large question mark, and lead off its advertising display with a special panel stating that while it should not decide between blondes and brunettes it would speak with authority about styles for each.

The lobby display was another question mark and this time the examples were bathing beauties cut from lithographs.

If shot the receipts far above normal, and yet the campaign was very inexpensive. It was the idea rather than the outlay which counted.

A DIFFERENT PERAMBULATOR FOR McFADDEN'S FLATS
This truckload of bricks was perambulated around the Broadway section when the picture played the Mark-Strand Theatre, New York. The sign explains that the flats were built of Hudson River brick.

Red Inked

Apparently C. O. Payne, of the Jackson Theatre, Pawhuska, Okla., had better than usual luck with his red ink extra, for the sheet overprinted for Laura La Plante went to the entire subscription list.

Perhaps the fact that he swung a co-operative page on the press book lines of the ability of the local merchants to supply all needs for a big night helped to get the red ink.

Just for a chaser he stenciled the street corners the night before the opening.

Naturally he is not kicking about the business he did.

A Hefty Kid Brother Helped Lloyd Comedy

When he came to play The Kid Brother at the Imperial theatre, Augusta, Ga., Frank J. Miller did not use the customary Lloyd impersonator. Instead, he got the fattest man he could locate and dressed him up to look as much like Lloyd as his flesh would permit. Then he gave him a satchel, properly lettered, and turned him out on the streets.

Mr. Miller had previously used straight impersonators and he figured that the reemployment of the idea would suggest just another Lloyd picture, while the three hundred pounder would suggest something different. There must have been something to it, for business was decidedly above normal.

Supplementing the perambulator, Mr. Miller used a 24-sheet on top of the theatre, put out 1,000 heralds and obtained a lot of special newspaper stuff. He does not figure that Lloyd should sell himself. He knows that even the best pictures must be sold, but that the better pictures can be sold to better advantage if properly offered. That's a point where many managers lose out. They expect the big stars to sell without advertisement, when in reality the advantage of a big attraction is that it merely provides the salesman with a better article to offer, and will yield a bigger return on proper sales effort.

Was a Cinch

Out in Denver a theatre had hooked the Post to a blonde or brunette contest in the interests of another picture. It had been running for two weeks when Walter League, of the Rialto, came in with his advertising for the Paramount picture and cashed in on all the advance work.

Things should be easy in Denver for a time. The Scripps-Howard organization has started an opposition to the Post and the last we heard the Post was giving ten pounds of sugar or twenty of flour with each classified ad, and the S.-H. was bettering that by a pound. It will be a cinch to land circulation schemes.

A COLORFUL LOBBY ON MICHAEL STROGOFF

Richness of coloring was even more effective than design in this display by Al Kauffman, of the Cameo Theatre, Pittsburgh, for the Universal's big bet. Special showings for the newsboys helped to make a noise.

Used School Blackboards for Special Posters

JOHNNY HINES' HIGH STEPPERS IN STEPPING ALONG

The lobby display from the Fifth Avenue Theatre, Nashville. Try animating the eyes on that large cutout when you come to play the picture. It will be worth the extra trouble to get the effect.

Used School Blackboards For Extra Advertising

It cost only a few passes to get three high school boys to letter "Tell It to the Marines" on all blackboards in the classrooms of the high school every morning for a week in advance of the showing of the picture at the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

The result was that "Tell It to the Marines" was accepted as a substitute for "So's Your Old Man" well before the end of the week.

The same boys also planted three oil paintings of the picture in the lobby. The work was done with the approval of the school authorities.

The Marine recruiters not only plastered their A boards but loaned an interesting display of relics for the lobby as well as a set of signal flags.

For the house Warren Irvin built a shadow box to go under the screen. This was lighted during the screening of the slides and trailer on the picture. When the Pathe News showed Gen. Butler reviewing the Marines at San Diego, Mr. Irvin flashed his shadow box on for that, as well.

The net result was a heavy additional business.

Bannered a Wrecker

Down in Greenwood, S. C., a garage has a wrecking car in the shape of an engine. It is parked in front of the garage except when it is out after a sick automobile. E. E. Whitaker, of the Liberty theatre, bannered the car with "You know what our Iron Horse can do, so see The Iron Horse at the Liberty, Monday."

As the car makes frequent trips to nearby towns, Mr. Whitaker got a large circulation for this single banner.

For years the local paper overprinted in red has been a favorite exploitation stunt, but Walter League, of the Victory Theatre, Denver, comes closer to home. He overprinted his house organ with a red A for "The Scarlet Letter" to hook in to his other advertising.

Each Merchant Conducted His Own Beauty Contest

Since there have been no reports of a riot in Austin, Texas, we assume that there was no local revolution, but T. Wilson Erwin, of the Majestic theatre, took a long chance when he worked a hook-up page on Blonde or Brunette.

He gave each advertiser on the page a pair of tickets to be given the most beautiful blonde or brunette patronizing the store during a given period. Just how the merchants came to a decision and whether gentlemen preferred blondes is not made plain, but it looks as though someone took a terrible chance and got away with it.

Each merchants gave Mr. Erwin a window display, which provided a lot of good locations, and two large pictures of Menjou were put on display, one in the downtown section and the other in the University centre.

With a full two weeks campaign, the business was particularly good on this picture.

Had Several Good Ones To Put Over New York

Five hundred postcards, mailed from New York, told as many residents of Greeley, Col., that the picture of that title was well worth seeing. It's old stuff, but the postmark and the pictures of New York scenes got an extra amount of attention out in Colorado.

For a cooperative page G. R. Stewart, of the Sterling, got seven merchants to participate, each paying for his own space and contributing a prize, the prizes being given for the best identifications of the seven New York buildings shown in as many advertising sections on the page. In addition to the usual neatness and correctness, information was considered in making the awards, which made the judging more simple.

The first of the Collegian series was played with this picture, and for this Mr. Stewart arranged with the college boys for a parade of their camouflaged Fords, the cars being filled with boys and girls and liberally provided with banners. It got the series off to a fine start, and the Collegians are going to make money for the Sterling.

Pilloried a Pilgrim

Putting a man in the stocks was one way T. Y. Walker used to put over The Scarlet Letter at the Noble theatre, Anniston, Ala. He had the stocks built in a truck and both the victim and the chauffeur were in Pilgrim dress. As strategic points the driver would stop the car and hand out heralds to the crowd of curious which invariably gathered.

The theatre staff, armed with red chalk, put scarlet letters all over the town's sidewalks, adding house name and full title. Both ideas helped toward better than usual business.

Scouts Assisted

Boy Scouts not only paraded on behalf of A Regular Scout at the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., but the scout masters loaned Manager Hugh J. Smart a lot of photographs of the local troops in camp and on hikes to use for a lobby display. This helped materially.

SELLING THE FLESH AND THE DEVIL AT ORLANDO, FLA.

Frank H. Burns made a nice display for the Beacham Theatre, with an artistic shadow box for a centerpiece and hand painted trees for the side displays. With a wide lobby, a shadow box does not get in the way.

Used a Vaudeville Specialty As a Trailer Stunt

Gave The Kid Brother 'Real Fishing Tackle'

Using the fishing cutouts from the 24-sheets on The Kid Brother, Sidney Dannenberg, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., cut away the pole and provided a real bamboo with compo board fish dangling from the end of a real line. The fish were large enough to carry the copy: "I'll be here Jan. 17th. Harold Lloyd."

These were displayed from each end of the marquee for three weeks in advance of the showing. A week later the cutouts showing the comedian looming through a huge pair of glasses, were hung flat against the wall. Both sets were spotted after dark.

With the opening, two large heads of Lloyd were tied to the down spouts which drain the marquee roof, these being on the under side of the canopy. They were large enough to be seen from the corner; which was a street car transfer point.

Most persons in Birmingham knew all about the coming of the Kid Brother long before he arrived to spend a week at the Strand.

A Valencia Contest

The Allen theatre, Cleveland, got a lot of extra business out of a silver cup and 10,000 heralds. The heralds announced that Mae Murray had contributed a cup to be awarded the best pair of Valencia dancers. The ten leading dance halls selected a representative couple to compete and the ten couples danced the finals at the Allen. Each hall was given a thousand of the circulars with its own imprint and in return carried lithographs and other advertising material.

Changed the Name

Newburgh, N. Y., has been much interested in the erection of a new hotel, and the structural steel was closely watched. When the signs announcing the erection were stripped to read "Hotel Imperial" instead of the original name, the town was astonished. The surprise continued until Charles R. Hammerslough started his regular advertising for the Pola Negri picture and restored the old name to the new hotel.

SOLD THE FLAMING FRONTIER THROUGH A MERCHANT IDEA
R. D. Suddarth, of the Midway Theatre, Dallas, Texas, contributed this contingent to a parade staged by merchants in his suburban section. Paraders were given a ticket to the first chapter of a new U serial and the Frontier.

Employed Many Angles For Chicago Faust Run

Not only were the German language papers used freely in advertising the UFA production of Faust in its Chicago run, but two hundred window cards were planted in the German section. A full page story was placed in the Sonntagpost, the same cut being used as that in the New York Staats-Zeitung.

The Chicago American offered a pair of seats to all who sent in honest criticisms of the picture, the tickets being good for any future date, since the writer was assumed to have seen Faust.

The picture was tied into the preliminary announcement of the broadcasting of the opera by the Chicago Opera Company, and Lyon and Healy and Wurlotzer gave big displays in connection with their phonograph records.

Four hundred half sheets were used on the elevated trains and a full lithograph campaign was used, while four ten-foot cutouts were used on the two entrances to the Randolph Theatre, the eyes and mouths being electrically illuminated.

Made a Vaudeville Act Trailer For The Show

Using a vaudeville team to put over a picture is something new in advance publicity. It was worked by the State Theatre, Los Angeles, for John Gilbert in The Show.

The manager got hold of a magician who was idle for the week and put him on in two specialties, the sword box, in which a girl is locked in a box and swords are thrust through from every angle without hurting the girl, and the trunk escape, which was Harry Houdini's big act thirty-five years ago.

At each show the regular trailer for the picture was started, but following a scene in which an illusionist appears, the picture was cut and a green light thrown on the magician as the cymbals were crashed. The two illusions were going through rapidly and in silence, and the trailer was resumed to announce the showing of The Show the following week.

The act was comparatively cheap and it made a very effective appeal.

Teased Scarlet Letter

Cards six inches square, printed with a red A and the title were used in advance of the regular campaign on The Scarlet Letter at the Sterling theatre, Greeley, Col. G. R. Stewart put out 500 of these on telegraph poles, fences and other tack locations, later using a similar letter, but in black, to start off his regular newspaper campaign. As the cards had attracted much attention, the advertising got that much of a start. The result was a nice three day business.

Didn't Ask

Charles H. Amos, of the Florida Theatre, St. Petersburg, figured that if he asked permission to enter a float in the Civic Parade some one would be sure to say "NO," more or less all capital letters. So he didn't ask. He merely put two eight-foot cutouts of Chaney in "Tell It to the Marines," on a truck, masked in with palms and swung into line. Everyone thought some one else had given permission.

A COMPELLING BANNER ON THE MAGICIAN FROM LOUISVILLE
The Kentucky Theatre used striking colors and gold lettering to give the idea of a different sort of play when it ran the M.-G.-M. release. The head is copied from the three sheet shown at the right.

Two Column Cut Works Better in Wider Space

Plessner Does Well With State Displays

F. K. M. Plessner, of the State Theatre, Reading, Pa., sends in some excellent spaces, two of which we reproduce here. Both are four eights, which is a nice proportion if you can afford thirty two inches. In Plessner's case he stays a little below the Reading average, apparently, and yet gets as much in his smaller space.

The more effective of the two is that on Love 'Em and Leave 'Em. The title is displayed in a reverse band through the centre of the space, with a picture of Clara Bow. No selling is done other than to announce that it is direct from its run at the Paramount Theatre, New York.

PLESSNER'S BEST BET

He knows he does not have to sell the picture more intensively, for the show practically has been sold in advance through the retention of a local revue. Plessner worked the idea last year and at the last minute he had to hold the stunt over for a second week. This time he planned to hold it for the second week, and the hold over was the real sales factor.

Local talent always sells, and juvenile talent seems to beat the adults. Reading used to be noted in vaudeville as the home town of a number of big acrobatic and gymnastic acts. Apparently they dance, as well.

The second space was run the previous week and offers The Popular Sin. Here the cut is smaller, to carry the stars and still allow space for the opening announcement of the revue.

FOR THE POPULAR SIN

The display is well done and it will be noted that Mr. Plessner has not made the common error of running small type lines across a four column width. Plessner was one of the first class of the Publix Managers' School, and he remembers. His lines are proportioned to the size of the type, and there is no line that runs too wide. Moreover he tells his message with a terseness that brings conviction.

We think that if John F. Barry did no more than teach his students good advertising, the school would be well worth while, but that is only one of the many angles, and his boys are making good wherever they have gone. Plessner has done very nicely at the State.

Sells Michael Strogoff In Small Single Column

This is only a 55 line space from the San Francisco newspapers on Michael Strogoff, about a four inch single, but using only the title for display, it gets over as well as many spaces several times the area.

SHOWN FULL SIZE

Space is costly in San Francisco, and this represents an investment that many towns would pay for a quarter page. The title forms the attractor, and the use of plain Roman for the small lines makes the space clear, though they would not have come through so well had they not been leaded out. More could not be said in many times the space. It is merely a matter of putting the message over, and here it is nicely carried in small compass.

Plan Book Cut Made Basis of Wide Space

Using a plan book cut for Johnny Hines in Stepping Along gives the Broadway Theatre, Lawrence, Mass., a three sixes that shows up well, though there is a little too much of the straight line arrangement. The agent has done his best to break this with panels on the top and bottom lines, but while this holds the small type bank at the bottom to about a two column width, the space is a little too formal still. It is difficult to do much with a space completely broken by a cut.

The cut itself is a good one. The space is kept free of too much detail and the lines are all calculated to give the idea of speed. You get the idea of comedy from the "air" of the cut, and the light detail avoids the suggestion of heaviness. The cut is better than average.

CROWDING THE CUT

However, it might have been better to have reduced the top lines a little. That heavy "Commencing Sunday" has a tendency to draw from the lighter cut. But even with that line retained, the cut would have come through better had the two following lines been set in light face, and with nothing in particular to fight, light face would have done as well as bold. If you use this cut, do not kill it off with too many bold face lines, particularly above the cut. Give it a chance to work, and it will sell extra tickets through the suggestion it conveys.

Gets Three Space With Only a Two-Column Cut

Using a two column cut for a three column space gave the Ritz Theatre, Mansfield, Ohio, a better display than could have been made with a full three. The layout is a three nines, and as this cut is pretty deep, a two column space would have looked awkward, but it works into a three as nicely as though it had been specially designed.

A TWO IN A THREE

A Two Column Cut Works Better in Wider Space

Setting the cut over to the left gave room for the text to run beside the cut instead of above or below, as would have been necessary with a two column width. And since the cut takes up part of the space, there is less danger that the lines will run too wide.

Even at that the space might have been hurt by trying to fill all the room at the right with type, but the Mansfield used three banks, with a change of type for each, and got a pretty result.

There is not a single word in the entire layout that cannot be read with ease, and as a result the effort is possessed of full sales value.

Circular Design Helps Midnight Sun Display

This seems to be a home-drawn design for The Midnight Sun, done by the Ritz Theatre, Mansfield, Ohio. It employs the circular effect, which in theory and generally in practise gives the most pronounced appeal, and here the circle does have that effect. The figure of Miss La Plante seems to have been taken from the plan book, but the announcement is type set, and particularly good.

THE CIRCLE ATTRACTOR

Much of the copy has been derived from the plan books, since it cannot well be improved upon, but it has been displayed to the best advantage by the printer, and the theatre has not given him too much to put into the space. And one or the other insisted on small type faces, to permit white space. We imagine that it must have been the theatre, for a house that can make as good a selection doubtless follows through and sees to it that the printer does his work properly.

Splashing up those lines so that they filled the entire space would have turned the reader from the announcement, but there seems to be little to read, it is divided into small paragraphs, and the average person is apt to read straight through, since it entails so little effort.

That is one of the big trick in layout. Try and fool your reader. Make it look as though you were not saying much. Hand it out in small doses, and you'll find that much more will be read in four paragraphs, each a little different from the others, than half as much in a single block, even though you may paragraph.

In the present instance we think that the average reader got the cut first of all. That led to the title. The lines immediately below were read and then the cast. The eye went to the top of the page for the "Coming next week," read the lines just below and then, if at all, picked up the two bottom lines. Probably most readers went down for that before turning to another space, but we think most sales were made without their aid. They serve largely as elinchers.

Remember that selling lines do not sell until they are read, so be careful to make their reading easy, both through legible type and inviting typography.

Hoel Works for Effect In Pittsburgh's Smoke

Some weeks we commented on a novel form letter used by the Warner State Theatre, Pittsburgh, on Private Izzy Murphy. A. K. Hoel, who used to be at Keith's Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., writes that the space is one he planned. Hoel forgot to write that he had shifted, and we were unable to credit the design to him at the time.

Mr. Hoel writes that he is trying to get contrast in his State spaces. His predecessor had the same idea, but worked for light drawn designs. We think that Hoel does better with white space effects, along the lines of Frank Burns. Here is one of his spaces for The Third Degree.

LIGHT IN PITTSBURGH

In place of a design so light that it loses strength, Mr. Hoel uses a strong cut, but surrounds it with white space. He uses light faces to gain contrast for star and title, he does not crowd with type, and he gets an art effect through rule work.

All of this would be effective in any newspaper. It is intelligent layout that is strong enough to command respect and light enough to win admiration. Back in his old home town this would have been excellent advertising.

But in Pittsburgh Hoel is keeping company with some of the poorest advertising done in the entire United States. He is in a town where the theatres used huge hand lettered spaces, done in messy black, where few advertisers use straight type, and where even these faces are the blackest they can get.

The result is that these State spaces stand out like a ray of sunlight on a dark day, and his two tens get more attention than spaces three or four times the size.

Some of the other theatres get a good space now and then, but Hoel proves that the compositors can give him real, civilized stuff, if he insists—and he does.

If Hoel can get spaces like this in Pittsburgh, there is no reason why the others cannot. Our hat is off to Hoel. He has done what no one else has achieved in Pittsburgh since we can remember—and we remember back about fifteen years.

Until the others follow him, Hoel is getting for the Warners about four times as much as the others are delivering to their bosses, and doing it at about half the cost.

Sales Talk on Saint Is Trifle Confusing

Taking the lines from the press book without a check-up is not always to be advised. Here's a display on The Blonde Saint which is based on the plan book talk and tells how the girl found herself "Alone on a savage island with the man she hated—and only he stood between her and the mob."

CONTRADICTIONARY TALK

Mobs are not the usual furnishing of deserted islands, and people are apt to wonder if the theatre knows what it is talking about. The plan book writer knew what he wanted to say, but he did not say it, and the theatres have copied his chat without check-up.

Made Good

Montague Salmon, of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., announced that he had fifty copies of Valencia to present to the ladies attending the first matinee of the Mae Murray production. Before the sale opened 130 women had gathered in the lobby, and Salmon beat it down to the music store for 80 additional copies. He avoided a riot and made 80 firm friends for the Rialto.

Riley, a marine sergeant and ringleader aboard ship in the traditional warfare between gobs and leathernecks, falls in love with a telephone girl and breaks arrest to go to her when his pet enemy is about to take shore leave. Together they unmask a mail robbery and Riley wins his commission and the girl. A rollicking farce with an adventure finish.

Riley gets his nickname from his favorite expression. When warned of pending trouble his response is "Let It Rain." And it does rain, for Riley leads the leathernecks in their raids on the sailors, and wins the disapproval of his superiors, though they appreciate his abilities and urge him to qualify for his commission.

Of course there is a girl—this time a telephone operator in a big hotel, and Kelly, a gob on the same ship, also aspires to her favor, which leads to still further encounters. Finally Riley is put in arrest, but breaks out when Kelly announces he is about to visit the girl. He helps to circumvent a gang of holdup men who plan to raid the Marine-guarded mail, and eventually his technical sins are forgiven him.

In the first reels the story is pure farce, fast moving, replete with incident and filled with color. There is one delightful bombardment with baseballs at an amusement park, and some realistic scenes aboard an actual battleship.

At the close a shift is made to drama with a strong comedy relief and nothing MacLean has ever done surpasses his argument with Wade Boteler as to how many shots one of the mail robbers has left in his gun. It is entirely in pantomime for the robber is in a mail sack and shooting at sound. MacLean insists there is one bullet left. Boteler declares there are none. Silently they check and recheck the shots. Then the robber lets go with his last cartridge and MacLean triumphs. Had Chaplin devised this sequence it would be praised in every criticism, for Chaplin has done nothing finer.

This scene serves to relieve the tensiety of a situation in which a mail car, cut from the rear of the train, is racing down grade with every prospect of smashing into a pursuing engine, loaded with marines. It is good strong melodrama and well handled.

"Let It Rain" is excellent comedy and about the best work that MacLean has done. It is a little over emphasized in the early scenes, but it gets better balanced toward the middle and works to good drama.

Wade Boteler is an admirable foil in the role of the gob, never taking the stage from the star and yet feeding him to the full, while Shirley Mason, as the telephone girl, is sprightly without being pert.

Frank Campeau, as the major, plays farce without losing his dignity. The other parts are well carried.

It is brightly written, well directed, and should materially advance MacLean's status as a comedian. It is one of the best chances he has ever been given.

BASED ON A POPULAR STORY by Robert Terry Shannon, which has been transferred to the screen by Harry Millarde, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is offering "The Taxi Dancer" a story of the so-called Broadway set in New York, with Joan Crawford and Owen Moore in the leading roles.

Inheriting her mother's beauty and ability to dance, Joslyn goes to New York to use her talents on the stage. As she has the same impetuous strain which led her mother into trouble, her people fear for her. Unable to get an entry into the profession, Joslyn is down-hearted and befriended by Lee, a sure-thing gambler. She lands a job in a hall where they charge ten cents for each dance, hence the title "The Taxi Dancer." A girl friend introduces her to a millionaire and she meets and becomes infatuated with a yellow cad, a professional dancer, who accidentally kills a rounder and comes to Joslyn for protection. She hides him in her apartment and he shows his true colors by making an improper proposal to her. Nevertheless she decides to stick by him and is willing to sacrifice herself to the millionaire in order to save him. The police get on the dancer's trail and he is killed trying to escape and she is left free to find happiness with the gambler who has reformed and has gone to her rescue.

It will be seen that this is a story of New York's fast set. It is a colorful yarn purporting to show the hard road that a pretty girl has to travel who gets in with this set and the various insidious temptations that beset her. It is melodramatic in style but the situations are worked out with smoothness and considerable plausibility and are based on the idea of the extreme lengths to which men will go and the various schemes to which they will resort to get a pretty girl in their power. Certainly, the men in this set are shown as a pretty sorry lot so far as women are concerned, with the exception of the hero and he is a crooked gambler until his love for the girl reforms him.

Joslyn, unable to get a job as a stage dancer, goes to work in a dancing academy and is befriended by Lee, a gambler. She becomes infatuated with Kelvin, a professional dancer, who is a cad, and when he kills a rounder, she hides him. To save him she agrees to sacrifice herself to Brierhalter, a millionaire, but Kelvin is killed trying to escape the police and Joslyn finds happiness with Lee, who has reformed. Interesting drama of New York life.

WITH LOUISE FAZENDA in the featured role, and Herman Raymaker directing, Warner Brothers are offering an out-and-out farce comedy of an exceedingly familiar type in "The Gay Old Bird."

Based on probably one of the oldest of farcical situations, the plot concerns a father of twins whose wife leaves him in a huff. News of the arrival of a wealthy relative results in the substitution of the ignorant maid for the wife and the situation is further complicated by the reappearance of the wife and the borrowing of another pair of twins, plus the jealousy of the wife and of the chauffeur who is in love with the maid.

Director Herman Raymaker has used all of the tricks of the trade and utilized every possible angle in devising the situations and succeeded in turning out a comedy that should prove moderately amusing to patrons who can still be entertained by such well-known material. Frequently used for two-reelers, in building to over six the situations are naturally drawn out and additional twists given to prolong the action as for example, the inevitable bed-room episode is carried much further than usual although there is nothing offensive. This film would be materially improved if it were cut judiciously and drastically.

The entire cast has worked hard and Miss Fazenda is genuinely amusing in some of the situations, especially where she struggles in getting into the clothes of her mistress who is much smaller.

With Madge Bellamy
A J. G. Blystone Production
CAST:

Norah Madge Bellamy

Jimmy Barry Norton
Length—5,498 Feet

Although Norah has shapely ankles, she tries vainly to get a job where she can use her brains. At last she becomes a model and is insulted by a millionaire and is glad to accept the love of her steady, Barney. Sprightly comedy of today.

the greatest drawback to the career she had planned of making her way by using her brains, is "Ankles Preferred," a J. G. Blystone production for William Fox, featuring Madge Bellamy.

The story is slight and centers in a situation where this attractive girl gets a job as a model and is used by her employers as a means to getting more money from their financial backer. They establish her in a swell apartment, the backer misunderstands, she manages to make a boob of herself and is finally glad to accept her real sweetheart.

The action moves forward at a good pace and is interspersed with amusing incident and peppy modern comedy and romance dealing with the heroine and her two girl friends and their various types of sweethearts. It is bright and pleasing light entertainment that should prove a good box office attraction as there is a lot of sure-fire stuff.

Madge Bellamy is well suited to the leading role and Lawrence Gray makes a likeable hero. Arthur Housman and Marjorie Beebe furnish a lot of good comedy while Barry Norton and Joyce Compton are pleasing as a romantic young couple. Allan Forrest makes a capable gentleman villain while J. Farrell MacDonald is good as an Irishman running a French shop.

"Ankles Preferred" has several enjoyable situations and should please patrons who are in search of bright and amusing light entertainment.

PAT O'MALLEY AND Helen Ferguson appear in the leading roles in an interesting crook melodrama "Cheaters" which is being offered by Tiffany Productions, Inc., with a well-selected cast which contains quite a number of other well-known names.

The story opens with Pat and Helen in honest jobs, very much in love with each other, attempting to go straight and eventually to get married. The fact that they were crooks is gradually developed and with the appearance of their old leader the melodrama develops and builds up to a situation where the safe is robbed by the boss crook who also kills one of the pair's pals and blames the affair on them. How the matter is finally straightened out, ending by the death of the leader in escaping the police and the freedom of Pat and Helen is developed in such a manner that it holds the attention and results in better than the average entertainment of its class. The story introduces a good human interest angle in the person of a shell-shocked boy who does not remember his identity and cannot refrain from stealing, and there are some good twists, with the final freedom of the crooks brought about in a plausible and rather out of the ordinary manner.

The leading players acquit themselves creditably, and George Hackathorne has a congenial role as the shell-shocked boy. Heinie Conklin contributes comedy as a colored porters and Alphonz Ethier gives a satisfactory performance as the detective. Lawford Davidson makes a capital gentleman crook and Claire McDowell is of course excellent as the shell-shocked lad's mother.

"Metropolis"

Paramount Presents a Most Interesting Experiment
In Purely Stylistic Form of Cinematic Production

OPINION WILL BE DIVIDED as to the merits of "Metropolis," the newest U. F. A. super-spectacle by Fritz Lang, who made "Siegfried." Already the picture has been hailed as greater than "Variety" and as "Caligari" gone still more mad. Appreciation or disapproval is largely a state of mind.

Commercially "Metropolis" is a film production that can be sold to many classes of patrons if sold intelligently. It should not be contrasted with "Variety" because it is no more like that production than "Variety" is like a Sennett Comedy. "Variety" was a story of real life, told with a wealth of realism and enhanced by curious camera tricks and light effects. "Metropolis" is a highly imaginative glance into the future told almost wholly in stylistic form. It has very little heart interest for the bulk of the narrative is speculative philosophy, but it does tell a sane type of story rather than a weird dream fantasy, such as was "Caligari." Whether or not the story makes appeal, the production will interest the intelligent and the curious. Its fate in the smaller towns is more or less problematical and doubtless will depend almost wholly upon the manner of its offering.

In the main the story seems to be derived from "Frankenstein" and the German drama "R. U. R." It draws material suggestion from the mob mass effects of other plays, notably "Potemkin," and it rivals Verne and Wells in its effort to look into the future.

"Metropolis" then, is the story of a highly organized city in which mechanical labor and mechanical laborers have been developed to the highest pitch. The laborers are human Robots; those mechanical men with all but souls whose uprising forms the basis of "R. U. R." They are housed, for some unexplained reason, below the surface, and their labors at the machines are also performed underground, but on a higher level than their homes. They dress alike, walk alike and think only of their tasks.

Their labors support in idle luxury another class of persons; but little seen in the drama, who live in gigantic skyscrapers, with elevated auto and tramways, flying machines and other innovations.

Now and then the children of the laborers are given a brief afternoon above the surface and on one of these occasions Eric, the son of John Masterman, controller of this wonderful humano-mechanical machine, espies Mary, the daughter of a workman, and pursues her into the mechanical nether regions. He does not find her, but he witnesses a terrific accident, due to the collapse of an overtaxed workman, and goes to his father to protest. He has known nothing of this inferno of brutism and is strangely moved.

Joseph, Masterman's secretary, is dismissed, not alone because he has permitted Eric to unveil the horrors, but because he does not keep fully informed as to what is going on in the work regions. According to the story, dismissal is equivalent to sentence to death by starvation. Indignant at his father's heartless action, Eric goes with him. Together they become laborers at the machines.

Now Eric meets Mary, who preaches the brotherhood of man in the catacombs dug by the early Christians similar to those at Rome. She is overseen by Masterman and Rotwang, an inventor who has finally produced a sentient mechanism but without a soul. Masterman orders the inventor to give the first of these the likeness of Mary and to keep her imprisoned while the creation goes to the catacombs to docilely teach submission to the order of things.

Lacking in soul, the mischievous Mary-mechanism preaches not obedience but revolt, and leads her dupes to break down the machinery. The wreckage of the plant floods the workmen's galleries, but the real Mary and Eric, with Joseph's aid get the children to the surface. The Mary-mechanism is burned and the master-planner is made to realize that brawn and brains must ever walk hand in hand.

Pictorially "Metropolis" is a photographic marvel. Practically all of the sets are studio made, many of them of immense proportions. The scenes abound in photographic tricks, many of which are far ahead of anything yet attempted, notably the scene in which the mechanism is given Mary's form, when the aura streams from her body to that of the dummy. The mass handling, much of it in contrasting forms, is often impressive in the extreme; notably in the revolt, but more impressive when handled as a mass than in geometrical forms. In one scene they rush to the cathedral in an exact triangle, and in other scenes they advance up or descend stairways in compact squares, which is supposed to be more impressive, but is not.

The above ground scenes, with their terraced buildings, lofty autoways and illuminations are excellent, and very early in the play there comes, by way of prelude, shots of moving machinery that achieves and surpasses the effects of the "Mechanical ballet" which received considerable notice some time ago.

On the other hand many of the effects are curiously limited to the commonplace. There is a lack of variety to the machinery, a want of invention in the surroundings, a sense of striving for effect in the inventor's laboratory that may impress at the moment, but upon analysis falls far short. For example, the telephone is still used as in our own age, with only the direct television feature added.

In one place Masterman (and even the name shows lack of invention), speaks of a biblical quotation as from "an ancient religion," yet the latter action takes place in and around a cathedral, though in the catacombs Mary is supposed to have revived the worship of Christ and His principles. This may, of course, be blamed upon the English titles, by Channing Pollock, whose "The Fool" and "The Enemy" find an echo here. With another tittle the story might be regarded as subtle soviet propaganda, for there is the ever recurrent warning that labor, crushed, inevitably will rise. In almost every phase of the play shows curious alternations of strength and weakness, but it is vitally interesting as a study in stylism, and is something that no student of the cinema can afford to miss.

Alfred Abel, as the oppressor, is a good picture of the hard-headed business man of today rather than the super-genius of tomorrow, but Gustav Froelich is weak where strength is most needed, though personable and easy in his less impassioned moments. When the action rises he hopelessly poses. Rudolf Klein-Rogge, as the inventor, more nearly realizes the author's aim than the other men. He is convincing, contained and just properly mysterious. The honors easily go to Brigitte Helm as Mary and her mechanical counterpart. She gives to the former a rather stolid purity, but as the machine she suggests the devilment that lurks in the soulless form.

The purely stylistic play has not yet gained its place in the American cinema. It will not gain its place through "Metropolis." but this picture will materially aid in deciding the acceptance or rejection of the purely cinematic expression in this country. This is its chief appeal.

"The Taxi Dancer"

heart of gold and jeopardizes herself to protect Joslyn, are well drawn and interesting and are capably portrayed.

The manner in which the early facts regarding the girl's inheritance is brought out seems stilted and artificial, but the action gets more easy as the story progresses and gains in interest and entertainment value. There is considerable amusing comedy in the furnished room house and the way the hero and his pal trim suckers, and a lot of human interest in the story, which even if it is not always realistic is entertaining and while not a great picture "The Taxi Dancer" should prove a good attraction in the majority of theatres, for the characters are the kind of people that the outsider likes to think make up the Broadway crowd and there is an undoubted fascination in their doings, a peep at the inside of this life as it were.

Joan Crawford gives a good performance as the girl and Owen Moore has the most sympathetic part in the picture as the gambler hero. Gertrude Astor gives a colorful and at times amusing performance as the flashy girl friend and William Orlamond is excellent as the gambler's pal.

Several centuries hence, labor, through the development of machinery, has been ground to nothingness, but extreme oppression has caused a discontent that is about to break into flame. To overcome this, the overlord seeks to supplant the girl agitator with a machine that will urge obedience. Instead, the mechanism fans the fires of hatred into a revolt that gives labor its place beside intellect. An imaginary story of years to come.

BEYOND THE ROCKIES. Star, Bob Custer. One of Custer's best. A good looking girl in the western was something new and the crowd enjoyed it. Tone good, appeal extra good. Sunday, special no. Draw farming class, town 412. Admission 10-25. Leveck & Garner, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

BORDER WHIRLWIND. Star, Bob Custer. Not up to Custer standard—very poor story for him. He usually packs them in and pleases, but this one not so good. Print new. Fair appeal. Sunday, special no. Draw big city class. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

BRED IN OLD KENTUCKY. Star, Viola Dana. Splendid story even though it has race stuff in it—people have been fed up on racing and are tired of this diet in their entertainment. This picture though, due to good direction and wonderful acting on Viola's part, gave good satisfaction. Good paper. Tone O. K. Appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all colors, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

BRED IN OLD KENTUCKY. Star, Viola Dana. Good, clean entertainment; should please any type of patronage. Went over very good with me and had many favorable comments. Print good. Tone good, appeal very good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw big city types. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

KOSHER KITTY KELLY. (6,105 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Only a fairly good picture; nowhere near the rating that F. B. O. placed on this picture. Fell very flat for me. Fair appeal. No special. Mitchell Conery, Columbia Theatre, Rennselaer, New York.

LONE HAND SAUNDERS. (5,453 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Held up remarkably for very poor weather conditions featured by the worst snow this year. Thomson is a good bet in anything. Good appeal. Mitchell Conery, Columbia Theatre, Rennselaer, New York.

LADDIE. (6,051 feet). Star, John Bowers. Very nice picture that pleased all who saw it. Not a big special but a splendid story of everyday American folks. Gave copies of book each week for five weeks before playing and advertised as better than Keeper of the Bees (which drew wonderfully). But the business was not what we expected, although fair. However well worth a play date. Splendid tone, strong appeal. Sunday yes, special almost. Draw all colors, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

First National

SILENT LOVER. Star, Milton Sills. Sills is one of our best bets and this feature pleased all. Book it and get behind it as it will please everyone. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw mixed class, town 1,800. Admission 25. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

to be what the public wants and this one has plenty of action. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw mixed class, town 1,800. Admission 25. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

UNKNOWN CAVALIER. Star, Ken Maynard. The best western we have played. Maynard is some rider and can give the other stars lessons. Pleased all and made some money. Play Maynard. Tone excellent, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farm class, town 400. Admission 10-15. Ross S. King, Opera House, (250 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

TWINKLETOES. (7,833 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. A fine production that failed to draw, but owing to strong competition in town—a religious festival. Not the fault of picture, as it is really splendid and those who saw it raved so much the following day that those who missed it felt mighty sorry they had stayed away. Too much diffused photography, representing London fog, to suit those who admire detail. Tone O. K. Appeal strong. Sunday, special yes. Draw all sorts, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Fox

FLYING HORSEMAN. (4,971 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Good picture, but very much like F. B. O.'s Regular Scout. It pleased the few who came out. Fans want Buck in hot westerns without too much kid stuff. Fair paper. Tone O. K. Fair appeal. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all sorts, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HARD BOILED. (6 reels). Star, Tom Mix. Same Mix stuff. Good, but why put good stars in westerns—action is plenty! Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Charles Epler, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

HAVOC. Star cast. Another flop for me. Too long on hard seats. Tone good, appeal 50 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. H. L. Beudon, Grand Theatre, Port Allegany, Pennsylvania.

NO MAN'S GOLD. (6,745 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This one not quite up to Mix standard. Story rather weak and too many impossible situations, but it will get by. Print good. Tone O. K. Fair appeal. Sunday, special no. Draw big city class. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SENIOR DAREDEVIL. (6,402 feet). Star, Ken Maynard. Look out, you Western stars! Here's a newcomer that caused more talk than any western actor we have had in quite a while. This boy can ride! He is good looking and he can put up a screen fight, that looks like the real goods. It is to be hoped that First National will keep this fellow in hot-action westerns and not dress him up in dude parts. Ken Maynard the fans are crying for you! Tone O. K. Appeal 110 per cent. Sunday, yes, here. Draw all sorts, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

BROWN OF HARVARD. (7,941 feet). A very good college story. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw merchant, farm class, widely scattered town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

EXQUISITE SINNER. Absolutely awful. Conrad Nagel's picture role is a joke in our estimation. Looks like he's trying to be a Douglas Fairbanks, but only acting silly. We had three people in the house when the picture started. H. L. Beudon, Grand Theatre, Port Allegany, Pennsylvania.

FLESH AND THE DEVIL. (8,750 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Oh, boy! Of them all—this is it! The combination, Greta Garbo and Gilbert, is great. Sunday, special yes. R. Guy Bates, Globe Theatre (275 seats), Buena Vista, Virginia.

LITTLE JOURNEY. (6,008 feet). Harry Carey and others. I thought this good and others told me the same. Pretty mushy in spots, but I am glad I played it regardless of poor business. Tone good, appeal fair. Sunday yes, special no. Draw town and farm class, town 600. Admission 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

ROAD TO MANDALAY. (6,882 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Pleased the men and a few of the women. Chaney is "some" character actor, but his characterizations are too hideous. Tone fair, appeal 50-50. Sunday, special no. Draw farming class, town 400. Admission 10-15. Ross S. King, Opera House (250 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

COBRA. (6,895 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. A good picture but a dark print. Appeal 90 per cent. Draw farming class, town 400. Admission 15-25. Floyd G. Ward, Ward Theatre (250 seats), Stark, Kansas.

FINE MANNERS. (7 reels). Star, Gloria Swanson. Much better than any of Gloria's other recent pictures. Tone O. K. Appeal good. Sunday O. K. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

FORLORN RIVER. Star, Jack Holt. Good picture. Zane Grey story is always a good drawing card and I think Jack Holt is getting more popular. Draw town types, town 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

HOLD THAT LION. Star, Douglas MacLean. A good picture but showed it to an empty house—weather was O. K., picture failed to draw. Fair paper. Sunday O. K. No special. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House, Fort Payne, Alabama.

KID BROTHER. (7,654 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. A dandy comedy that went over big. Should please any audience a hundred per cent. Book it, boost it. It's O. K. for Sunday and as special. Admission 15-35. J. R. Long, Opera House, Fort Payne, Alabama.

KID BROTHER. (5,650 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. A very good Harold Lloyd comedy. The gags are new and the style of the picture is entirely new and different from those that Lloyd has produced. Our business was off, due to the terribly cold weather. Played this two weeks. Everyone was well pleased with it. Sunday, special yes. Draw general class, city 316,000. Admission 20-25-40. James D. Kennedy, Apollo Theatre (1,100 seats), Indianapolis, Indiana.

LOVE'S GREATEST MISTAKE. Star, Evelyn Brent. Only a fair program picture. Cast poor, amateurish. Not a punch in picture. Here just an advertisement for Liberty Magazine. Tone not so good, appeal fair. Sunday, special no. Draw from masses, city 40,000. Admission 10-30. Johnny Jones, Washington & Orpheum Theatres (1,000 seats), Quincy, Illinois.

LOVE'S GREATEST MISTAKE. Stars, Josephine Dunn, Evelyn Brent. The way the director has presented this picture really makes it corking "wise" entertainment of the minute. Josephine Dunn is a new star and does some wonderful work; in my judgment I believe she will be a winner and you will hear more about the young lady later for she is a coming star. This is a light comedy but everyone should enjoy it. Draw general class, city 316,000. Admission 20-25-40. James D. Kennedy, Apollo Theatre (1,100 seats), Indianapolis, Indiana.

LUCKY DEVIL. (5,945 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Absolutely cleaned up on this one. It's one of Dix's best if it is a little old. Print in good shape. Book it and boost it—bound to please. Racing scenes great. Dix has wonderful support. Admission 10-20. No as special but O. K. for Sunday. J. R. Long, Opera House, Fort Payne, Alabama.

MAN TRAP. (6,077 feet). Star, Clara Bow, with Torrence and Marmont. Three good stars in a jam-up good picture that pleased a better than average crowd. Clara made a hit here. All she has to do to make a big box office name for herself is to stick to this style roles—and make a few more as good as this. Tone, Sunday, special O. K. Good appeal. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

NELL GWYN. Star, Dorothy Gish. Lost money on this one. Failed to draw and those who came were disappointed. Might please in the larger towns. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House, Fort Payne, Alabama.

PARADISE FOR TWO. Star, Richard Dix. Just a fair picture. Betty Bronson has a lot to learn before she will be a box office attraction. Story only fair. You know the ending, also what is coming along, after you have seen the second reel. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

PARADISE FOR TWO. Star, Richard Dix. This is an amusing farce comedy, the kind that leaves one in a happy frame of mind. Richard Dix is a very good star for our theatre; he is very popular among the women folks. This is a picture that everyone will enjoy and talk about. Tone good, yes for Sunday. Draw general class, city 316,000. Admission 20-45-40. James D. Kennedy, Apollo Theatre (1,100 seats), Indianapolis, Indiana.

SHOW-OFF. Star, Ford Sterling. A good show of the type but not popular here, for most of our audience. Sterling did very well in this as usual. Tone, appeal good. Not special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SORROWS OF SATAN. Oversold on this one; rental about fifty per cent. higher than it should have been for this small town. Picture is not a road show attraction; poor box office appeal—elaborate but no drawing card. Spent extra for special advertising;

Pictures that bring them out in the rainy weather, pictures that get out the S.R.O. sign—these are worth knowing about, and dependable exhibitor tips in this department give you the low-down on which ones they are, as well as when to step heavy and when to bear light on the advertising. It's simply a question of choosing as your guide the exhibitor who agrees in his reports with your experience on pictures you both have run.

It's only fair to return the favor by sending tips to help the other fellow as he helps you.

the second night a complete flop. Also admission prices were dictated by renter, the picture was not worth the raised admission here. That Royle Girl was another picture sold at ridiculous admission here. If you have a chance see this before you book it. But had the rental been right I would have made a legitimate profit; instead have only a narrow margin from profit—absolute shame the way we were treated on this picture. It is worth seeing and has some sterling scenes. Must be bought right. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SO'S YOUR OLD MAN. Star, W. C. Fields. Here's a wow! A comedy that will stand all the praise you can give it and if you give it enough you are bound for a large crowd. Went over big for me. Played this with a Harry Langdon two reeler and billed as an all-comedy special program. Just what they wanted. Mitchell Conery, Columbia Theatre, Rennselaer, New York.

SO'S YOUR OLD MAN. (6,347 feet). Star, W. C. Fields. Fields shows a big improvement over his last picture. This is a delightful comedy. Lots of laughs and amusing situations. Two or three more pictures as good as this and Fields will be a box office star. Tone O. K. Fair appeal. Sunday O. K., special no. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

STRANDED IN PARIS. (6,106 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Good comedy. Bebe Daniels is getting better in every picture and I do hope that Paramount will continue to put her in comedy roles. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw mixed class, town 1,800. Admission 25. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

STRANDED IN PARIS. (6,106 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. This picture is a delightful piece of entertainment. It is the kind of a picture that everyone will enjoy. It has action, thrills and plenty of laughs. It should be a big box office attraction. Tone good. Sunday yes. Draw general class, city 316,000. Admission 20-25-40. James D. Kennedy, Apollo Theatre (1,100 seats), Indianapolis, Indiana.

WE'RE IN THE NAVY NOW. (5,519 feet). Star, Wallace Beery. One of the best comedies we have ever shown. Book it and advertise it good and you will get results. Pleased everyone. Tone, appeal good. Sunday, special yes. Draw mixed class, town 1,800. Admission 25. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

WET PAINT. (5,509 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. Very good picture. Some did not care for it but there was more praise than censure. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw town, farm class, town 600. Admission 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

WILD HORSE MESA. (7,154 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Just a fair Zane Grey picture. However, they draw at box office. Pleased 70 per cent. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House, Fort Payne, Alabama.

Pathe

BLACK CYCLONE. Star, Rex (horse). Good drama. Horse very good. Tone and appeal good. Sunday yes. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

BLACK CYCLONE. Star, Rex (horse). Splendid picture. Good story. Fine work by the horse. Tone, appeal good. Sunday, special yes. Draw farm, merchant class, widely scattered town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

HIGH HAND. Star, Leo Maloney. The best Maloney has ever done. This is a real western, just the type for action fans. Forget all of his former pictures when you run this. Tone good, appeal very good. No for Sunday or special. Big city draw. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

WHITE SHEEP. (5 reels). Star, Glenn Tryon. This picture is a little old, but is good, and got a good print. Tone fair, appeal 80 per cent. Hardly special. Draw farming class, town 400. Admission 15-25. Floyd G. Ward, Ward Theatre (250 seats), Stark, Kansas.

Producers Dist. Corp.

DANGER GIRL. Star, Priscilla Dean. Print in good condition and was well liked by the few who saw it. It drew a very small crowd. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes. Special no. Draw farming class, town 400. Admission 15-25. A. H. Mathias, Dillsboro Theatre (250 seats), Dillsboro, Indiana.

HER MAN O' WAR. Stars, Goudal-Boyd. A fairly good picture, about the best yet this year from Producers who have so far shown a poor lineup for my theatre. Mitchell Conery, Columbia Theatre, Rennselaer, N. Y.

LAST FRONTIER. Star, Jack Hoxie. Use Hoxie's name as star when you run this and you will pack 'em in. Very good picture—just as good as First National's Scarlet West. Tone good, appeal very good. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw from big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MAN BAIT. I can class this picture as one of Marie's best comedy dramas. Has a box office effect. E. Brown, Princess Theatre, Shelby, North Carolina.

RED DICE. (7,257 feet). Star, Rod LaRocque. A fair picture; pleased all who saw it but did not draw for me. Didn't make any money on it. Paid too much for it. W. D. Carver, Colonial Theatre, South Hill, Virginia.

SILENCE. (7,515 feet). Star, H. B. Warner. Undoubtedly the strongest drama that could be put in a picture. Direction perfect as to detail, etc. Acting fine. O. H. Kapes, Masonic Theatre, New Bern, North Carolina.

UP IN MABEL'S ROOM. (6,345 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. Fine picture. Marie Prevost is wonderful in this and pleased 95 per cent. If you want money don't miss it. W. L. Snapp, Princess Theatre, St. Charles, Virginia.

UP IN MABEL'S ROOM. (6,345 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. In fair condition. Some liked it, some didn't. The kids ate it up, but I'd say it's not fit for children to see. Tone none, appeal good. Sunday, special no. draw general class, town 470. Admission 15-25. A. H. Mathias, Dillsboro Theatre (250 seats), Dillsboro, Indiana.

VOLGA BOATMAN. (11 reels). Star cast. Was well liked and drew a good house. In good condition. Book it and push it. Tone, appeal good. Sunday, special yes. Draw general class, town 470. Admission 15-25. A. H. Mathias, Dillsboro Theatre, (250 seats), Dillsboro, Indiana.

WHISPERING SMITH. (6,125 feet). Star, H. B. Warner. Print in poor condition, but the picture was well liked by those who saw it. Tone good, appeal not much. Sunday, special yes. Draw general class, town 470. Admission 15-25. A. H. Mathias, Dillsboro Theatre (250 seats), Dillsboro, Indiana.

United Artists

THE BAT. Very good show. Stood them up first night, second night fell off due to fact it played entire city. Appeal 75 per cent. Special yes. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Manager New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

GOLD RUSH. Star, Charlie Chaplin. Made by man who has made more people laugh than anyone else in the world, and yet the most pathetic figure on the screen. In this one he stirs all your pity for the under dog and ends with a new version of a topsyturvy house that made them roar. It might be rough on Charlie if he lost every cent he had in the world but it would be a great thing for exhibitors if he had to dig in once more and give us pictures that were made with at least one eye on the expense account—perhaps it would be the best thing for popularity that could happen. Who knows? Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

MARK OF ZORRO. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. This is an interesting story of the Spaniards in California in early days. Our patrons got quite a kick out of Doug's speed in this picture. Film badly worn though. Tone O. K. Sunday or any day. Special yes in some towns. Draw all classes, town less than 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (240 seats), Cloverdale, California.

PARTNERS AGAIN. Star, George Sidney. Begins with a hilarious auto ride and ends with a side-splitting flying machine adventure. While the picture sags in the middle, the two ends more than hold it up. Good entertainment. Work of both stars good, as usual. Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

WILD JUSTICE. (6 reels). An extra good Northern picture. Good tone. Draw farming class, town 400. Admission 15-25. Floyd G. Ward, Ward Theatre (250 seats), Stark, Kansas.

Universal

ARIZONA SWEEPSTAKES. Star, Hoot Gibson. Another good one from Hoot. Played to fair business and everyone was well satisfied. His pictures are always clean and offer good entertainment for the whole family. Moral tone is good. Draw town and farm class, town 600. Admission 10-30. E. C. Silverthorn, Liberty Theatre (200 seats), Harrisville, Michigan.

BUCKING THE TRUTH. Star, Pete Morrison. Just a western. Lots of scenery and no action. Seems as though Universal uses the same scenery over and over. Not so good. Appeal 50 per cent. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Manager, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

LITTLE GIANT. Star, Glenn Hunter. Good little story. Ought to please anywhere. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farm and town class, town 600. Admission 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

RED HOT LEATHER. Star, Jack Hoxie. This is a splendid western, in fact better than usual from this star. The climax is very thrilling. Good paper. Tone O. K. (rough). Appeal strong. Sunday, yes, here. Draw all sorts, town about 1,000. Admission

Hot Off Two Smiling Screens

In order that Our Gang may get the hot tip-off on two pictures that tickled the screen, the box office and the audience, two good scouts have rushed in the following reports:

TELL IT TO THE MARINES (Metro-Goldwyn). Here is a sure winner. This is a bully American comedy that hits the bullseye every second that it is flashed across the screen. Chaney now has a role that will make him more popular than anything he has ever done. Playing to packed houses and holding this over for second week. Don't overlook this picture, it's a world beater. James D. Kennedy, Apollo Theatre, Indianapolis, Indiana.

IT. (Paramount). So the Gang may know that the 1927 sensation star, Clara Bow, in "It" is a "wow"!—this picture is for mother, dad, sister and brother, because it is clean all the way through. This little lady's day is here! William Austin deserves special mention in this: he supplied comedy that hit the spot. Mr. Moreno is there, too. The weather wasn't favorable when I played this, but the picture is 100 per cent. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

TEXAS STREAK. Star, Hoot Gibson. As good as the average Gibson feature; it pleased the fans and what more can you expect? Print good. Tone O. K. Appeal good. Sunday, special no. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

UNIVERSAL PAPER. Universal's paper on western subjects usually has more pep than some of the advertising put out by other producers. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Warner Bros.

FIGHTING EDGE. Star, Kenneth Harlan. This did a very good business for an off day. Pleased all and so we are satisfied. For a good action picture play this one. Good appeal. Mitchell Conery, Columbia Theatre, Rennselaer, New York.

HELL BENT FOR HEAVEN. Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. Fair picture that did not do so good at the box office. Mitchell Conery, Columbia Theatre, Rennselaer, New York.

SEA BEAST. Star, John Barrymore. A really wonderful picture that did nothing big at the box office. The acting, etc., is great, but somehow it did not register as a money maker. Mitchell Conery, Columbia Theatre, Rennselaer, New York.

Miscellaneous

FOREST HAVOC. Star, Forrest Stanley. It will do for a Saturday night if they are not too particular. Just a program show. The print we had was very dark in spots. Tone good, appeal fair. Not a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

QUICKER'N LIGHTNING. Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. This western below the average of westerns of today. Failed to please and they told me about it. Print new. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SOMEBODY'S MOTHER. Star, Mary Carr. An excellent program picture spoiled by hazy photography. Mary Carr puts this over, playing the mother part for which she is famous. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

TEARIN' LOOSE. Star, Wally Wales. Just a western picture, not up to the standard of westerns being made today. Print new. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

TEARIN' LOOSE. (Weiss Bros.). Star, Wally Wales. Here is a five reel western that is great. Put this in on a double feature day and helped business greatly. Wales seems good. Give him a try. Appeal good. Not special. Mitchell Conery, Columbia Theatre, Rennselaer, New York.

WORLD WAR. (American Legion). This is a wonderful reproduction of all the most important happenings on land and sea during the World War Sights that even those who went overseas didn't all see. A picture that is both historical and educational. Everyone should see it. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (240 seats), Cloverdale, California.

Short Subjects

EGGED ON. (F. B. O.) Supposed to be a two reel comedy. All the laughs in this can be jammed into about fifty feet of film. Print good. Big city draw. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

FOX NEWS. Issues have been lacking novelty. Not up to usual standard. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

GREEN ARCHER. (Pathe-serial). Star, Allene Ray. A splendid serial. Keeps 'em guessing—and coming! H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HIGH SEA BLUES. (Educational-St. John). Screamingly funny; therefore, let's call it a one hundred per cent. comedy. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SCOTTY OF THE SCOUTS. (Rayart-serial). Chapter two. This serial brings them in and pleases the kiddies but not the grownups. Laboratories sure used bad coloring on this film—looked like ten year old film stock. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SCOTTY OF THE SCOUTS. (Rayart-serial). Star, Ben Alexander. Ran chapter one of what seems to be a very good serial. Photography not so good but the action is great. Sure pulled in the kiddies. Good appeal, suitable for Sunday. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SNOOKUMS' OUTING. (Universal-Newlyweds). Also SNOOKUMS' PLAYMATES. Here are two comedies that will register a hundred per cent. This little tot sure is a wonder. Good appeal. James D. Kennedy, Apollo Theatre (1,100 seats), Indianapolis, Indiana.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN. (Pathe-Our Gang). This time the kids put on Uncle Tom's Cabin and their stage effects and costumes are comical enough to make any one laugh. The children weren't the only ones who enjoyed this comedy. Tone O. K. Strong appeal, Sunday yes. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WHEN A MAN'S A FAN. (F. B. O.-series). Stars, Cooke-Guard. The best of the Bill Grimm's Progress series so far. This number had them laughing from the opening subtitle to the last fadeout. Absolutely a knockout as a laugh producer. Lots of action. Tone O. K. Appeal very strong. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WHIRLWIND DRIVER. (Universal-Curly Witzel). A two reel western. They are breaking in a new star and from his looks they are likely to have trouble on their hands. The picture is O.K. but star is not. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

A MAJOR in the army is a lot bigger than a sergeant—in power. So, in this Picture Chart, a major error is one that has power to hinder exhibitors in getting accurate information when they want it.

As a part of Moving Picture World's service to readers—the service that wins leadership and holds it—we send out a dollar to each reader who writes a letter to us pointing out major errors—footage changes we were not told about, incorrect review date, etc.

But not the little "sergeant" stuff, please. One chap wrote that there was a line shifted out of alignment a quarter inch at the bottom of a page. Think he was kidding, but you get what the difference is. We're glad to pay the dollars when you show us major errors—incorrect titles, wrong footages, calling a comedy a drama—those are major errors.

The Theatre of To-Day

Presentations ~ Prologues ~ Music

Edited by O. T. Taylor

A Real Chinese Festival

A Moving Picture World Presentation Devised by O. T. Taylor

NUMEROUS successful musical comedies and light operas have used the glamour and romance of the Orient as theme. The petite Chinese girls in colorful costume, the wild, unruly Tartars, the picturesque architecture and delightful gardens offer many possibilities. The wealth of Oriental music, songs from musical comedy and light opera successes as well as the newer ballads and the present popular hits, lends the producer a wide variety to choose from. Like most of the Moving Picture World presentations of more than one part or scene, "Chinese Festival" may also be presented in but one part. Either of the two scenes in this presentation, properly worked up, contains enough material for a splendid smaller presentation or a prologue.

Towns depending mainly on local talent for use in presentation work will do well to cultivate acquaintance with local dancing schools. In selection of singers keen judgment and care should be exercised. Better have but one good singer than several indifferent ones. Use as many people on the stage as consistent with space.

The drapes part on a dark stage. Gong sounds. Singer is heard. Suggested song: "The Road to Mandalay." Red and blue lights up slowly in front, revealing a plastered wall, with moon gate and windows, set in a grey cyc. The gate carries a dragon design.

Procession of Chinese, carrying flowers, lanterns, miniature dragons, etc., file across the stage in front.

As the song progresses the red and blue lights dim gradually and green lights come up, together with white overhead spot on singer behind the gate, revealing through the scrim in the moon gate, singer attired in Chinese costume.

At the finish of the song the scrim is lifted to permit the singer to step out on the stage. Then scrim down; singer picked up by magenta spot from projection booth; green and white lights behind gate dimming out. Suggested song: "Japanese Sunset" or "Chinese Moon." During the last part of song the cyc and wall tab flies slowly, revealing a Chinese garden on a blue stage.

Lights appear in the teahouses on the distant hills; the lanterns are lighted gradually, a few at a time.

Music to "Red Lantern" or "Chinese March" as group of geisha girls enter for dance. If desired introduce solo dance or song.

The gong sounds. The girls huddle in frightened attitude on platform right stage. Again the gong sounds; yells from right; the girls crowd up on the bridge left as group of Tartars break on from right upstage. Music to "Robbers March" from "Chu Chin Chow" as Tartars perform drill; then to "Ballet Egyptienne" No. 1 as one of them begins a wild dance, the rest of the Tartars beating time with cymbals and joining in the dance on the last part.

Tartar band takes respectful attitude as the Tartar chief, entering on platform right, sings to the girls. "Poor Butterfly" from "Madam Butterfly." Girls and Tartars join in chorus with song and steps.

Note: Novelties such as tumbling, contortionists, acrobatics, etc., may be worked in with routine to splendid advantage. Such performers should be costumed as belonging to the Tartar band.

THE SETTINGS

The first scene setting, consisting of split cyc and tab, is simple yet effective. The tab is shown in figure 3A. The two windows may have painted panes; or the panes may be cut out to show illuminated. The circular door or moon gate is covered with scrim on which a dragon design is painted. The scrim is on batten or frame, rigged to cyc batten, to permit taking up for entrance of the singer.

The second scene, Figures 1 and 2, is the more elaborate and consists of a sky cyc, and a number of rows and set pieces. The back row, B, showing hills and tea houses, is wall board on frame work, or a combination of wall board and paper or muslin. The trees may be profile or set pieces. Profiles are less difficult to construct, and for a setting of this sort, quite effective. The foliage of right side willow is hung from batten; for the left side foliage net should be used at the top of foliage is below batten height.

The balustrade, D, is set on edge of platform, and is of frame and paper or muslin construction with posts of wall board projected above balustrade top rail. The ground rows, C, depicting a rock formation or wall is similar in construction to the back row, B. The bridge, E, rests with one end on each of the two platforms. It should be strongly built and rendered absolutely safe when subjected to a load of a number of performers. If built as shown in figure 3B it is perfectly safe. The main frame work and stair stringers, indicated by heavy dotted lines, should be no smaller than 2x4 inch studdings. The braces and balustrade frame, light dotted lines, are 1x3 inch battens. Note that this form of constructing makes a truss. Build two trusses as explained above and space them as far apart as desired for bridge width; three feet is about right. Tie together securely with cross bracing. The culvert is covered with heavy blue plaster board or wall board. Cover front side of the bridge with a facing of wall board cut to shape.

Construction of platforms and steps has been taken up in previous presentations as have trees, flowers, etc.

SUGGESTIONS ON PAINTING

Bright, vivid colors should be the keynote. Do back row, distance, in lavender, pink and medium blues. Tea houses get bright red roofs, buff and white walls. The fantastic pine in the right background is done in dark green with foliage defined in bright emerald green. The balustrade on platform, right, as well as the side of bridge and bridge balustrade, is white decorated in Chinese red and in black. Culvert under bridge gets vivid orange.

Willows, in foreground, get medium green foliage high-lighted in emerald green and detailed in dark blue. Tree trunks and branches are done in medium blue, turquoise

Our ushers are carefully trained to find suitable seats with as little confusion as possible. In the Apollo I use two ushers for each aisle and lay before you the adjoining photographs to show how seat possibilities are signalled when there is a standing crowd. The handling of the standing patron and securing of suitable seats without jamming the aisles or disappointing those who have been waiting to sit, counts for a great deal in bringing them back to another performance.

One usher in the front of the theatre will signal to the other usher in the rear who is politely and adroitly marshalling the standees, and the system shown in the pictures, put in effect about ten years ago, has proved to be very efficient. The signal for one, two or four seats is indicated. For three the baton is held as for four, but only one hand is elevated. In some theatres ushers use flashlights for signals but I have found this both annoying and distracting to the patrons who are engrossed in the picture.

The less the distraction, the more the convenience and the concentration of attention on the screen, the greater will the patronage reaction be of a favorable nature.

If patronage is slack, and you have not tried everything that will work for good will and public favor, get busy without delay. You are not doing all that can be done to sell seats.

Moving Picture World will observe the Twentieth Anniversary of its existence on March 26. A remarkable edition will be published with facts of more than ordinary interest to all who are interested in motion pictures and their progress.

and orange for high lights and shading in dark blue, purple and black.

The moon gate tab is pearl grey. Signs, ground and Chinese characters, in red and gold, blue and silver, green and white, or similar combinations. Gate and window frames in orange with embellishments in silver and black. Window bars in bright green. Dragon design on scrim in gold on a red ground.

LANTERNS

The Chinese or Japanese paper lanterns are inexpensive and are good for repeated use in presentation work. A novel effect is obtained by wiring in several circuits so that the lanterns may be lighted a few at a time.

COSTUMES

As Chinese and Japanese light operas and musical comedies are favored by stock companies, lodges and schools for local productions, a large assortment of costumes suited for such productions are usually carried by costuming houses.

Where dancing schools are to furnish the dancers the school or dancers themselves will probably have their own costumes, or, acting on suggestions from the producer, have the costumes made locally. It should not be difficult to secure the services of a dressmaker who understands costuming well enough to turn out very creditable creations.

Silks and satins are to be desired, although splendid effects are obtained by use of saffron and similar moderately priced materials.

LITTLE THINGS WORTH KNOWING CORRUGATED FASTENERS

For quick, yet strong, joining use corrugated fasteners. Use one or more on each side of battens in joining. They are inexpensive, handy and strong. They are obtainable in several sizes at hardware stores.

DOUBLE POINTED TACKS

For building small frames and for lighter joining, double-pointed tacks will be found very serviceable. These should not be confused with staples. The latter have a round turn, or loop; double-pointed tacks have a square turn.

Because he is not temperamental, he follows the line of least resistance and is thankful for his job, which in salary compares to the newspaper job he might be holding down, in about the same way as the pay check of one of the directors or tophole scenarists his company employs, compares to his.

Pity the poor publicity man! As an executive he is an anomaly, and the shuttlecock of a large variety of buck-passing battledores. He does his work well. He takes his bumps cheerfully and meekly. He helps to make and save more money in the course of a year usually than any other executive in his organization. He gets scant credit and, in proportion to the results he accomplishes, very small pay for doing it. Well, what of it?

The behind end of anything is usually quite as important as the front elevation. But it gets all the kicks and very little of the fun.

Herein it is not unlike the motion picture publicist, who, to repeat, is again an anomaly, in that, as the behind end of the film industry, he is out front all the time.

Get Town Clique to Make Box Office Click

EVER figure on selling your seats to sheep? It can be done, at least in a figurative way, because the world is full of people who have the same propensity as have sheep for following without question where a leader goes.

Wherever a group of people are domiciled, there you will see a leader and the faction that follows him (or her—don't forget the female leader) without question in mood, in dress, in goings and comings. There will be others, too, who want to belong, yearn to be of the elect—but because of barriers self-determined and set up by the elect, these sheep may only approach, to sit at a little distance—and worship.

And they go where "they" go, just as sheep follow a ram.

You can turn this human tendency to advantage in selling the off-night seats.

Pick a Clique That's Followed Quick

If your community is very small it is likely that the social clique is the supreme factor in shaping the goings and comings of the rank and file. But in a larger place there may be a small minority following such a clique and a much more impressive majority eddying in the wake of a political or powerful church group.

All you have to do is to discover, if you have not already been aware of it, which clique has the biggest following—and then sell your theatre to the most imposing clique.

You will find that if the opinion of the leader is favorable it will shape the ideas of his or her adherents, and this, in turn, in an ever spreading circle, will influence the tastes of those whose minds are made up by proxy.

Spread "Service" Thick And It Will Stick

Every leader is humanly responsive to flattery and it will flatter him or her to feel that the community's best place of entertainment and service was selected by no one less than him or herself. If you give your community real service, establish a real standing based on equipment of quality and a theatre of personality, the leader will discover and the clique frequent this real community theatre.

The turning of the theatre over to the clique for its leader's pet project—Boy Scout rally, church organ fund entertainment, or whatever—may attract the right amount of attention to your house; but the high quality of equipment, the prestige that you have built through continual selling of community service, will make the good will permanent.

Good will can sell seats when good paper isn't available.

Golden State is as attractive as the program it gives.

Town of 6,000 Gets Big City Stuff in Golden State's Show

DISTINCTIVE in its ability to furnish big city routine in a town of six thousand, the Golden State Theatre is probably the only theatre in a town of that size, at least in Northern California, to provide not alone first run pictures but, as well, presentation or prologue of city calibre and a new stage attraction each week. Owned by the Monterey Theatres Company, which also operates the Monterey and the Strand in Monterey and the Grove Theatre in Pacific Grove, this latest theatre, the Golden State, has been going ahead during its six months of life, giving the finest type of service, which the best quality of modern equipment makes possible, with an ever growing popularity.

M. G. Keller, general manager, is resident in the Golden State and it is his own admission that gives authority for the statement that the policy of big presentations and class shows keeps him and his collaborators "hop-ping."

It would perhaps not be possible for a theatre in a town of the size of Monterey, and with two other theatres in the same circuit, to provide such big time entertainment were it not for the fact that the theatre is situated only a mile from the big and famous Del Monte Hotel, which, in the garden spot of Northern California, furnished attraction for the tourists of a nation from whose ranks the Golden State, by its policy, draws a heavy percentage of its patronage.

The Golden State seats 1,500, cost half a million dollars and is completely equipped with most modern fittings in every part.

This equipment, coupled with the utmost in courtesy and appeal, enables the town of 6,000 to have the type of entertainment that is usually found in the city of a million or more.

ABERDEEN, S. D.—Rosac Brothers have contract to make improvements to Rialto, Lyric and State Theatres, owned by Walker Amusement Company.

VERNON, TEXAS—Texas-Dent Theatres, Inc., care L. L. Dent, 2009½ Jackson street, Dallas, plans to remodel theatre.

CORAOPOLIS, PA.—Star Theatre is being remodeled, renovated and seating capacity rearranged to meeting new State fire law.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—Delmonte Theatre at 5624 Delmar Boulevard will be remodeled.

VICKSBURG, MISS.—Walnut Theatre, Frank Shipley, manager, has plans by Emil Well, Inc., Whitney Building, New Orleans, La., for alterations and remodeling.

PLEASANTVILLE, N. J.—Extensive improvements will be made to Carlton Theatre, and seating capacity increased to 1,000. Estimated cost, $25,000.

New York Union School Gets Off to Good Start

I AM informed that the new school L U 306 has inaugurated its starting off promisingly. That is good. The first lessons dealt with magnetism. May I suggest to the manager of the school that while magnetism and electrical action are important and should be given careful attention, still the big thing in motion projection is optics.

Projection is essentially an optical proposition. Mechanics of the projector is important, true. Magnetic and electrical action is important, yes, but optics, is, after all, the really big thing and the thing in which the average man needs careful, fundamental instruction more than in anything else.

I have no doubt but that optics will be dealt with, but it is a very difficult subject and one in which very few are really competent to teach. The projectionist should be fully instructed in the fundamental laws of optics—light action. He must understand the operation of the law which says:

"Light intensity decreases inversely with the square of the distance" as it applies to projection especially well.

He should understand the laws governing light refraction. He should be taught not only that the part or course of a light ray is bent under certain circumstances, as for instance passing from air to glass, but why it is bent. And so on through a considerable list.

The reason for teaching these fundamentals thoroughly is because once they are really understood, the projectionist then has a comprehensive understanding of what takes place in the lens system of the projector, and why it

Question No. 569—Does the fact that there is a "ground" necessarily mean that there is connection with earth?

Question No. 570—Explain the real meaning of the term "ground."

takes place. He then is in position to work intelligently and efficiently.

I'm not seeking to butt into your affairs, gentlemen. I have not the slightest desire to do so. However, I have a desire to see your school succeed, for more reasons than one. My suggestions cost you nothing at all. You don't have to even read them unless you wish to. Some day, though, you will wake up to an understanding of the fact that with all his "roasting" Richardson is and always has been the true friend not only of Local 306, but of all other locals as well, including 110 of Chicago.

Richardson, however, is a queer chap. He doesn't care for or want your friendship, as a body, until he can have it on the right basis. And that's that. However, friendship or no friendship, this department wants to give real aid in any possible way, but approving of just sliding along from year to year without effort to advance in anything except wages and conditions is not real aid or real friendship.

REMEMBER THIS: The surgeon does NOT use the knife and inflict pain just for his own amusement. He does it because it is necessary for your ultimate well being, and it was for your own ultimate well being that Richardson has used the sword of criticism.

Pavly Supplies Plan For Joining Two Reels

HAROLD PAVLY, Scenic Theatre, Lake Wales, Fla., says: "I take Moving Picture World because of our department, which I enjoy very much. I study the Bluebook School and may answer some questions after a while. You once condemned stickers on film marking the splice joining two reels together. My way is to make a notch on each side. It does not harm the film because one frame on each side of the splice must be wasted anyhow, and it does not show on the screen. Have been doing two years and find it effective.

"I wonder when film exchanges will stop marking their prints with whole smears of punch holes? It is a shame.

"My projection distance is 60 feet, with a 12-foot picture. Have a double Hertner Transverter and splendid light. My projectors are Powers, about seven years old, Nos. 36,309 and 36,310. Have them in A-1 condition and not a stop in three months."

Good for you, Friend Pavly. Let the good work go on! See Brother Budge's method for marking hook-up splices. It will soon be published—maybe herewith—and is much better than your notching plan. Yes, exchanges raise the roof about the projectionists punching a few holes in film (and they should raise it, too), and then themselves punch a few HUNDREDS in at one clatter, and seem to think nothing of it.

Hallberg Proves Himself A Very Lively Live-Wire

SOME while ago I advised you that J. H. Hallberg, who was the inventor of the Hallberg Economizer and one of the first dealers in motion picture theatre supplies, had re-entered the field after a considerable absence and would handle specialties. I also told you that "J. H." is a live-wire. He is more than that. He is a very lively live-wire and will make some of them sit up on their haunches and take notice before he has finished and done.

Hallberg has a reflector type lamp. I think I told you that, too. It is a sturdy piece of equipment, as you may see by examining the accompanying picture. It has one innovation, at least, and that is an ammeter mounted in the back of the lamphouse—not so bad—what!

Herewith is a general view of the lamp. The housing has, of course, been removed.

Mr. Hallberg has gotten out a most complete illustrated instruction sheet of four pages. It tells you all about his lamp and how to handle it. I would advise you all to address a postcard to J. H. Hallberg, 29 West 57th street, New York City, asking for one. It will be sent free of charge, and such things should be among the papers of every live projectionist. Get busy!

The Hallberg Reflector Type Lamp.

Budge Gives His Method Of Splicing Film Reels

W. C. BUDGE, Brooklyn, says: "When I join two 1,000-foot reels of film I have a solution made up of oxide of zinc and film cement. Mix it thin so it will dry quickly. Too much of the powder (zinc—to be had at any drug store) makes it too thick and too slow drying.

"When I make the joining splice I paint along the sprocket holes on each side of the splice, on the emulsion side, using a small artist's brush. In breaking up I just rewind until the white place appears and—there you are.

"This same solution may be utilized in framing with a Simplex projector, only this time you place it on the celluloid side of the film. Draw a thin white line about half way across, just 12 sprocket holes below the aperture plate. (I presume bottom of aperture opening is meant.—Ed.) This line goes on the bottom of the film trap shoe. It will show up very well in a pretty dark room. I find it much better than a light in front of the lens or aperture.

"I cannot make a reliable report on Bio carbons, because of the fact that I have neither volt nor ammeter. The National carbons give a whiter light with the reflector lamp than the Bio. If you wish for a pure white light, there is a very expensive carbon, known as the S. & S., I believe, though not sure as to name, which gives a very white light."

Don't remember having previously heard of the S. & S. carbon. As to the framing scheme, as I understand it, Brother Budge means to draw a thin white line, using the zinc solution, half way across the film just 12 sprocket holes from a lower frame line, and then place that line opposite the bottom end of the film trap shoe. Maybe I'm wrong, but that's the way I understand it. The splice mark is practical, simple and effective.

John Griffiths Starts Son Off on Right Path

JOHAN GRIFFITHS, JR., the son of our old friend of Ansonia, Conn., proposes to take up projection and follow in the footsteps of his father. He has studied under the tutelage of "Dad," than whom he could have no more competent teacher in projection optics, which is, after all, the really big, important thing in projection.

But that was not sufficient. He wanted to learn things right, so he applied to the International Projector Corporation for employment, to the end that he might learn as nearly as possible all there is to learn about motion picture projectors. The mention of the name of his distinguished dad was all that was necessary to secure him employment, and the chance to learn what he wants to.

John has started his son out right. If he doesn't go far in projection it certainly will be his own fault, but I have no doubt but that he will make good, so that's that. Most men who desire to enter projection seem to think it only necessary to learn how to thread a film in, trim a lamp and start the projector. When they have, in two weeks, or maybe one, accumulated all the vast mass of knowledge, they're a "Nop'rater," and all ready to squirt pictures on the screen with the best of them. Young John is not starting in any such idiotic fashion. More power to him!

Four Questions Are Asked By Man in the Southland

FROM the Southland comes a letter asking the following questions:

(A) Does it make any difference whether a rheostat be connected into the positive or negative wire of a reflector arc lamp?

(B) Does it do any harm to shift the brushes in order to reduce the output the generators of large motor generator sets in order to accommodate reflector arcs?

(C) Several times when I accidentally connected up a lamp on the positive line, the rheostat coils got red hot and the line fuses blew. Was that a cross connection in the lamp or in the rheostat? All this is very new to me (meaning reflector lamps, I take it.—Ed.).

(D) Would you recommend a mercury arc rectifying device for reflector lamps? What is the average life of tubes in rectifiers?

Answering: (A) A reflector arc is no different from any other arc, except that it uses less amperage. It makes no difference whether a rheostat be in the positive or negative wire of any arc circuit, except that if the negative of a 3-wire circuit you were using happened to be the neutral, and you had the rheostat in it and a heavy ground occurred between it and the lamp, all resistance except that offered by the ground would be eliminated. However, such a ground is extremely unlikely to happen, hence the objection is very largely theoretical.

(B) It does no harm to shift the brushes on some sets. I am not certain about others. Before doing it, it is always best to send the manufacturer data contained on the name plate of the set, and ask his advice.

(C) Don't understand what this means.

(D) Motor generators are, in my judgment, very much better than mercury arc rectifiers. I would not recommend a rectifier, now that we have such excellent motor generators. I don't think there can be said to be any "average life" for a rectifier tube. Too much depends upon how they are used.

Gathering Evidence

I am told some very raw stuff is being pulled by one individual in the supply business in New York City. Evidence is being gathered, and there looms large possibility of some one learning a costly lesson before long.

Kentucky Man Has Trouble Focusing

R. H. SCHNEIDER, projectionist, Loomis Theatre, Frankfort, Ky., arises to remark: "I believe the comments you made on the trouble of Friend Crowell, Halifax, N. S., Jan. 22 issue, might be the cue to the trouble with which I have been pestered for three months past.

"When I run absolutely new prints I have no trouble at all, but when the prints are old, or even when they have been in use a relatively short while, nine times in ten I will have to stand by and focus each caption as it appears, and then refocus when it has passed in order to maintain sharp focus on both captions and picture.

"At times it may be necessary to sharpen the reading in center and the edges will blurr considerably. Attaches of the theatre have called me down on this several times, but what can I do? Film tracks and aperture plates not appreciably worn.

"Mark you well the trouble has only developed within the past two or three months. Screen sets square with lens. Projection distance 76 feet 6 inches. Angle of projection two degrees Simplex projectors with straight arc, 35 amperes. Metallic screen, maker unknown. I believe the answer to my troubles has been hit upon, though no remedy has been suggested."

I asked for comments on this matter, which seems to be developing into serious proportions. To date Brother Schneider is the only one who has responded. The question is, is the almost constant high degree of heat to which the film is now subjected warping it? Also, if this trouble only shows up on captions (very light or white background with dark letters) then why is that so?

Excess Range Is Urged For Projector Lamps

RECENTLY a screen in one of the best theatres in the country went dark twice in one evening, due to trouble in the lamp caused by the use of current in excess of its rated capacity, plus failure of the projectionists to watch the new equipment closely and keep things as they should be.

May I point out to manufacturers of projection equipment, especially arc lamps to be used for projection, that those lamps ought to be made, in their every part, of a capacity able to carry any amperage within the possible range of projection current, PLUS CONSIDERABLE EXCESS to take care of the fool projectionist who insists upon shoving the current up unreasonably, or the fool manager who forces him to do it.

Put into figures, I would say that ordinary arc lamps should be made with a 130-ampere capacity, and high intensity lamps should be able to take care of 150 amperes. That 120 amperes on an ordinary arc and 150 on a high intensity represents poor practice and high inefficiency makes no difference. The excess capacity will not cost much as a manufacturing proposition and will save the manufacturer trouble when it falls into the hands of Mr. Nitwit.

Another thing is that, just so far as it is humanly possible to do so without sacrificing the actual efficiency, projection equipment should be made absolutely fool proof, since we still have a great number of machine operators in projection rooms, and many of them have to stretch even that term quite a bit in order to get under the wire as "competent."

The photographic superiority of Eastman Film—zealously safeguarded by Kodak Research Laboratory experts—naturally makes prints on Eastman Positive Film from negatives on Eastman Negative Film unrivaled in screen quality.

And, since the public appreciates screen quality, insistence on prints on Eastman Film will have a favorable box office reaction.

Prints on Eastman have the black-lettered identification “Eastman” and “Kodak” in the transparent margin. Look for it.

Australian Merger Joins 80 Theatres Under One Banner

Hoyt's and Williamson's in Powerful Combine

A flurry has ensued in Australia by a merger uniting under one banner eighty theatres operating in Victoria, New South Wales and West Australia, to be known as Hoyt's Theatres, Ltd.

Since then operations have extended to the other states and New Zealand; modern, up-to-date theatres, distributed over the capital cities and costing in the aggregate well over $5,000,000, are being erected for the new organization, representing progress in every direction quite unknown in Australian history.

The capital value of the theatres in which the new organization will carry on business, or be otherwise interested, amounts to $17,000,000, according to the local Australian trade journal, "Everyones."

The amalgamation is of a number of companies previously carrying on business in two groups—the Hoyt's group and the J. C. Williamson group. The directors of the new organization are all well-known men: Sir George Tallis, F. W. Thring and J. H. Tait, representing the J. C. Williamson group, and G. F. Griffith and F. Challingsworth, representing the Hoyt's group. Messrs. Griffith and Thring are the managing directors.

Unlucky Salesmen

Film salesmen working out of Albany, N. Y., are worried these days as theatre after theatre is being absorbed by the three or four chains in central and northern New York. Instead of calling on theatres scattered over the state, the film salesmen find themselves confronted with a situation that may eventually reduce their force. Instead of entrusting the work of selling the head of a large circuit to a salesman, the branch managers are now looking after that part of the business, leaving but a few scattering out of the way places for the salesmen.

Broadcasting War Looms to Offset Roxy's Competition

Roxy Must Have Radio's Help To Fill Seats, Belief of Others, Who Plan to Cut In

By Merritt Crawford

RADIO now looms as a big factor in the theatre war precipitated on Broadway by the opening of the Roxy. Reports were current late this week that several of the big theatre-owning companies, anticipating the competition which the Roxy's opening would inaugurate, some months ago formed a working combination to underwrite a radio station of their own or one in which their wishes would predominate, over which they could broadcast programs almost at will boosting their own pictures and theatres.

The idea, it was said, was to put on the air programs of such high quality as to offset, as far as possible, the popularity of Roxy's radio entertainers and minimize the advertising value of his tie-up with WJZ and some nineteen other stations networking the country as a draw for From the same source it was learned that the big Broadway picture houses recognized that in a war of newspaper advertising they cannot afford to compete with the Roxy, while they feel that on the air they have an even chance, popular as he undoubtedly is among countless radio fans, to cut into his following.

It is believed by those on the other side of the fence that once the Roxy's novelty has worn off some six or eight weeks hence, it will take more than box office attraction values in the picture and presentation program shown there to keep its 6,200 seats even half filled, and it is only through Roxy's radio connections, that he can hope to avoid a decided decrease in patronage within the next three or four months, which would naturally benefit the other

New York World Raps

Film Consolidations

The New York World has been running a series of articles on the number of mergers consummated or pending within the motion picture industry. Their theme was expressed in one headline, "Movie Trusts Push Independents Into Defense Combines." It is stated that "uncontrolled theatres, at the May convention, will act on plan to pool film-buying power" and that "big independent producers are mostly marking time," while "the small ones are in bad shape."

One article concludes as follows: "Thus the entire industry is being launched into a consolidation movement promising even closer concentration of power than exists in the older fields of steel and petroleum."

New British Films Bill Aimed To Gradually Cut U. S. Exports

Legislation to force American surrender in the motion picture market of the world is reaching a head in several countries which afford the United States its chief export markets.

The new Films Bill, now under consideration in Parliament, provides that all films classified as British must feature British authors, British actors and British atmosphere.

The bill would require both exhibitors and renters to use at least 7½ per cent. increase yearly until a total of 25 per cent. of British-made pictures reaches the screens.

Regulations would be effective in October. Northern Ireland is not included. Only feature films are effected. Blind and advance bookings are prohibited. All features must be shown to the trade before being booked for presentation.

The Australian House of Representatives will name a joint committee to look into the Australian film industry, as a result of sharp criticism by the censor of certain imported films. A report shows that 649 features were imported from the United States as against 24 from Great Britain.

Late Chicago News

Negotiations still continue for the Keith-Orpheum amalgamation. Harry Golson has been made managing director of the new Belpark Theatre of Lubliner & Trinz's circuit, which opened to capacity business. Another huge theatre is planned for the northwest corner of State and Lake.

The Chicago Theatre has opened a new radio station. Balaban & Katz is extending its radio activities. Sousa is booked for the week of May 2.

The Suburban Theatres Building Corporation has been organized to build a Villa Park theatre.

M-G-M in France

Moving Picture World's French correspondent cables as follows:

"I have been told that M.-G.-M. intends to begin production in Paris as soon as the studios Gaumont will build for them are finished. Gaumont put himself into their hands three years ago and cut out his own production, pretending that it was of little importance, thus depriving actors and cameramen of work. I expect that the French-American team will soon attend to this."

Wins Fine Fight

The story of a plucky fight against blindness came to light this week with the announcement that Samuel Goldwyn has signed Charles R. Albin, Fifth Avenue photographer, to take personal charge of still photography of all Goldwyn pictures. A year ago Mr. Albin was practically blind. Fearful that the Albin Studios would fail if the truth was known, he concealed his illness perfectly while undergoing painful treatments. For months these seemed useless agony, but he persisted and now his sight is completely restored.

Broadcasting War Looms In New York

houses along Broadway. This advantage, it is said, the other companies are determined to cut in on and have laid their plans accordingly.

The enormous business done by the Roxy this week is sufficient to show what the others may expect in the line of competition later, unless some drastic steps are at once taken to offset it. Every Broadway theatre has been hard hit by the new giant among film houses, and this in spite of the fact that practically all of them this week showed attractions of an unusually high box office quality.

The theatre-owning companies, who might be interested in contesting the supremacy of the air waves with the Roxy are Famous Players and Publix, with the Paramount, Rivoli and Rialto, who also have the Criterion and Cohan theatres under lease; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer with the Capitol, Embassy, Central, Astor and Loew-State. First National with the Mark Strand and Warner Brothers with Warner Theatre, Colony and Selwyn.

Fox Not Interested

Fox is not regarded now as being interested, at present having only "What Price Glory" at the Harris, nor is Universal, who will have no less than two Broadway houses before the end of the summer, according to a recent announcement, but which at present has none.

Of the first named, the Publix group is the only company which has been without radio representation of one kind or another up to date. Major Edward Bowes as the Capitol has regularly broadcast over WEAf, since taking over the house from the present manager of the Roxy, while Loew-State and the other Loew houses have been taken care of on the air by WHN, their official station.

For several months past, First National has been broadcasting over WJZ through two characters, they have created, "Dorothy and Jack," who have discoursed interestingly about First National pictures, which they are supposed to have seen, occasionally mentioning either the New York or Brooklyn Strand.

F. N. May Change Plans

This, however, it is said, may now conflict with the Roxy tie-up with WJZ, so that other arrangements may shortly be made by First National officials, provided another station can offer equal or better facilities.

This leaves Famous Players and Publix, the largest motion picture theatre owners on Broadway and with most at stake, practically without contact with the great radio public, so it is fair to assume that this company, which has never yet shown any signs of being asleep, has long been fully aware of this fact and has made its plans accordingly.

No official of sufficient importance in the Paramount organization could be reached before going to press to give Moving Picture World either a confirmation or denial of the report, that it and other companies would shortly announce important radio affiliations.

Efforts to reach F. L. Faurote,

Famous to Change Name Because of Advertising

The annual meeting of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation stockholders will be held March 29, and in the notice of the meeting there is a proposal to change the name of the company to the Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation.

Adolph Zukor explained the reason for the proposed change.

"For many years," he said, "we have extensively advertised the name Paramount Pictures as our trademark. The result is that millions of people throughout the world who are familiar with the sign 'Paramount Pictures' do not appreciate that Paramount Pictures have always been made by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In making 'Paramount' a part of the corporate name, therefore we are taking into our corporate title the extremely valuable good will that has been created by our product during the last fifteen years."

general manager of the Atlantic Broadcasting Corporation in the Steinway Building, 113 West Fifty-seventh street, which broadcasts as Station WABC, also proved unavailing. It had been intimated that negotiations had been entered into with this company by the film companies interested.

It was learned that the Atlantic Broadcasting Corporation was formed late last fall, taking over its present offices on December 17, 1926, when it opened for business. Station WABC now broadcasts every noon from 11:50 to 11 o'clock and every Monday Wednesday and Friday night from 7:30 to midnight, Monday nights and Saturday nights it has a midnight program from 12 to 2 A. M.

It will thus be seen that the hours on which WABC is licensed to broadcast would be entirely adequate for motion picture exploitation, even the midnight hours on Saturday and Monday of each week being suitable for reaching audiences in the Middle and Far West with information about road shows and new big pictures.

Australian Merger

This creates an interesting situation, not only to Americans having their own offices in Australia, but to the many independents who sell their product in New York, and to manufacturers of theatre equipment which these modern houses must have to keep pace with the times.

Hoyt's Theatres, Ltd., is represented in New York by W. A. Robbins, well known in the trade, and has offices at the Regan Building, 140 West 42nd street, New York.

Goldstein-Bernstein

The home office staff of Warner Bros. is extending congratulations to Miss Eve Bernstein, who handles fan magazine publicity, following her marriage to Matt Goldstein, lawyer of 225 West 34th street. The marriage took place on Thursday of last week and was followed by a brief honeymoon.

COMING and GOING

Gloria Swanson left for Los Angeles on Thursday. She will make her second independent picture in California. The Marquis H. de la Falaise will accompany his wife to the Coast, as he has contracted for the exclusive distribution rights in California of the tiniest French car. He also represents the French Author's League in this country. In Miss Swanson's private party will be Thomas Allen Moore, vice-president of Gloria Swanson Productions, Inc., and his wife; Pierre Bedard, production manager, who will be accompanied by his bride; Director Albert Parker; Miss Katharine Nolen, social secretary; Miss Anne Morgan, Miss Edith Simonson, Richard Halliday, Mr. and Mrs. Irving Wyckoff.

Nat Nathanson, president of Hi-Mark Productions, dropped off at Pittsburgh, St. Louis and Chicago en route to the Coast. He will have forty-four releases to offer franchise-holders, including eight features.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Lloyd, Joe Reddy and others in the Lloyd party which has been stopping at the Ritz, entrained for Los Angeles last Saturday.

G. E. Patton, director of the Motion Picture Bureau, Province of Ontario, and of the Trenton studios, Ontario, was in New York as the representative of the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Premier of Ontario, accompanied by his staff, as the guest of Roxy at the opening of his theatre. He was accompanied by R. C. Gadsby, representing the Canadian National Railways, also an invited guest.

Harry Cohn, vice-president and general manager of production for Columbia Pictures, has arrived in New York for a stay of several weeks. Mr. Cohn was accompanied by Mrs. Cohn and Dorothy Howell, assistant production manager.

Edwin Silverman, sales manager of Warner Bros., is back from a three weeks' trip through the southern territory where he journeyed to make a survey of the outlook for Warner's product for next season. Mr. Silverman covered eleven southern states.

Louis Rosenfeld and Jules Levine, managers of the Columbia exchanges in Toronto and Montreal, respectively, are in New York this week, on a short business trip to confer with Joe Brandt, president of the company, on the remainder of the season's releases.

Colvin W. Brown, vice-president of F. B. O., in charge of foreign distribution, returned from abroad on Tuesday.

Looking Ahead

Harry Cohn, vice-president and general manager of production for Columbia Pictures, is in New York to confer on new product.

Birmingham Society Wins Sunday Shows

By a vote of almost 3 to 1, Birmingham, fashionable Detroit suburb, on Monday voted against the Sunday Blue Laws Ordinance and, as a result, John H. Kunsky will continue the erection of his million dollar theatre there.

Several months ago Kunsky agreed to build in Birmingham if he could be assured Sunday shows. After his building was underway the reform element put the question on the election ballot. Society people who find it difficult to keep servants in Birmingham owing to the city's lack of amusements, got out and campaigned for Sunday movies. The Kunsky house will be the first theatre in the city.

Shows Roxy Cross-Section

A clever visualized cross-section of the Roxy Theatre, showing the artistic detail and full seating and operating plans and mechanisms, has been drawn for Science and Invention by Stanley Bate, the young artist of Nashville, Tenn., and New York, who is a brother of Henry Clay Bate of Universal.

Shuberts Regain Control

The run of "The Fire Brigade" ends this week at the Central Theatre and Loew turns back the lease to the Shuberts.

Seesel With Fox-Case

Charles O. Seesel has been signed as art director of Fox-Case Corporation, which makes Movie-tone pictures. His headquarters will be at the two new studios on West 54th street.

Fox Frolic Hits Tops Speed with Minstrels, Dance

First Annual Funfest Is Hit with Crowd

A novelty in motion picture gatherings proved an instant hit with a large crowd when the First Annual Fun Frolic brought out the talent of the Fox Film Corp. staff in a minstrel show preceding the buffet supper and dance which rounded out a full evening at the Hotel McAlpin, New York, March 11.

The minstrels made an entertaining feature. In a book written by Roger Ferri, with special music by Francis Weldon, and to the orchestral accompaniment of the Knickerbocker Collegians, the "show" proved to be full of humor and wit, with plenty of clever work by the soloists and ensemble. All showed a fine response to the schooling of the producer of the very creditable performance.

Especially entertaining were the end men, William McBride, Frank Kizis, Herman Blumenfeld and Harlan Gluck, who, with Roger Ferri as interlocutor, gave the old-time type of show a peppy, modern zest.

Part of the evening's performance was broadcast through Station WMCA and fan mail already is attesting the fact that it "went over." Credit is due the entertainment committee for the splendidly managed and smooth running routine, which included a buffet supper and plenty of dancing. A novelty news reel, the Fox Snooze, added to the proof of cleverness among the Fox staff, and to Truman Talley is due much praise for his hard work on the fun reel.

Carlos Signs Arbuckle

The Los Angeles Examiner says that Roscoe Arbuckle has signed to produce a comedy series for Abe Carlos, independent producer, for a period of five years at a reported arrangement netting the comedian $2,500,000. The first picture will start in Berlin on October 1. Arbuckle's wife, the former Doris Deane, will play in the pictures. All will be made abroad and, for the present, distribution in foreign countries.

Honor Morris

The sales force of Warner Bros. will pay a tribute to the general manager of distribution by conducting a "Sam E. Morris Month" during the month of May.

Canadian Copyright Act Seems Due For Revision

The amendments to the Canadian Copyright Act, as introduced in a bill in the Canadian House of Commons by L. J. Ladner, M. P., Vancouver, B. C., will undergo important revision before they are finally considered by the Parliament at Ottawa, it is officially announced.

It is estimated that the clauses in the bill affecting performing rights will be withdrawn so that picture theatres, radio broadcasters, fall fairs and bands will not be required to pay continuous royalties or block fees.

"There is no possibility of the Ladner Bill going through without these changes being made," it is stated.

"U" Signs Curwood

Bob Curwood, stunt man, has been engaged by Universal as the star in a series of thirteen stunt two-reel western pictures to be made for release next season.

Important to You

Celebrating its Twentieth Anniversary, Moving Picture World will come out in greatly enlarged form containing features invaluable to every person connected with the moving picture industry. It will far surpass in the value of its contents our notable Tenth Anniversary Issue and will form a volume that will practically be a history of the progress of the pictures to date.

This will constitute the regular issue of Moving Picture World for March 26, and will be sent to all subscribers.

Owing to the vast bulk of these special features, the various service sections will be omitted, to be resumed the following week.

Single copies, if available, will be sold at one dollar each.

A.M.P.A. Dinner At Astor Assumes International Air

Many Foreign Diplomats and Hoover to Attend

Billed as the seventh annual and the first international function of its kind, the dinner of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Hotel Astor, April 2, will set the stage for international good-will with especial honor to the Latin-American countries.

The complete list of speakers includes Will H. Hays, who will act as toastmaster; Herbert M. Hoover, Secretary of Commerce; two South American ambassadors; Mayor James J. Walker and A. M. Botsford.

The international aspect of the dinner will loom formidably in the array of Latin-American diplomats who will sit at the speakers' table. Those who have been invited, either as speakers or guests, and most of whom have already accepted, are:

Honorio Pueyrredon, Ambassador of Argentina; Dr. Herman Velarde, Ambassador of Peru; Don Manuel C. Tellez, Ambassador of Mexico; S. Gurgel do Amaral, Ambassador of Brazil; Don Miguel Cruchaga Tocornal, Ambassador of Chile; Don Orestes Ferrara, Ambassador of Cuba; Dr. J. Varela, Minister of Uruguay; Don Francisco Sanchez Latour, Minister of Guatemala; Dr. Enrique Olaya, Minister of Colombia; Dr. Don Ricardo J. Alfaro, Minister of Panama; Don J. Rafael Oreanuno, Minister of Costa Rica; Dr. Don Ricardo Jaimes Freyre, Minister of Bolivia; Hannibal Price, Minister of Haiti; Don Luis Bogran, Minister of Honduras; Dr. Don Carlos F. Grisanti, Minister of Venezuela; Angel Morales, Minister of Dominican Republic; Dr. Don Alejandro Cesar, Minister of Nicaragua; Dr. Don Hector David Castro, Charge d'Affaires of Salvador; on Juan Barberis, Charge d'Affaires of Ecuador, and Dr. Juan V. Ramirez, Charge d'Affaires of Paraguay.

The speaking will be broadcast over WJZ. There will be an hour's entertainment staged under the direction of Major Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol.

Two film travesties, the annual burlesque news reel and a special reel produced by Rose Pelswick will be shown.

Retain Pollard

Director Harry Pollard, who is completing the Universal super-production, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," has been signed on a five-year contract by Carl Laemmle. The first picture to be made by Pollard under his new contract will be "Show Boat," Universal's projected super-adaptation of Edna Ferber's best seller.

Sports

Two extra-period games featured the basketball race in the motion picture industry Friday night. Pathe and Metro fought for three over-time periods. Pathe finally winning in the last few seconds of play when George Snyder, center, hurled a ringer that traveled almost the entire length of the Stuyvesant High School Court. This tied the game, 34-34, and a moment later Snyder tossed a free throw as the whistle blew, giving Pathe the winning margin. This game made seven straight for Pathe, the only undefeated team.

In another overtime contest, Fox won in an uphill fight from United Artists, tying the game after a bad start as the whistle blew, and chalking up 11 points in the over-time period, the final tally being Fox 43, United Artists 31.

The final games will be played this (Friday) evening, with Metro having a chance to tie Fox for second place. Pathe meets Consolidated, with Metro playing United Artists.

M-G-M Sues Robbins

Application has been made to Justice Edward Glennon of the New York Supreme Court to confirm an award made by the Board of Arbitration against the Robbins Enterprises, Inc., and in favor of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. It is alleged that in June, 1925, two contracts were made with Metro and the Robbins Enterprises, by which the latter were to exhibit about fifty pictures. It is alleged that the Robbins people breached their contract, but refused to comply with the provisions of same providing for the submission of their differences to the Board of Arbitration. The Board of Arbitration, in February last, at Albany, N. Y., made two awards in favor of Metro, one for $19,725 and the other for $6,395.

Last Minute News Flashes

Advices on the first week's gross of the Roxy Theatre, as we go to press, indicate that it will total about $125,000, a world's record. The press department would not predict, saying the figures would be announced when the week ends tonight (Friday). The gala Friday night opening of last week does not figure in these totals. The Roxy did about $25,000 on Saturday, $26,000 on Sunday and $14,000 on Monday, and the same on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Seven Incorporations For Week in New York

At the rate of one a day, there were seven companies engaging in some branch of the motion picture industry incorporated last week in New York State. The capitalization of these companies was about normal. The companies receiving charters from the secretary of state included Goodart Pictures, Inc., $10,000, with Harry Kerer, Henry Sonenshine and Emil K. Ellis, New York City; Restless Women, Inc., $10,000 Max E. Hayes, New York City; Philip Offin, Frank J. Film Productions, Inc., $20,000, E. Arzen DeCserpey, Dave Kannengisser, Max Seidler, New York City; the capitalization of the following not being specified: Lima Theatre Corporation, Ellen S. Matthews, Frances Hoffman, Adolph Schimel, New York City; Society of Cinema Arts, Inc., Maude Garrity, Gabrielle Brock, Jersey City; Edna Himmelweit, New York City; Lathal Amusement Corporation, Esther Abend, Ruth F. Film Library For Harvard

The Department of Fine Arts of Harvard University, in association with the Fogg Museum and the University Library, plans to establish immediately a library and archive of films. With the co-operation of Will H. Hays, this collection will be formed to serve the double purpose of recording the evolution of the moving picture and of selecting annually those films which are deemed worthy of preservation as works of art.

"Rough Riders" Opens

Kaliski Wins Cup

The Pittsburgh branch of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., won the E. W. Hammons cup for February for making the best showing during the past month among the 36 Educational exchanges. Joe Kaliski, manager of this exchange, gains possession of his handsome cup as a result of the outstanding work of his office. J. H. Butner, manager of the Atlanta branch, retained possession of the cup during January.

Pierson Promotes Yorke

The promotion of G. S. Yorke to the position of general director of publicity for "What Price Glory" is announced by H. Wayne Pierson, general manager of the Road Show Department.

Boles Remains With Gloria

John Boles, Gloria Swanson's leading man in "The Love of Sunya," has been signed by Miss Swanson to a long term contract. He will leave shortly for California.

Famous Players Form An Authors' Council

Formation of an Author's Council is announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky. The council which begins functioning next month in the new Paramount Building, will develop original stories and encourage authors to write directly for the screen.

This new departure will be organized and directed by William LeBaron, associate Paramount producer in charge of the Long Island studio, Associate director will be Owen Davis, famous dramatist and president of the Authors' League of America. The council also will embrace Frederick Lonsdale, representing British dramatists, and Alfred Saviar, representing the French. Contributors are expected shortly to comprise the leading novelists and dramatists on both sides of the Atlantic.

Fox Opens in Philly Soon

The new Fox Locust Theatre in Philadelphia, the latest addition to the Fox chain, will be formally opened on Sunday night, March 20. The house will be given over that night to an especially invited audience and will be open to the general public on March 21. The policy will be first class attractions such as motion pictures of road show importance and of known success, spoken dramas and musical comedies. The initial attraction will be "What Price Glory," booked for an indefinite run. Harry Fields is manager.

De Mille-Sills Dates All Set

The dates on which Cecil B. De Mille and Milfon Sills will speak before the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration are now announced. They are, respectively, April 26 and 28. De Mille will talk directing and Sills acting. The latter's talk closes the series.

Harwood of Cleveland, a national director, is chairman of the General Convention Committee. He will announce the committee in a few days. Arrangements are being made to procure a special rate of fare and one-half fare to and from the convention for all who attend. P. J. Wood, Ohio, business manager, is secretary of the General Convention Committee.

Our Stock Market

By Ervin L. Hall

Mergers and rumors of mergers have been the order for the past week. Moving picture stocks and issues have fixed the attention of Wall Street bankers and market traders. The stocks have gone up and down like the tide, meaning gains and losses to thousands of speculators. The stock market in general has been erratic. There are always opportunities, however, in motion picture securities for investment and profitable trading.

UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMMON. Universal occupies an important position in the industry. The company controls about 300 theatres extending throughout the entire country. It constitutes within itself a unit for producing, distributing and exhibiting a complete program. Last year the company earned a net of $6.41 a share on its 250,000 shares of common stocks, compared with $6.18 in 1925. For six years the net has been registering steady gains. The outlook for the remainder of the year is good. The company's stock recently sold at 45%, a gain of 16 points from the low of the year. It may go still higher.

UNIVERSAL PICTURES 8% PREFERRED. Selling around 100 and yield 8%. Dividend is earned 3½ times over. Redeemable at 110, and price range this year from 94 to 101. This seems a profitable investment.

FOX OFFICE BUILDING BONDS. Building owned in fee by the Fox Film Realty Corporation, appraised at $1,853,474 and the land at $1,150,000. Mortgage loan is $1,700,000 and bonds represent less than a 58% loan. Rentals amount to $300,000 and interest on bonds $152,235. Bonds sell at 100 and yield 6%. This constitutes a desirable conservative bond investment.

FAMOUS PLAYERS - LASKY CORPORATION. Annual meeting to be held March 29 and there is a proposal to change the name to the Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation. Net for the year ended January 1 was $10.82 a share earned on 459,020 shares of no par common outstanding. This compares with $18.39 a share on 275,102 shares for the preceding year. For the final quarter ended January 1, 1927, the net was $3.13 a share on 574,590 shares of common compared with $5.66 on 370,114 shares for the corresponding quarter of 1925. Book value of the stock around 107 and the present price in the neighborhood of 109%. The dividend of $10 is amply covered and last year's price range was from 127½ to 103½. Yield about 8% and outlook good for the year.

UNITED ARTISTS THEATRE CIRCUIT, INC. The company is making progress. Organized less than 8 months ago, it has theatres in Baltimore, Portland, Ore., Hollywood and Seattle. Theatres are being opened in other cities with reasonable speed. Net earning for the five theatres at present running will amount to about $425,000 for the present year, or 1½ times the annual dividend requirement on the $4,000,000 7% preferred stock. Six pictures have been released during the last eight months and three more have been completed. The company is sound financially and the management able.

Give The Patron A Show

PRIMARILY the motion picture theatre is supposed to be a place where you go to see a motion picture. This being so, it would seem logical to make the fullest provision to that end. Doubtless managers feel that they do, but we question whether many managers sit through a single performance of their own shows from one January to the next. They see the picture in a private projection room. They may see the presentations at rehearsal and hear the orchestral music in much the same way, but many do not enter the auditorium during a performance. They feel they are there to run the show, not to see it. And so it is that many little things spoil the pleasure of the patron and perhaps serve to keep him from a return visit.

And one of the most frequent spoilers of pleasure is the long-legged orchestra leader. Naturally the leader must be able to see and be seen by his musicians, else he could not lead, but there seems to be no very good reason why he should make himself so persistently and irritatingly prominent.

There are some houses, where the musicians play upon the stage, where it probably is impossible to so place the leader that he will not interfere with the clear view of the screen to those sitting in the front of the house in the center. Here, perhaps, the condition is unavoidable.

But there is no reason in the world why musicians playing in the pit cannot see a leader who does not obtrude himself upon the screen. He could lead without so adjusting his platform that he looms large above the stage rim. Where there is an elevator pit, the condition becomes even less excusable.

At every de luxe performance the enjoyment of from one to three hundred persons is materially lessened because the leader thoughtlessly or egotistically, interposes his carcass between the patrons and the screen without real excuse. And the manager doesn't know, because probably he never sat through a show.

Take a seat back of your leader some day and see if you would enjoy it if you were the patron. Then cut the leader down, and earn the everlasting thanks of your unfortunate patrons.

"The Mysterious Voice" Of The Organ

Odd Facts About the Instrument At the Paramount

By Epes W. Sargent

DOWN in the West Indies the negroes will tell you that an unbaptized infant sees spooks. An unopened organ is in much the same case, for the opening is the formal baptism. Paramount's organ never was formally opened. Jesse Crawford splashed it up a bit the night house opened but that's not an opening. Night watchmen reported the big windbox was groaning and moaning in the early morning hours. Crawford and Ed. Olmstead, the manager, decided that an opening was essential, so fifteen or twenty newspaper people were invited to be at the stage door at four o'clock last Thursday to assist.

Everyone had seen the console, and anyhow it was being used, so the first stop was made at the blower room, which has no connection with the press department. The blower is merely a big fan that keeps the windbox at proper pressure. If you just chanced into the room, you probably would suppose it to be part of the ventilating system. This is down in the basement of the building and not far off is the real brains of the organ, the wire room.

If you mistook the blower for the ventilation you might be excused for supposing that the theatre had sublet part of its space to the telephone company, for there are wires enough to supply a central of many hundred subscribers.

Probably you know all about it, but in case you don't, the organ is different from the piano. When you press a piano key lightly, you get a soft tone. Hit it harder and your tone is stronger. Depress an organ key and nothing whatever may happen.

An organist has to stop to start, and when he stops stopping, he stops. The organ consists of many sets of pipes, some of which may run the entire keyboard, while others may consist only of a limited number of pipes. With the exception of the pedal pipes, which are operated by the feet, all of the pipes are operated from one or more of the manuals, or keyboards, and each pipe has its own wire, which admits air to that particular pipe.

Each set of pipes is controlled by a stop; one of the red or white tablets arranged in a horseshoe around the manual. When a stop is touched, a wire connection throws a bar across all of the wires in this pipe system. So long as the bar is down, current flows into the wires and the pipes react to the depression of the keys on the manual. When the bar is up, that set of wires is dead and no tone comes from those pipes.

The organist has no direct control over the tone. That is to say if he hits one key lightly and another heavily, the tone is even. If he wants more tone he does not "play harder." He puts in more stops, for his keys are merely telegraph keys.

On the under side of each key is a contact, and below the key is the other pole of the contact. Depress a key into contact and an electrical impulse is sent over the wire into all sets of wires that are in use.

The touch may actuate only the piccolo, or it may set in motion the groups of pipes representing an entire symphony orchestra. It's all up to the organist to decide what he wants, and to throw in those stops.

The wiring represents roughly one-half of the total cost of the organ, and there is $45,000 worth of electrical work in the Paramount installation, most of it contained in a space about the size of a hall bedroom.

There is no music in this room. All you hear is the soft thud of the bars, the almost imperceptible click of the valves and a murmur that suggests muffled wind.

The wire room is apparently not very far from the console, but it could be across the street, if necessary, for with the electric transmission this element is negligible.

The pipes are on either side of the proscenium in the Paramount, but this is another detail. They could be below the stage level, over the arch, in the dome or at the rear of the house. It all depends on the builder, the architect and the owner. Most installations seem to favor the side sections.

In the Paramount these pipe rooms run up three stories, and even at that they have to turn the big 32-foot pipes. The shape of the pipe is less important than the length and diameter. You get the same tone whether you play a straight trumpet or bend the same amount of pipe into a bugle. There are only a few of the 32-foot-pipes. These are the largest, but not the loudest. They supply the deep tones against which the organist embroiders the design of the lighter melody, and correspond to the double bass in an orchestra or the "um-pah" of the brass band. These are made of wood and are square. Most of the other pipes are square, but not all. And other pipes may be all wood, all metal or a combination of all sizes.

Both chambers have shutters which may be opened or closed at the will of the organist, giving a certain gradation of tone that corresponds to the pedal of a piano. You can get the same effect by opening or closing the doors of your phonograph sound chamber.

One thing that surprises the visitor on his first inspection is the comparative absence of noise. You hear no more tone than you get from your orchestra chair; perhaps not as much for some the pipes are operating in the other chamber, which you do not hear.

The pipes are roughly divided into strings, brass, cathedral and percussion. The first two are self-explanatory. They imitate the various instruments of the orchestra.

The Cathedral pipes are those which originally formed the church organs; straight reed tones that were supposed to supplement the human voice. The percussion is the novelty section and includes everything from two styles of snare drums to the Chinese blocks. This Wurlitzer has two sets of xylophones,

TWENTY years is not so very long as time is measured in the record of human progress, nor is it reckoned more than the span bridging the life of a man from infancy to fullgrown manhood, yet the two decades just past constitute well nigh two thirds of the lifetime of this extraordinary industry and include at least ninety percent of its entire industrial development.

TWENTY years ago this month, in March 1907, Moving Picture World was born, the product of one man's idea and his honest determination to give to the motion picture industry, just beginning its astonishing growth, what it then most needed, a journal of constructive service and enlightened criticism.

IT was a real adventure, full of uncertainties and beset with no uncertain difficulties, which the late James P. Chalmers, editor and founder of Moving Picture World, set forth upon, when he launched its first issue of sixteen pages just a score of years ago, with rugged independence and principle as its watchword and little else upon which to base his high hopes for its ultimate success.

THAT Moving Picture World has proved faithful to his ideals of usefulness to the industry and maintained its leadership, the evidence of the years well attests, for though many publications have since entered the field to contest its supremacy, its twentieth anniversary finds Moving Picture World still pre-eminently the leader in exhibitor circulation and in the prestige which inevitably must come to a publication whose good faith and service to its readers and advertisers has never been questioned.

THE history of Moving Picture World has been the history of the motion picture industry from the days when it began to be an industry and in its Twentieth Anniversary Issue, which goes to press next week, an effort has been made to present a permanent record of the film's amazing growth and development in which this publication has played no unimportant part.

THERE was no trade literature, worthy of the name, in the motion picture business in that now distant day, when James P. Chalmers brought out his modest little paper of sixteen pages and today there is no industry in the world about which so much has been and is being written as about the films and their makers.

YET now as then Moving Picture World may justly claim to be unique, in that it is both first and foremost in its chosen field.

PRODUCTION in the East, which threatened to reach the vanishing point with the decision of the Paramount officials to transfer their entire studio organization to Hollywood, now takes on a new lease of life with the announcement that William Fox will make no less than twelve pictures during the next few months at his Tenth Avenue plant, with Allan Dwan and others directing.

ADD to this Warner Brothers, who, as previously exclusively announced in Moving Picture World, are about to take over the great Cosmopolitan studios, where much of their Vitaphone and feature productions will doubtless be made, and the activities of the Robert H. Kane and one or two other independent producing units and it will be seen that New York is not to be entirely depopulated of moving picture folk.

HOLLYWOOD, of course, will always be the world center of film production, but New York will continue to be the place to get new and original ideas and the mental stimulus to overcome the cerebral anemia which the land of the dolce far niente seemingly develops in its addicts.

ACCORDING to daily newspaper announcements, Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle is going to Europe to make pictures, at the conclusion of the vaudeville tour, which he is about to undertake, and hopes to be seen again on American screens.

WILL H. HAYS long ago lifted the ban against this one time popular comedian, who if ever a man was the victim of tragic circumstance is that man, and it has been regrettable that no producer has since been sufficiently courageous or—perhaps a better expression to use—hardy enough to dare public opinion by giving this unfortunate actor a chance to stage a comeback.

PROBABLY to have done so before this time would have been premature, for the popular verdict against Arbuckle was sweeping, rankly unjust as it was regarded by many, but he surely has atoned for his folly, if such it was, and all the world knows now that he was entirely innocent of the wrongdoing for which the public condemned his pictures.

ROSCOE ARBUCKLE has never lost his favor with the European public, who found it difficult to understand the American attitude toward him and his pictures, and now that time has passed, it is to be hoped that audiences here may also have undergone a change of heart.

ALOT of people didn't believe that Roxy was going to "put it over" and now they are wondering just how far the "Cathedral of the Motion Picture" is going to go in breaking all previous world records for attendance and gross receipts.

UNFORTUNATELY we go to press too soon to get the tabulation of his first full week's business, but it appears now (Thursday) as if it were going to top $130,000 and it may even go considerably above that figure.

IT seems the only way for the powers that be in motion pictures to compete with him is to go out and build another Roxy.

AND that's not as easy as it sounds—ask Roxy!

Roxy's Own Story

Told In 1917

S. L. Rothafel

Just One Instance

"ROXY" is by no means the only headliner of today who from ten to twenty years ago had reason to feel grateful to Moving Picture World for initial recognition and material aid and encouragement. Look through the files from 1908 and you will find that Moving Picture World has always been first to recognize and welcome all who have contributed to the enormous advance of the industry. This isolated example is merely offered here because at this moment it is particularly timely.

It is now about eight years since I first went into the moving picture business, but it seems only yesterday that I stood up on my little balcony in the old dump of a hall behind the barroom at Forest City, Penn., with its 250 undertaker's chairs, an old Power No. 4 machine, a screen made from an old bed sheet, and a second-hand piano. We were running then three single reels for five cents. To me those days afford the most pleasant recollections. How I worked and how I strived, but it didn't discourage me—I loved it.

I used to get up in the morning at day-break, and go out and paint my own signs on paper that I procured from the printing office—ordinary one-sheets of different colors—and I became quite adept with the brush. I used to arrange my music for the orchestra, which consisted of a piano player, and then I went up and cleaned my machine. When I had everything spick-and-span, I cleaned the theatre, met the train in the afternoon, got my films, looked them over, and saw that the patches were in good shape. Then I was ready to make my announcement from the back of the little balcony, where the people had to turn around in their seats to hear me. Gee, those were the good old days.

I remember one instance when I had to get an old Vitagraph reel which I had advertised. I walked from Forest City to Carbondale in a blinding snowstorm, a distance of seven miles each way, so that I would not disappoint my patrons. I left at 4 o'clock in the morning so as to return at 9:30 and not disappoint my audience. That audience consisted of four people. Shortly after this, however, I began to build up.

A Mr. Shirley, who is still manager of the Wilkes-Barre branch of the General Film Company, took me to a convention, where I met, for the first time, a great many men with whom I was destined to be thrown into contact later. I voiced my dreams and ambitions to a Mr. Chalmers, who listened carefully and who believed in me and who made me promise to write several articles for the Moving Picture World, which I did. They were the first

I had ever written for the moving picture industry. What I had seen at the film service convention so impressed me that I immediately began to look for larger fields.

Then came my invention of the daylight pictures and the trip around the country putting them in the different theatres. Next came my management of the Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee; then my sojourn in Minneapolis, then my coming to New York.

It is like a dream or a tale from Fairyland, but here I am, safely esconced in the Rialto, still dreaming and still wishing to do bigger things, and just as dissatisfied today as I was after my trip to New York the first time. Some day perhaps I am going to have my fondest dreams realized, to have a theatre so magnificent, so fine, so big, so powerful that it will stand, not alone as a monument to myself but to the entire moving picture industry.

*A Statement by "Roxy"

Anniversary Number of

I cannot express to you how grateful I am to the Moving Picture World for what it has done; to the members of your staff, each and every one of them and especially to a former member of the staff and my good friend James McQuade who used to take me in a corner and lecture me for hours and get cross if I didn't agree with him. Never will I forget his first visit to me in Minneapolis. Arm in arm we walked around the corner and it was then I first discovered his fondness for the spirit of Pebleford and learned that his liver was out of order, and that he was about to expire. Good old soul, there isn't anything I wouldn't do for him.

It was the Moving Picture World that first gave me any prominence, that discovered me, as it were. It told the moving picture trade what I was trying to accomplish, and may I take this occasion to congratulate it upon its tenth anniversary and to wish it continued success along the lines which have done so much to bring the industry to the place it has attained. May it bend every effort to fight the enemies of the picture relentlessly until the picture is so big, so powerful, so influential it can laugh with scorn at the puny attempts to discredit it. May it wage the war against the grafters, continue the fight against censorship, urge and demand cleaner pictures, better pictures, better direction, and better stories. May it insist and preach the doctrine of maintaining an ideal and never pander to a taste.

All of us in the industry must put our shoulders to the wheel and assist your splendid publication in its fight to place the moving picture on the highest pinnacle, a place where I am sure all of us who love it and have it at heart hope some day to see it.

BROADWAY BOWS To ROXY

TWENTY thousand persons attended the opening of the new Roxy theatre on Friday, March 11. About seven thousand gained admission. The unlucky thirteen stood on the sidewalks in the vicinity and made life miserable for a platoon of sixty policemen, who sought to keep traffic lines open for ticket holders and the vehicular traffic. It was a large night for everyone including Roxy himself. The crowd started coming at seven-thirty and an hour later the streets in the vicinity of the house were well nigh impassable.

Everyone who was anyone in the picture world was there with his wife, and more than 26,000 applications for the purchase of seats had to be turned down after the 6,200 seats available had been disposed of.

Departing from the usual custom, the seats were not sent out, and the mark of favor was the first chance at the purchase of seats; an opportunity practically no one turned down. The receipts went to further the fund inaugurated by the manager some time ago, to supply the veteran hospitals with radio head sets that the shut-ins might find a surcease from the monotony and pain by listening to the broadcasting.

Most of the early comers made a thorough tour of the building, through the ornate outer lobby, into the sumptuous rotunda and up the stairways on either side to the balcony, from which vantage point a better survey of the house could be made than on the lower floor.

The auxiliary organ in the rotunda was utilized for a preliminary concert while a dozen news photographers used it for a vantage point from which to take the stars as they entered.

Sunlight arcs across the street provided illumination for similar shots on the outside.

Even the tickets were out of the ordinary, for instead of the usual pasteboard strip these were in invitation form, and the doorman tore off the stub and handed the remainder to the incoming patron instead of turning back the stub.

For the opening all seats were reserved, and for the greater convenience of the visitor the aisle was indicated as well as the seat and row, which simplified the matter of distributing the patrons.

The house has been so fully described in earlier articles that repetition is not needed here. Suffice it to say that the scheme of tan and brown, lightened with gold, gives a rich, but not oppressive effect. Done in Moorish design the usual scheme gives place to ornate plaster work, niches and winding stairways, striking a new note in theatre interior decoration. Under the balcony this dark tone materially cuts down the light.

Although the slips attached to tickets urged the audience to be seated by twenty minutes past eight, it was nearly nine when the chimes sounded and the triple consoles of the grand organ came into the spotlight from the orchestra pit. A number of selections were played, to bring out the possibilities of the magnificent instrument, and as the consoles sank from view the house went entirely black save for a single spot on the stage illuminating the robed figure of an actor who in resonant tones proclaimed the opening. As he concluded, the orchestra, in a flood of golden light, was disclosed massed on the elevation platform.

The orchestra, numbering 110 players, is larger than any of the symphony orchestras, and produces a massive tone.

Following this came the ballet with a novel setting, showing that Roxy has not lost his cunning during his change from producer to builder, and this, in turn, was followed by a special film, prepared by the International News Reel giving letters and telegrams from President Coolidge, the Secretary of the Navy, many naval officers and Governor Smith.

The next number was a novelty idea: a dock interior through the open door of which was seen a glimpse of New York's skyline and the Hudson, with the shipping, apparently projected from the rear of the stage upon a translucent screen. In this setting a male singer gave "Suavnee River."

The news reel came next followed by a Russian lullaby, at the close of which the chorus rose from the rear of the stage, utilizing the sectional stage elevators. It was a novelty that was enthusiastically received by the friendly audience.

Then came a scene from "Carmen" with Martinelli as "Don Jose" and Jeanne Gordon as a rather restrained "Carmen," the first of a series of Vitaphonic presentations planned.

The highlight of the productions, a southern setting with picanninies, darkey and butlers, dancers and the chorus, entirely filling the huge stage for an impressive ensemble, closed the prelude to the picture.

The film feature, the first presentation of Gloria Swanson's own production of "The Love of Sunya," is more fully reviewed elsewhere. It was projected on a screen sitting rather low on the stage and masked by light draperies which took the light from a color flood, the colorsh changing to harmonize with the mood of the moment.

This violates all the common canons of projection, which teach that there must be no bright light in the vicinity of the picture. On the opening night the lighting was rather too bright. It did not materially interfere with the projection on the daylight screen, but it did prove somewhat of a disturbing element. Opinion seemed to be divided as to the value of the device, with the hardshells sticking out for the old order, but all had to agree that it was a real novelty.

It was a brilliant program, approved by an equally brilliant audience, and the applause was generous in the extreme at each offering.

It was a wonderful night for Roxy, for he had arrived at the summit of his one-time ambition to present his own ideas in his own idea of what a theatre should be. And at that he probably has only started, for many of the ideas of which he has spoken in his plans were not shown on this initial program. It was a wonderful showing to make with the thousand and one details of the opening so pressing on the manager-director's time.

The regular opening occurred with the Saturday performance, and the Saturday and Sunday receipts were close to $50,000.

THE opening of the "Rough Riders" at the Cohan Theatre, Tuesday night, brings another historical and dramatic feature to the screen, that ought to stay on Broadway for some time. Incidentally, it may mark the beginning of a vogue of Spanish War films that may prove as popular as those of the Great War have been and—it may be added—still are.

Victor Fleming, who directed the picture for Famous Players-Lasky, has done a most workmanlike job, with an accuracy of historic detail that does credit to Jesse Lasky's research department. Hermann Hagedorn, Roosevelt's official biographer, compiled the story. Frank Hopper plays the part of T. R. to the life, while the rest of the cast, including Mary Astor, Noah Beery, Charles Emmett Mack and others are all fully satisfactory.

Col. Fred Lindsay, who, it is said, commanded a contingent of the Australians in the Boer War, plays the part of Gen. Leonard Wood, the first colonel of the "Rough Riders," and looks the part. Too bad that General Wood, now having his own troubles in keeping the kinks straightened out among the obstreperous Filipinos and Moros, couldn't have viewed his prototype of Spanish War days on the screen. He will get a great kick out of it, when he does, which may be a few months hence.

Both Hopper and Col. Lindsay are new to the screen, the former being picked for his remarkable resemblance to Col. Roosevelt, but no one would guess it from their respective performances, which are above criticism.

"Rough Riders" aside from its historic interest and the natural appeal it will have to the thousands who admire T. R., is mighty good screen entertainment.

Dave Bader, accessory sales manager for Big U, writes of seeing Moving Picture World prominently displayed in a vaudeville sketch on a railway newsstand, which was painted on the back drop. He said he got a "great kick" out of seeing it. It was just like meeting an old friend far from home.

Dave doesn't need to be told that the artist, who painted it, must have drawn entirely on his imagination. Moving Picture World circulates only in the trade, where it enjoys the largest number of readers and paid subscribers of all the motion picture trade press. Consequently, railway newsstands are about the last places one is apt to find a copy.

Nonetheless, it is distinctly gratifying to have a friend write in, when he sees Moving Picture World in a strange place, even if it is the first time to our knowledge, that it has appeared in a vaudeville sketch in the twenty years it has been enjoying the support and patronage of this great industry.

Talk of picturizing Kipling, which lately has been heard again, leads to thoughts of Randolph Lewis, whose association with this illustrious author and the friendship and sympathy which existed between the two a few years ago, when it was planned by Pathe to produce a number of Kipling's greatest stories, would seem to make the latter invaluable to any producer now intending to photodramatize any of Rudyard Kipling's works.

Certainly, his intimate information about the greatest living English author, and his peculiar knowledge of his likes and dislikes, should not be overlooked if Kipling is to be translated into terms of the screen.

In a letter to Paul Brunet, then president of Pathe, Kipling wrote that Lewis understood the psychology of his stories more thoroughly than any man he had met in the motion picture business.

A tribute to Randy Lewis which ought to be a tip for someone.

Now that New York has three Cathedrals, St. Patrick's, St. John's and Roxy's, we can look for the canonization of the latter almost any day now. Meanwhile Cardinal Hayes and Bishop Manning will have to look to their laurels. Both get on the first page of the dailies almost as often as Roxy, but we bet his cathedral will have the attendance record for all that.

The only disappointment which any one had at the opening of the Roxy, which we have heard anything about, was in the matter of the souvenir programs. Only about half the big audience was enabled to get one, although some persons were seen with two or three. Evidently the printer, or whoever it was that was responsible, did not send enough to cover the demand at the theatre, a fact which caused annoyance to many.

With United Artists' "The Beloved Rogue" at the Strand this week, John Barrymore had three of his features on Broadway at once, a distinction even for a star as famous and popular as he surely is. Warner Brothers' "Don Juan" is now in its eighth month at the Warner Theatre and "When a Man Loves" at the Selwyn has been doing big business since the opening. Yet in spite of the unusual line-up of film attractions on Broadway, including the new Roxy, Joe Plunkett did an excellent business with "The Beloved Rogue."

Queena Mario, noted diva of the Metropolitan Opera, is said to be a confirmed movie addict and an enthusiastic fan. She goes to all the Broadway film houses regularly, not only for entertainment, but because she feels that motion pictures are literally a school that helps her to improve her own dramatic art.

Not a bad idea, for pantomime is the basis of most good acting and the screen has this form of dramatic portrayal in its most developed form. Even grand opera may one day recognize the debt it owes to this newest and at the same time oldest of dramatic arts—the movie.

WITH Major Edward Bowes as the generalissimo in chief—pardon the redundancy—of the A. M. P. A. Naked Truth dinner-dance at the Astor on April 2, it appears that there is going to be plenty of action. The comedy news reel which will give the "once-over" to the great and near great ones of the industry, is reported to be full of T. N. T. and it is to have competition in another news reel, which Rose Peltsick, of the "Evening Journal," is going to provide.

Arrangements have been made to separate the past presidents of the A. M. P. A. from the speakers, a double dais, with the P. P.'s at one and the distinguished guests at the other, being provided for the purpose. There is nothing suggestive about this innovation, the idea, it is said, being merely to take the strain off the P. P.'s and give them a chance to enjoy themselves.

The responsibility for keeping the speakers out of mischief will devolve on Walter Eberhardt, present president of the A. M. P. A., who has nothing to do meanwhile but send out tickets. By the way, have you got yours yet? Get busy, if you haven't, for they are going fast and April 2 will soon be here.

When Ed Wynn and W. C. Fields finish their respective pictures at the Paramount Long Island Studio, Famous Players winds up all big production in the East. Nevertheless, the big plant is going to be kept pretty busy once Manny Cohen gets his cohorts at work.

Production in the East won't come entirely to a standstill, either, while the big Cosmopolitan Studio, where Bob Kane is making "Dance Magic," continues to be available for producers, for the Warner Brothers may not want all this great plant for Vitaphone for some time to come. In any event it will not be turned into a "garage" or a "warehouse," as so many of the intelligent, but badly informed film editors of the dailies delight to announce from time to time.

One thing at least they haven't got in Hollywood is New York streets and New York crowds. So King Vidor, who is working on his "Big Parade" of peace, entitled "The Crowd," an original story of life in the big city, with Eleanor Boardman and James Murray, is coming to New York with all his company to do the main scenes.

HAL HOLDING looked thoughtfully at the letter he held in his hand. One thousand dollars for the best campaign on "Reckless Riders" listened attractively to him. He could use a thousand dollars very nicely and there did not seem to be any catch in this offer. Jack Frone, the salesman for Preferential Pictures patted Holding's knee.

"Look here, Hal," he urged. "There's a $50 prize to the man who sells to the first prize winner. 'Who aids in developing the best campaign' is the way the circular reads. I'm counting on you."

There's a lot of fellows going after that, objected Holding. "Us little fellows can't do much alongside the big cities. Suppose I get up a good Safety First campaign. Some fellow in Chicago or St. Louis or some place like that can get up one ten times as big."

"Safety campaign, my wife's aunt's mother-in-law," he exploded. "Did you think I made a special trip all the way out here to listen to you talk about safety first campaigns. Come alive, man. The alarm clock's ringing. You're the only live wire in my district, and I need that fifty. You say safety first again and I'll kick you so sore you'll still be standing up for your Christmas dinner."

Silence settled over the office while Holding reduced the footage on his cigar by another inch and contemplated the ceiling. Then a smile began to twitch at the corners of his mouth and Frone looked hopeful. He knew the signs.

"I guess I've got it," Holding drawled. "I'll get a couple of Fords. Lem Billings will drive one and Ben Gage the other. I'll start Lem down the street in one car and let Ben come down the road hell-bent and ram Lem out in front of the postoffice—about noon, say. Of course the crowd will gather and Lem and Ben will jaw a bit. I'll have the cops fixed, of course, and just as it looks like a fight we'll trip banners telling about Reckless Riders. It may cost a hundred dollars in repairs, but I'll take a chance."

"You'll take no chance," averred Frone. "Why you'll build business at least $500 and the thousand will be pure velvet. Let me know when you're going to pull the stunt, Hal, and I'll come down. Be sure and have a photographer."

The two men shook hands and Frone climbed into his car to make the next customer, while Holding went over to see the Chief of Police, first stopping to pick up the Chairman of the Safety Council.

Viewed purely as a caution to all reckless drivers, the Chief decided that the stunt might be educational, and a telephone conversation with the Mayor, (who also had a season pass,) clinched this belief. Holding was given the highball.

Over at the garage Holding found what he wanted. They had two decrepit cars for sale, but only one was a Ford. Use that to hit with and it will knock the daylights out of this old Buick, suggested the garage man. It got hit by a train, and while I've patched it up, it won't take much rough work. I can get it to run five miles, but that's about the limit. You can have it for $25. You pay the repair bills on the Ford. It won't be much.

The rest was easy. Hal knew both of his drivers, and the plan was quickly laid. At the lower end of the public square the State road from the North turned into the main highway. It was agreed that it would look more natural, and make for better timing, if Billings were to drive in from the state road.

"Let him swing into the highway say at ten minutes past twelve," suggested Gage. "I'll be coming down the highway, and when I see him I'll make a quick turn and slap him for a crash. I'll start two blocks down at ten minutes past twelve and be in full swing by the time I hit the square. It will give Lem just about time to get in front of the postoffice. We'll both be ready so we won't get hurt none."

That seemed to be the best idea, and Gage took the Ford out into the country to test speed and found he could get about thirty miles an hour out of the seeming wreck. Meanwhile the Buick was given a coat of paint and made to look as much like its pristine self as was possible. It had been too badly wrecked to be sold for real work, but it was highly ornamental and could creep along.

Word was quietly passed along to the policemen not to stop Gage if he started to sprint, and as a further preparation Holding got the local daily to start an editorial drive against reckless speeding with dire predictions as to what some day would happen if thoughtless tourists were not checked in their headlong flight through town. Holding figured that the accident would have greater moral effect if the readers were aroused.

It looked like a cinch when Frone drove in on Saturday morning to watch the fun. The local photographer was waiting in the post-office lobby with his camera ready set up and four extra policemen had been stationed on the square.

Just at ten minutes past twelve a car turned in from the state road and headed up the square and at the same moment Gage, two blocks down stepped on the gas.

Holding took a look at the advancing Buick and groaned. "That's not Billings," he moaned. "It's a stranger. I've got to stop Ben or there's trouble. He waved his arms wildly at the advancing Ford, but Gage merely waved back, mistaking the gesture for encouragement. An instant later he had rammed the stranger's car squarely from the rear. There was a pop of bursting tires, a crash of shattered glass and two white-faced men leaped from the driver's seat of the smashed car.

Instead of turning on Gage they leaped into a high-powered roadster that roared up, and they were shot down the road before the surprised crowd could stop them.

Gage climbed from his seat with a dazed look on his face.

"That wasn't Lem," he said wonderingly.

"Of course it wasn't," roared Holding. "I was waving at you to stop."

"I thought you meant come on," explained Ben. "Where's Lem?"

"The darned car went bad," explained a voice at his elbow. "I worked like a fiend, but another Buick drove me to the curb and I stalled. Where did the driver go?"

"I've got a car to pay for now," groaned Holding. "My profit's gone and more."

"Don't worry about damages, Hal," reassured the Chief, who had been inspecting the car. "No bootlegger's going to sue you. That's why they beat it. You ruined about eight cases of synthetic Scotch. Hang your signs on the car and then hustle over and tell the editor. It's a better story than the one you framed. It'll win that thousand."

"King of Kings" To Rate N. Y. Premiere?

FROM present indications the world's premiere of the "King of Kings" will be held in New York City instead of Hollywood. Originally it had been planned by De Mille to open this biblical super-production in the Chinese theatre, also on the opening night of that house. This was originally scheduled for late in March, but judging from reports, construction work on the Chinese house will not be completed until a later date. The only word that could be gleaned at the De Mille studios was that the premier would take place in New York should the opening of the Chinese theatre be delayed for any great length of time.

Pathe Serial Is An Original Story By George Gray

"The Hawk of the Hills" has been selected as the title of the next Pathe serial, according to an announcement by Phil Ryan, general production manager for Pathe on the West Coast.

The story is an original by George Gray and is based on historical data connected with the settling of Montana in 1870. Spencer Bennet has charge of direction.

Allene Ray and Walter Miller will again be starred with three Pathe veterans in the supporting roles, Frank Lackteen, Paul Panzer and Wally Oettel.

Vagabond Prospers

The Hollywood Vagabond, just a month old, is already boasting a local circulation of 792 readers, according to its publisher, Billie Joy. Fred Fox, its editor, told us that its policy is that of "satire and constructive criticism."

Baby Mildred Kornman, one of the best bits of the "Our Gang" comedies, has "reported" back at the studio for work again after a few months' vaudeville tour with her sister, Mary. Mildred is only eighteen months of age, but has "it."

This Is the First Picture To Be Completed Since the First National-Stanley Merger and It Looks Like an Out- standing Result of Film Art

AT the Burbank Studios finishing touches are being given "The Tender Hour" which will be available to theatre owners through First National in June. The picture is the first to be completed since the gigantic amalgamation of First National with the Stanley and West Coast theatre interests. In fact, Director George Fitzmaurice was supervising his last scenes on his first picture for First National while John McGuirk, Stanley chieftain and head of the great combine, was in the midst of his first official visit to Burbank.

During the seven weeks which were devoted to camera work we learn that approximately 6,000 extras were used at various times by Fitzmaurice, solely as background in "The Tender Hour."

Of the 120,000 feet of negative shot by Chief Cameraman Curley, the picture has been edited to the release length of seven reels. We previewed a portion of this footage in one of the Burbank projection rooms after watching several scenes on the lot. From what we saw we would say that Producer John McCormick, who is also general manager of First National's west coast production, has in "The Tender Hour" a picture containing all of the ingredients which have gained for George Fitzmaurice the reputation of being an ace among First National directors.

With Billie Dove and Ben Lyon sharing honors the cast also finds Montague Love and Alec B. Francis in feature roles. In addition to the thousands of extras which were summoned repeatedly by Director Fitzmaurice, some twenty-two members of the well-known Marion Morgan dancing school also have a prominent part in one of the scenes.

The theme of the wealthy

American father marrying off his daughter for the sake of a foreign title is widely deviated from in Carey Wilson's original story upon which "The Tender Hour," as it was adapted to the screen by Winifred Dunn, is based.

It is for the title and more money that Billie Dove as Marcia Kane is married off to Grand Duke Sergei, played by Montague Love. Then Ben Lyon as Wally McKenzie, the youthful lover who, through the duplicity of the father, is believed by Marcia to have died, appears in her bridal suite immediately after the ceremony.

An opening of this kind proved a relish for Fitzmaurice. This director, noted for his interpretation of things bizarre, immediately utilized sets depicting long halls, gorgeously furnished bedrooms, beautiful women, tall champagne glasses, long lace curtains, huge male servants.

On a bedroom set Montague Love as the guttous Duke is shown devouring a breakfast of a dozen raw eggs, goblets of wine and quarters of beef. Around him are assembled four maids in attendance who, after feeding him, proceed to spray him with per-

WITH First National but a comparatively few months Billie Dove has just been elevated to stardom. Not only her rare beauty and attractiveness but her sterling qualities as an actress may readily be appreciated as being responsible for this elevation.

Miss Dove's performance in "The Tender Hour," in which production she is co-featured with Ben Lyon, presents perhaps a more striking example of her eligibility for stardom than in any of her previous appearances on the screen.

In "The Tender Hour" Miss Dove is called upon to express many and varied emotions. Caught in numerous close-ups which are enhanced with all the artistry for which Director Fitzmaurice is noted, "The Tender Hour" should prove for Miss Dove an excellent sequel for her introduction into active stardom.

We visited several times the theatre set upon which Miss Dove was working, but each time she was deeply engrossed in her part. Knowing the unusually earnest way in which she regards her work we made no attempt to intrude. Instead we studied her performance on the set which later in the studio projection room did her similar justice on the screen.

"The Tender Hour" is Ben Lyon's twenty-second picture and the first one in which he has worn a suit of armor, Lyon told us during one of the intermissions on the set. This is Lyon's fourth year with First National and all of his pictures for that corporation, with the exception of three, have been made on the coast.

"THE TENDER HOUR" is George Fitzmaurice's first directorial accomplishment for First National. It will be a big success at the box office, he stated to us quite definitely. And then with similar emphasis he gave the reasons:

It contains drama.

It contains comedy.

It is filled with a luxurious atmosphere.

Summed up, Fitzmaurice told us that he has injected into "The Tender Hour" all of those essentials which, when properly conglomerated, provide such a production with the well-known sure-fire audience appeal.

Those who meet Fitzmaurice for the first time are doubtless convinced that he is the true debonaire French type. The genteel, highly polished, curly black-haired but sleek-mustached Parisian.

As a matter of fact, Fitzmaurice's pedigree in the studio archives shows him to be a native of Paris but the son of 100 per cent. Irish parents.

About the pedigree, Fitzmaurice does not talk. "They have all that in the studio," he will say. This pioneer director is interested on the set in the picture which he is making. If one would have him talk about himself then it is quite obvious that the meeting place must be over some table or outside the commodious business office of this director.

Fitzmaurice is an ace director on the First National lot. He has been at the top of his profession wherever he has worked. Watching him work and the consideration he gives his cast provides one of the reasons.

IT isn't very often that we find a cameraman who was born right in the film capital, but Ventura, a few miles from here, is the home town of Robert D. Curley, chief cameraman on First National's "The Tender Hour."

Curley, however, had to go to New York for his early experience, where he made his first picture for Edwin Carewe. Curley came back to California in 1917, two years after he had started his career as a cinematographer. In all, he was associated with Carewe for nine years, just leaving that producer after completing the camera work on Carewe's "Resurrection."

While talking to Curley an angle on photography which has not yet been touched upon in this column was brought to our attention. Curley mentioned that he had photographed "The Tender Hour" on panchromatic film in "high key."

"It was rather difficult in view of the fact that I had just finished "Resurrection," which was photographed completely in low key."

To the layman Curley seemed to have hit upon something relative to the technique of musical composition, so we asked him to present us with the clear cut definition of the two keys.

"High" key, as the phrase would imply, is just the description of the lighting used to get brilliant effects on the celluloid. This necessitates every bit of illumination available on the set.

"Low" key, of course, he said, is just the opposite. It is used to get effects in shadows. But the secret of Curley's success is that he has the key to both.

SOMETHING like six thousand "extras" were used in filming the George Fitzmaurice's special for First National, "The Tender Hour." As this is not a war picture in which huge mobs must necessarily be used, the large number of "extras" utilized is worthy of more than passing comment.

The photograph above introduces Paula Howard to readers of Moving Picture World as a potential star. In reality Miss Howard has recently stepped out of the "extra" ranks and is now entitled to list herself as a featured player. Previous to blossoming into the featured circle she was ranked as one of Hollywood's most famous "extras."

Her fan mail began pouring in when she was "bumped" into the movies by Marie Prevost and later taken under the latter's wing as a protegee. Her rapid strides were nothing short of phenomenal and a short time ago she found the culmination of her hopes in her elevation from an "extra" to a featured screen actress.

Miss Howard is a Hollywood girl, having been born in the section that is now dotted with studios of the large production organizations. She is one of the few girls born in the cinema center to carve a substantial place for herself on the screen.

Her popularity with the school kids is established beyond any question of doubt. They see her as a former school girl and the personification of their own hopes.

When we interviewed Miss Howard for this column, which, by the way, has been fortunate in the prediction of new stars, we found her as unassuming as she is beautiful and charming.

Interesting People In "The Tender Hour"

Harry Langdon

in

"Long Pants"

His Greatest Achievement

A Serious Man Who Makes the Whole World Laugh

By Tom Waller

West Coast Representative

WHILE interviewing Harry Langdon some one in the room piped up with the boast: "This is my seventeenth day on the wagon." Harry did not even crack a smile. He has been in Hollywood 1,460 nights with not a single party on the record. Harry reads and writes. He operates a typewriter faster than a crack newspaperman. He bubbles over with originality. He jots it down as fast as it bubbles. This, says Harry, prohibits him even time to think about parties.

"Audiences want dumb comedians. They want to be brighter than the comedians. They want comedians to be real. They want comedians to do dumb things the same way that dumb people do in real life."

That's Harry's reason for being dumb on the screen. Not an affected dumbness which would bore and sicken, but a convincing dumbness. A dumbness characteristic of some unfortunate in every day life who blunders in the office, in traffic and in the home but who once in a while meets with the occasional uncanny luck of the dumb.

Harry Langdon as the simp on the screen who simply cannot help himself is as heavy off the set as he is at the box office till. He is the man who gives the thousand and one first impressions. The one that remains indelible, however, is Harry Langdon's sincerity. A sincerity that makes everyone he meets a friend to Harry Langdon whether or not Harry Langdon will accept that friendship.

Analyzed, the thing about Langdon most contagious and that which possibly causes most people to warm up to him even before the conversation is started is Langdon's enthusiasm for his job, always as continuously effervescent as that of the schoolboy who has gotten 100 per cent in all of his exams. Langdon is so in love with his work that after a long day on the set in heat made tropical by electric illumination, he diverts himself in his own home by putting down in black and white his own ideas for his own screen stories.

Langdon's face is contradictory to his mind and his whole being. He isn't absent-minded. He is lonely only when he is not busy. Yet there surely seems to be something pathetic about the man. A trait that automatically arouses sympathy. Harry loves his trait because it is the backbone of his job. It is the trait which enables him to portray the boob; convulsing an intelligent audience, a mediocre audience. The trait which can break off a laugh, almost bring a tear and wind up with a bigger laugh. It is the trait which the many alleged students of psychology believe they can analyze and their analysis, whatever it may be, satisfies Langdon because it satisfies them as patrons of his box office. It is the trait which suggests to other fans someone they have seen before they bought their ticket to the Langdon show; some one of their acquaintances, or, possibly, some one right in their own family.

Although a star and one of the biggest of his kind, Harry Langdon is not even an actor during an interview. To get him to talk the interviewer may often believe it necessary to do the acting. Then Langdon will detect it and close up like the proverbial clam. Loose limbs, plain language and plenty of cigar smoke seem to get the best replies from Langdon. Then his enthusiasm asserts itself and you see before you an entirely different face. It is the Langdon as he really is. Sheer animation because it's the job you're asking him about and not a lot of questions about himself which would cause many others to preen themselves for their best lingo. And Langdon opens up and tells you about that job. And, incidentally, when you are beginning to learn a lot about the man Langdon quite suddenly becomes aware that in talking about the job he is talking about himself. An abrupt apology for being "egotistical" is usually followed by Langdon firmly clamping his lips together. It is more smoke, looser limbs and even plainer language before you can convince him that you are not interested in him; that all you want is to know about the "job."

While smoking a couple of extra cigars we learned that Harry's next picture is going to have a water front tang. That he is now working nightly on the theme which will present him on the screen as a wharf rat—not just a low-minded, low-down, booze-spotted bum—is correct, he told us. He will be the kind of a bum that a newspaperman on a long-shoreman strike assignment in New York might have picked out as a drinking partner and cultivated into a "leak" for the "low-down" on the story. A bum with all the earmarks of a bum but also the kind of a bum who could roll into a gutter, herald the occasion with invectives and at the same time get up and grin over the very thought that wherever there is a gutter there is always a sidewalk.

Harry told us that there will be no leading lady in his next picture. He is planning to have two rather elderly characters tell the romance of the story. He remarked, in fact, that in the future he will try to have as few stories as possible necessitating leading ladies.

Not because Langdon wants to be the side as well as the center of the screen. He is striving to carry on his originality and yet conform with the conventions of the screen. He is doing this because he believes sex is rampant in plays as well as pictures at the present time.

And Harry Langdon is also about to introduce another innovation. He is going to cut his corps of gag men or comedy constructionists, as they have been called of late, down to one man.

Langdon's reasoning in this respect is that the trend of an excellent idea may be lost in its entirety after a half-dozen more of gaggists have made suggestions as to how it could be improved.

And Langdon comes forth again with his originality when he tells how a producer can gauge the success of a picture with a Hollywood preview audience.

"It isn't so much how they applaud out there in Hollywood as it is if the picture has interested them enough to stand out in the street and look for the star," Langdon vouchsafed.

As an instance of how this works

Langdon told us about his reaction following two preview showings of his latest picture "Long Pants." The first preview was at the West Lake theatre when "Long Pants," edited for laughs rather than story, was shown in nine reels. The applause was there and probably a lot of people looked around for Langdon after the show but Langdon was not to be seen even though he sat right in the middle of the audience.

"Then 'Long Pants' was taken back to the cutting room and this time edited for story essentials with a maximum length of six short reels. The second preview occurred at the Wilshire. This time the applause thundered and Langdon had a difficult time reaching his car. A few days after he had reached his car it was announced that the picture as seen at the Wilshire would open in the Strand Theatre, Manhattan. And Langdon's business manager personally escorted the Strand print to New York.

We devoted three pages of the Hollywood department recently describing "Long Pants" from the time the story idea was conceived to the time it was brought to the cutting room in 325,000 feet and there made ready for its preview.

At that time, however, we did not know that Langdon one night had conceived the idea for one of the cleverest gags in the picture and that the following morning at eight o'clock, without consulting any of his gag men, he put the idea into motion before the camera. He worked until 5:30 the next morning when he had to his credit a record of having shot eighty-five scenes in less than twenty-four hours. And eighty-five scenes which critics now acclaim to constitute one of the best sequences in the picture.

Langdon directs himself in scenes in which he appears. He believes that he can do this best because he knows his story and he knows himself. He ventured the belief that a star, capable in these respects, directing himself would result in the motion picture industry probably turning out better pictures, or at least pictures more truly interpreting emotions as they really are.

The Story Of A Man Who Loves His Work

Wurtzel Plans Long Vacation; His First In Fifteen Years

General Superintendent of Fox West Coast Studio Not Resigning, As Rumored, But Only Taking Well-Earned Rest From Heavy Duties

SOL WURTZEL, general superintendent of the Fox West Coast Studios, has embarked on what is described as his first vacation in fifteen years. From several sources it was gathered that this vacation will be a protracted one and that it spells the announcement of Wurtzel relinquishing his throne on Fox's Hollywood domain.

These reports, however, were vociferously denied at the Fox West Coast headquarters just before press time. The World then learned that Wurtzel's vacation will extend over a period of six weeks and at the end of that time he will return to Hollywood and resume his job as superintendent.

Prior to Wurtzel's leaving Hollywood for New York via a devious route through the Panama Canal, this executive was tendered a farewell supper at which Tom Mix was toastmaster and Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and James R. Granger, general sales manager of the Fox company, were both present.

While in the East, the World learned, Wurtzel is scheduled to take an active part in the annual convention of the Fox sales force at Atlantic City.

Fanny Brice Says "I Don't Worry"

A receiver has been appointed in New York to collect a sum of $1,046.21 from Fanny Brice, stage star, as a judgment on a note signed by Miss Brice for her husband, Jules W. ("Nicky") Arnstein, according to word received on the coast.

Miss Brice, who is appearing at a Hollywood theatre, declares, "I don't worry; everything will be all right."

Fred Thomson To Work With Famous

FROM a most reliable source it was learned just before press time that Fred Thomson has definitely made up his mind to enroll under the Famous Players-Lasky banner. It was also gathered by the World in this respect that Famous' schedule for next year calls for the making of five special productions, two of which, it is said, will be produced by Fred Thomson.

It is now expected that Mr. Thomson will move his unit next door or to the Paramount lot, as soon as he completes "Silver Comes Through," his latest for F. B. O.

Epidemic Hits Coast; But It's "Contractitis"

Signing new contracts in Hollywood has assumed the proportions of an epidemic. That day is considered lost when some company does not step forward with the announcement that a star or director has been corraled for a long term of service.

Clarence Badger, now directing Pebe Daniels in "Senorita," is one of the latest to affix her signature to a new contract. Badger is responsible for a number of Paramount box office hits, notably, "It," starring Clara Bow, and "The Campus Flirt," in which Bebe was the big noise.

Roach Wins In Suit Over Story

Hal Roach, comedy producer, was successful in his defense in the United States District Court in relation to the claims of Vingie E. Rowe-Lawton, who alleged that the producer had appropriated some of her stories for featuring the famous stallion, Rex.

Judge William P. James denied her claim for damages amounting to $20,000 and an accounting of the profits of two feature productions, "The King of Wild Horses" and "Black Cyclone."

"The Tender Hour" Nears Finish; To Be Ready For June Release

time. According to photographic sequence this occurs after Marcia has learned that her lover is still alive and resultant in her having barred her Duke husband from the bridal chamber.

"Fitzmaurice's policy of not doing things in halves is well in evidence in "The Tender Hour." That this policy during the producing of "The Tender Hour" met with McCormick's hearty approval was daily witnessed by Fitzmaurice's tendency to be superlative in lavishness.

At a debauchery staged by the husband in an attempt to arouse his wife's interest by jealousy, twenty professional dancers are used. They prance about a table laden with delicacies and then disport themselves among middle-aged men who are the guests for the occasion.

Although the ungovernable traits of the rogue as depicted by Fitzmaurice through Montagu Love the decidedly apparent, yet there is nothing about the general atmosphere of the picture which could be considered obnoxiously suggestive. As a matter of fact the theme from the start centers its interest in Marcia and Wally, while the Duke furnishes the entanglement for the audience to solve as the picture progresses.

Billie Dove avails herself of the opportunity to wear many gowns ranging from a bridal train to a sweep of black velvet and then the sheen of closely wrapped passamentrie as an Egyptian queen in a pageant. Miss Dove is unquestionably at her loveliest in "The Tender Hour." A better theme could not have been selected as a sequel to her actually starring in First National Pictures.

As the huge secretary to the Duke, Constantine Romanoff has a small but important role. His heavy frame draped with a black robe in the center of a luxurious home adds considerably to the atmosphere.

Contributing to the angle presented by Romanoff are T. Roy Barnes, George Kotsonaros and Charles A. Post as three American roughnecks in the Latin quarter of Paris. Through befriending Wally in a cafe they are worked into an important part in the screen story, eventually uniting Marcia and Wally by thwarting the Duke and saving Marcia from suicide.

Alec B. Francis as Chinilly has one of his characteristic fatherly roles. As the godfather to Marcia and a keen student of human nature he is responsible for many sequences with considerable heart interest in "The Tender Hour."

Wampas Have Unique Method For Insurance

The only fraternal organization in the world to possess group insurance is the Wampas, we were told by Ray Coffin, president of the Western publicists, following their meeting this week.

According to Coffin, the policy automatically insures each member for $1,000, that sum being added to the original policy with each year of membership.

The Wampas has transferred its meeting place from the Writers' Club to the two million dollar Elks' Home in Hollywood.

Duncans Working

The Duncan sisters have started production on the screen version of "Topsy and Eva," in which they scored so tremendously upon the stage. The company is now on location at Lake Tahoe getting "exteriors." Del Lord is the director and the supervision will be under John Considine, Jr., head of featured productions.

Tough Luck, Indeed

Lupe Velez, Mexican dancer, is looking for a guardian. According to the 17-year-old dancer, she has been offered a starring contract with Hal Roach but cannot accept as she is a minor.

Assigned to Leads

Sally O'Neill and Lawrence Gray have been assigned the leads in "The Callahans and the Kellys" by M-G-M. George Hill will direct.

Sills to Lecture

Milton Sills, First National star, is to give a lecture on motion picture acting before the Harvard student body on April 26, according to an announcement on the coast. Jesse Lasky, Cecil B. De Mille and William Fox have also been invited to say their say before the undergrads on the secret of film making.

Miss Hill Cast

Kathryn Hill has been selected for the leading feminine role in Adolphe Menjou's forthcoming production, "The Headwaiter," for Paramount. Miss Hill has previously appeared in a few other Famous Player-Lasky pictures. Harry D'Arrast, a newcomer in the directorial field, will be in charge of "The Headwaiter."

Cohn in East

Harry Cohn, president of Columbia Pictures, is now in the East looking over the spring crop of screen stories. During his absence his brother, Jack, will be in charge of the Hollywood production activities.

Wurtzel Goin East For Fox Meeting

"Bachelor" Soon To Be Started

The screen adaptation of "The Small Bachelor" is about ready and Director William Seiter is planning on starting production shortly, according to an announcement from Universal City. The leading role will be played by Andre Beranger, who heretofore has specialized mainly in characterizations. Barbara Kent plays the feminine lead, with Otis Harlan, Carmelita Geraghty, Tom Dugan and Vera Lewis bring up the remainder of the cast.

Miss Davies Starts

Marion Davies has started production on her latest picture for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, "Quality Street." Conrad Nagel has the leading male role and Sydney Franklin is directing.

Miss Davies portrays the same role on the screen that Maude Adams so successfully delineated on the stage.

Production on the "Ten Modern Commandments," Esther Ralston's next starring picture for Paramount, will probably get under way shortly. Dorothy Arzner is to direct.

Interesting? Why, you've seen only the half of me—I'm in Sam Rork's new picture, "His Son," with Lewis Stone, Priscilla Bonner, Lilyan Tashman, Ann Rork, E. J. Ratcliffe, Robert Agnew and others—John Dillon is the director. From the original inscription above.

May Robson Starts Picture Of Her Famous Stage Masterpiece

"THE Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," the famous stage play in which May Robson starred for many years, goes into production for the screen at the Metropolitan studios this week. Miss Robson will play the same role in the picture that she did behind the footlights.

An excellent cast of well-known screen players have been assigned the other important characterizations. Harrison Ford and Phyllis Haver will take care of the love theme with Robert Edeson and Franklyn Pangborn also cast for strong parts.

Pangborn is one of the new comedy type to suddenly blossom forth upon the screen and "click" with a vengeance. His fine work in "Getting Gertie's Garter" with Marie Prevost established him as a front rank comedian.

Erle Kenton has been signed to direct the forthcoming Metropolitan production.

She Wins Role

Florence Turner, one of the first screen stars to scale the heights in the old days, has been signed for a featured role in "The Chinese Parrot," Universal production. Miss Turner attained fame as the Vitagraph girl.

Laura LaPlante's next starring vehicle for Universal will be "Thanks for the Buggy Ride." Wesley Ruggles will direct the production, judging from present reports.

Jack Mulhall With Dorothy Mackaill Again

Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall, who struck such a popular chord as a screen team in "Subway Sadie" and "Just Another Blonde," will be co-featured in four pictures during the coming year aside from their individual appearances, according to John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production for First National.

Two of these four productions will be "The Road to Romance," to be produced by Charles R. Rogers and "Lady Be Good," which Al Rockett will produce.

"All Aboard" O. K.

An amicable settlement has been reached between the Fox Company and C. C. Burr, producer of Johnny Hines comedies relative to the title of the latest Hines release, "All Aboard." Shortly after the Hines company started production on "All Aboard" it was discovered that Fox had released a two-reeler under the same title some time ago. By mutual agreement between the companies involved it was decided to release the Hines picture under its original title of "All Aboard."

Langdon's Next To Lack a Lady

Harry Langdon's next picture will be a comedy without the usual corps of gay men and—without a leading lady. He will direct. Other of his plans are announced on the Personality Page of this number.

McCormick Is Pleased About the Big Merger

On the bulletin board at the Burbank Studios of First National was fastened this week a notice signed by John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production, and M. C. Levee, executive, commenting on the merger of First National with the Stanley and West Coast chain and stating that as a result, First National now has "the greatest array of show-windows of any production company in the business."

That the amalgamation was in progress for a long time prior to its culmination was revealed in a paragraph stating, "This amalgamation has been anticipated for the last two years and its actual realization is a source of great satisfaction because it all points to a greater and better First National."

Spanish Actor Again Is With Miss Talmadge

Norma Talmadge is using the same leading man in the second consecutive production. Gilbert Roland, young Spanish actor, who appeared opposite her in "Camille," is also playing the male lead in her current production for United Artists, "The Dove."

Noah Beery, Eddie Broden, Harry Myers and Evelyn Selbie also have prominent roles in the Talmadge picture, which is being directed by Roland West.

Cutting "Ritzy"

Richard Rosson is now engaged in cutting "Ritzy," Betty Bronson's newest picture for Paramount. Miss Bronson is supported by James Hall, Joan Standish and William Austin.

She's Free Lance

Alma Rubens' first part as a free-lance actress will be in "Two Arabian Knights," Caddo Production to be released by United Artists. Lewis Milestone is the director.

Adapts Desert Tale

John Stone is adapting Zane Grey's "Drums of the Desert" for Lasky.

Visiting New York

Jewel Spencer, author of "The Flagmaker," is now in New York.

Four Productions Ending at Warners

Four productions are nearing completion on the Warner Bros. lot, "A Million Bid," starring Dolores Costello; "Matinee Ladies," starring May McAvoy; "The Brute," starring Monte Blue, and "Tracked by Police," starring Rin-Tin-Tin.

Irene Rich has just started in "The Climbers," which Paul Stein is directing at the same studio.

Clara Dances

Clara Bow gets an opportunity to display her ability as a dancer in her new Paramount picture, "Rough House Rosie."

Must See This One

Colleen Moore is still engaged in making "Naughty But Nice," her current starring picture for First National, directed by Milard Webb and produced by John McCormick. Supporting Colleen are, Donald Reed, Claude Gillingwater, Hallam Cooley, Kathryn McGuire, Edythe Chapman and Clarissa Selwynne.

He's a Veteran

Pola Negri has had the same cameraman with her for her last seven consecutive pictures. Bert Glennon is the cameraman in mind. In the current Negri vehicle, "The Woman on Trial," he is again on the job. Glennon was also responsible for "Hotel Imperial" and "Barbed Wire."

Coffee to Write

Lenore Coffee, De Mille scenarist, has been assigned the task of writing the story for Leatrice Joy's next starring vehicle. Miss Coffee did the scenario on "The Night of Love," in which Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky are now scoring heavily at box offices throughout the country.

New War Comedy

Encouraged by the success of its war comedy, First National is going to essay another. This time, according to John McCormick, it is to be "Aeneas Americanus," by Williot White Springs. The first was "Bayonets," with Charlie Murray and George Sidney.

Plan New Picture

On her return from New York Bess Meredyth will start work on the screen adaptation of "The Rose of Monterey" for First National. It will mark George Fitzmaurice's second production under his new contract, his first being "The Tender Hour."

Has New Studio

Irving Chidnoff, New York photographer, has opened a new studio in one of the villas at the Garden of Alla.

To Interpret Story

"Cheri Bibi," a story by the Frenchman, Gaston Leroux, will be transferred to the screen by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

'Black Pirate' Goes Ashore At Weymouth

Weymouth, England, in whose harbor ships flying the skull and crossbones comprised no uncommon sight a few centuries ago, was the scene of another pirate visit a few days ago when Douglas Fairbanks in "The Black Pirate" was introduced to the town.

According to a dispatch received by United Artists Corporation, a pirate craft sailed into the bay and anchored. A crowd on the esplanade saw a pirate captain and his merry men transfer to their small boat and come ashore. Press photographers were on hand to photograph him and he was greeted by Mr. Heath of the Regent Theatre and Mrs. Heath, who drove him to the theatre, followed by a mob of interested citizens.

The Dorset Daily Echo describes the affair as quite one of the best film publicity stunts that has ever been worked in Weymouth.

'McFadden's Flats' Hit in Cleveland

Mr. McFadden and Mr. McTavish have captured the hearts of the American public, and their antics in "McFadden's Flats," the Asher, Small & Rogers comedy released by First National, are making exhibitors rich.

"McFadden's Flats" continues to click at the Cameo," wires First National Branch Manager G. L. Sears of Cleveland. "Finished with a gross on the third week of the engagement approximately $2,000 ahead of Harold Lloyd in 'The Kid Brother' for the same week of the run. Nothing can stop this one. Looks like it is good for six, possibly seven, weeks."

Keaton Named

Erle C. Kenton has been selected by General Manager William Sistrom of the DeMille-Metropolitan Studios to direct "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary" for Metropolitan.

Title Chosen For A-S-R Comedy

"Lost at the Front" is the definite title given to the Asher, Small & Rogers war comedy featuring Charlie Murray and George Sidney previously known as "Big Bertha." It was announced by Richard A. Rowland, production manager of First National. The production is scheduled for release in May as part of First National's "Big Eleven" group of Spring - Summer attractions.

Both Warner Studios Working At Capacity On 1927-28 Films

"Baby Face" For Colleen Moore

John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production for First National Pictures, announces the purchase of screen rights to Cosmo Hamilton's story, "Baby Face," which appeared in Hearst's Magazine recently.

It will be a vehicle for Colleen Moore, the First National star, and will be produced by McCormick.

Vidor's "Crowd"

King Vidor has written his own story, "The Crowd," for M-G-M, which he is now directing with Eleanor Boardman and James Murray in the featured roles.

Al Lewin, who scenarized "Blarney," "The Little Journey," and others, is working on a Cosmopolitan M-G-M story for Marion Davies.

Peak of Production Activity Reached With All Available Space Utilized; Extra Space Necessary For Units

THE peak of production activity has been reached at the Warner Bros.' West Coast Studios where every available foot of space is now being utilized for the purpose of bringing this year's schedule of Twenty-Six Winners to completion. The thirteen-acre Warner lot is working at absolute capacity and in addition it has been found necessary to draft into use the entire facilities of the Vitagraph Studio.

Korda Production Ready For Work

"The Stolen Bride," an original story by Carey Wilson, is scheduled to go into production by First National immediately with Alexander Korda directing. Mary Astor, Lloyd Hughes and Lucien Prival are in the cast to date. Wilson is also writing the continuity.

Camera work began a few days ago on Irene Rich's picture, "The Climbers." Paul L. Stein is directing the script adapted by Tom Gibson from Clyde Fitch's story. Forrest Stanley is playing in support of Miss Rich, with Florella Fairbanks, Anders Randolph, Clyde Cook, Dot Farley, Myrna Loy, Hector Sarno and Joseph Striker in the cast.

"The Brute" company is now shooting some of its most important sequences comprising interior scenes in which hundreds of extras are employed. This story by W. Douglas Newton is serving as Monte Blue's next vehicle as a Warner star. Irving Cummings is behind the megaphone while Leila Hyams, Clyde Cook, Carrol Nye and Paul Nicholson are playing in support of the star.

Ray Enright, director of "Tracked by the Police," starring Rin-Tin-Tin, will soon bring his company back from location at Lag Dam, Arizona. He will immediately begin using several large interiors now being constructed at the studio. This Rin-Tin-Tin vehicle promises to be one of the most unusual stories yet chosen for the canine star. A fine cast of featured players includes Jason Robards, Virginia Browne Faire, Tom Santschi, Dave Morris, Wilfred North and Theodore Lorch. Nanette is also in the cast.

The studio will continue to steam ahead at top speed.

Nick Stuart and Dorothy Phillips in a scene in "Cradle Snatchers" for Fox. Louise Fazenda has the lead.

Rowland Buys New Coffee Story

Richard A. Rowland, general and production manager of First National Pictures, announces the purchase of an original story by Lenore Coffee, entitled "Lonesome Ladies."

According to present plans, the picture will go into production at an early date with Lewis Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson in the featured roles.

It will be one of First National's early summer releases.

Cast Completed For T. McCoy's M-G-M Film

With the addition of five more names, the cast of Tim McCoy's third historical Western drama for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is now complete.

Fred Warren, well-known character actor, has been given the role of Kit Carson, famous American scout. Lillian Leighton has been cast in the role of the fat Spanish duenna, chaperone to Dorothy Sebastian, who plays opposite McCoy.

Edwin Terry plays the character of Gen. Kearny. Sam Appel has the role of Pio Pico. Charles Ramos has been added to the cast as Don Alvarado.

Frank Currier and Marc McDermott have important roles.

Marion Davies' "The Red Mill" Is Detroit Hit

Marion Davies' latest starring vehicle, "The Red Mill," broke the Sunday house record at its opening at the Madison, Detroit, on March 6, and will play an extended engagement at that house.

This film not only drew exceptional box office business as it commenced its Detroit run, but the comments of newspaper reviewers and theatre patrons were extremely enthusiastic.

The general verdict was that Miss Davies' work in this film was one of the high spots of her successful career.

Miss Ralston Starts

Production on "Ten Modern Commandments," Esther Ralston's latest starring vehicle for Paramount, started March 14.

John Barrymore and Marcelline Day in the United Artists picture, "The Beloved Rogue."

Some shots of Joan Crawford, Owen Moore (below) and Douglas Gilmore, right, in the M-G-M production, "The Taxi Dancer."

Warner Month Canadian Hit

Canadian exhibitors are receiving the Twenty-six Warner Winners with unparalleled enthusiasm, is the report of B. F. Lyon, Canadian division manager of Warner Bros. Pictures.

Following an intensive sales drive, a greater number of contracts have been secured in the Dominion than ever before.

The current program is meeting with a consistent success in all parts of Canada that would indicate a marked strengthening of Warner Brothers' position with both showmen and picturegoers.

Norma Talmadge's Splendid Support

Norma Talmadge, who has been making her first United Artists picture, "The Dove," under the direction of Roland West, will be supported by Olga Baklanova and Fritz Feld, both of the cast of Morris Gest's "The Miracle," which recently closed its Los Angeles run.

Olga Baklanova played the role of the Nun and Fritz Feld the role of the Piper. Their work in "The Dove" represents the first screen appearance of Mlle. Baklanova and M. Feld.

An important member of the Moscow Art Theatre Company, Mlle. Baklanova was an interpreter of "Carmencita" and "Lysistrata" in the Art Theatre's Musical Studio last winter.

Feld began under Max Reinhardt, German genius, who had Emil Jannings, Conrad Veidt and Werner Krauss in his stage company in Berlin.

Feld and Krauss alternated in the role of a Piper during the early weeks of the New York engagement of "The Miracle."

Pick Principals For Cast With Colleen Moore

Final selection of the principal members of the supporting cast of Colleen Moore's first film work of 1927 was announced by John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production for First National and producer of all the star's pictures.

The picture which is engaging Miss Moore's attention is "Naughty But Nice," which has been in production about a week. The supporting players include Donald Reed, Claude Gillingwater, Hallam Cooley, Kathryn McGuire, Edythe Chapman and Clarissa Selwynne.

"Naughty But Nice" was adapted by Carey Wilson from Lewis Allen Browne's stage play, "The Bigamist." Millard Webb is directing the production which has an exclusive girls' school as its background.

Tyler At Work

Tom Tyler, F. B. O.'s up and coming Western star, has returned from location with the "Cyclone of the Range" company, and is shooting interiors at the studio. In support of Tyler in his current opus are Frankie Darro, the child wonder, "Flash" the horse, and "Beans," the dog. Others in the cast include Elsie Tarron, Harry O'Connor and Dick Howard. Bob De Lacy is directing.

Pollard's Plans

Harry Pollard, "U" director, is rushing final "shots" on "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in order to start work on "Show Boat."

Haines' First Starring Film For Embassy

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer announces that "Slide, Kelly, Slide," a colorful photoplay of big league baseball, will have its New York premiere at the Embassy Theatre on Tuesday evening, March 22, where it will play an extended engagement as a two-a-day special.

"Slide, Kelly, Slide," is the initial starring vehicle of William Haines, who was made a star following his excellent work in such pictures as "Brown of Harvard," "A Little Journey" and "Tell It to the Marines," which is completing a long run engagement at the Embassy.

The cast of "Slide, Kelly, Slide," which was directed by Edward Sedgwick, includes some of the country's most famous professional baseball players. Bob Meusel and Tony Lazzeri, who will soon be disporting themselves up at the Yankee Stadium, "Irish" Meusel of the Brooklyn Dodgers and Perry O'Brien of the Philadelphia Athletics are some of the famous diamond athletes who appear in the new film, an adaptation by A. P. Younger of an original story by Director Sedgwick.

Jack Mower as "Shelby" in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the Universal super-production, nearing completion.

First National Announces the April Releases

First National presents an unusually strong line-up in its list of April releases, as announced by General and Production Manager Richard A. Rowland. This is part of the "Big Eleven" group.

To be released in April are "Camille," "Three Hours," "Long Pants," "Convoy," and "Somewhere in Sonora."

Norma Talmadge stars in "Camille," which is a modernized version of the famous Dumas piece. This is scheduled for release April 17.

"Three Hours" stars Corinne Griffith. Pre-released in New York it was accorded high praise by the critics. National release date is April 24.

"Long Pants" is the new Harry Langdon comedy. April 10 is the release date as now set.

"Convoy" is the navy special which Robert T. Kane completed recently. The production, which depicts the work of the war-time U. S. Navy, will be released the first week in April.

Also scheduled for release the first week in April is "Somewhere in Sonora," a Ken Maynard super-western.

Record "Set"

The largest indoor set ever built at First National's Burbank studios is now being used in George Fitzmaurice's production, "The Tender Hour." It covers almost the entire floor space of one of the four stages, and represents the exterior of the forbidding villa of a Russian Grand Duke. More than thirty full-sized trees were transplanted bodily for the scene.

Ride him, cowboy! Tim McCoy, star of M-G-M's new western series, shows a mustang how to buck.

General Exodus of Paramount Easterners For Work in West

THE POPULATION OF Hollywood will be considerably increased within the next fortnight due to the exodus from the Paramount Long Island studios of players, directors, cameramen, executives and writers, who have been transferred to the company's West Coast production center.

Among those scheduled for early departure are Walter Goss and Ivy Harris, graduates of the Paramount School, who heretofore have appeared only in eastern-made films. Mona Palma and Josephine Dunn, also of the school, will start westward at once. Philip Strange, a contract player, will leave on the same day.

Lawrence Hitt, art director, left Friday night, stopping en route at his home town, Indianapolis, from whence he will proceed to the Coast. His assistant, Van Nest Polglase, leaves Saturday.

Fred Fleck, casting director, and Julian Fleming of the art department started last Saturday.

Of the camera staff, three members are westward bound: Harry A. Fishbeck, who has photographed "The Sorrows of Satan" and "Cabaret"; Ed Cronjager, chief photographer for Richard Dix productions, and Alvin Wyckoff, Meighan's cinematographer.

Guyol Finishes M-G-M Film; Excellent Cast

Fred Guiol has completed the latest Hal Roach Star comedy, and one of the most interesting from a player viewpoint.

Viola Richard, newcomer to fame, just signed on a long term contract by Roach, Stan Laurel, Malcolm Waite, Charles Althoff and Oliver Hardy played the principal roles. Malcolm Waite arranged the comedy engagement between two feature roles, and Althoff was taken from vaudeville after thirteen years' constant appearance as "The Yankee Fiddler."

The location of the story is on and around a small harbor craft and the docks. The "true love of a sailor lad" is pictured with Stan Laurel as the sailor and Viola Richard as the girl. Hal Roach now is affiliated with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, who hereafter will release his comedies.

"Bob" Ritchie's Story

Ralph Ince will portray the leading role in "Not For Publication," an F. B. O. production, based on the story "The Temple of the Giants," by Robert Wells Ritchie. Jola Mendez is the only girl in the cast. Mr. Ince will also wield the megaphone.

Robert G. Vignola, director of Gilda Gray's "Cabaret," left Friday for Albany, and after three days with relatives there, will continue his journey to California. Another immediate departure is that of Lynn Shores, assistant director. J. M. Jerauld and William H. Wright of the Long Island studio publicity department will leave for the West Coast within the week.

"The Love
Sunya"

Sam Sax Denies Gotham's Farce Goes Elsewhere

Sam Sax, producer of Gotham Productions and president of Lumas Film Corporation wires from the West Coast to deny that the George Randolph feature farce, "Quarantined Rivals" will be sold or turned over to one of the big releasing companies for distribution.

"While it is quite true," Mr. Sax states, "that I have had several very flattering offers for this production from various large producing and distributing interests, and it is also true that the production was shown to executives of these organizations before the pictures was shipped East, 'Quarantined Rivals' will be distributed as contracted for, to all holding Gotham distributing franchises."

Special Tripod Introduced At M-G-M Studio

An innovation in motion picture photography has been introduced on the lot at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios where Chester M. Franklin is filming his mystery drama, "The Thirteenth Hour."

The invention is a motion picture tripod, built on the "ball and socket" principle, that permits the camera to follow an object, no matter how rapidly or in what direction it is moving.

It is expected that the new device will greatly facilitate the cutting of productions, inasmuch as it will enable the cameraman to follow a person from one scene to another without having to make two separate shots.

Plays Simon Legree

George Siegmund plays "Simon Legree" in Universal's "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

"Cap'n Cavalier" Fairbanks' Next

Douglas Fairbanks' next picture, "Captain Cavalier," will be directed by F. Richard Jones, erstwhile director-general of Hal Roach Productions. It is possible that after that picture Jones will make Mary Pickford's next. Then, too, United Artists have an option on his services following completion of the Fairbanks' picture. This option provides that United Artists may commission Jones to do five regular United Artists feature films if it so wishes. Fairbanks and Jones are now in story conference. Production work will start as soon as they complete the script.

"Don Juan" Proves Bridgeport Draw

A run that well merits the designation of "record" and one that is probably among the most unique in the history of film exhibition has been reported to Sam E. Morris, general manager of distribution of Warner Brothers Pictures, by Alfred Gottesman, president of the Connecticut Cities Entertainment Corporation.

A hundred thousand people in a city of a hundred and fifty thousand population attended the Bridgeport, Connecticut, premier of John Barrymore's starring picture, "Don Juan," together with the first local exhibition of the Vitaphone.

This exceptional attendance was registered by the Cameo Theatre during a five weeks run.

Star Cast For Gotham Drama

"Mountains of Manhattan," Gotham's drama of the New York sky line, has been finished as far as production work in California is concerned.

The negative has been shipped East, and the finishing touches will be put on the picture in New York.

The cast includes Dorothy Devore, Charles Delaney, Kate Price, James P. Hogan (who is also the director), Bobby Gordon, George Chesebro, Clarence H. Wilson and Robert E. Homans.

"Mountains of Manhattan" is the ninth of a series of twelve Gotham productions released by Lumas Film Corporation.

Warners Issue a Practical Press Sheet on "Don Juan"

A PRESS BOOK that combines beauty, ingenuity and practicability is offered by Warner Brothers on their extended run production, "Don Juan," starring John Barrymore.

The book is the work of George Carlin and Harry Lee of the Warner Brothers' Advertising Department. Within its twelve newspaper-size pages attractively printed in two colors on glazed stock, showmen will find everything needed to sell the picture to the public in a big way.

The sheet is replete with news material of every conceivable sort together with special features such as cartoons and pen and ink drawings to supplement the regular line of cuts. Striking ads allowing a wide selection are there covering the picture's many worthwhile sales angles.

Exploitation tried and proved in big city campaigns is also fully described and illustrated.

Special accessories such as the "Don Juan" souvenir booklet for lobby sales as well as the best portraits and display stills are offered for exhibitor approval within the covers of this press-sheet. The paper is artistic in conception and varied in appeal. Three twenty-four sheets are among the assortment of posters that are sure to meet the needs of theatres of every type.

Thomson Film

Fred Thomson is making the final scenes of "Silver Comes Through," a story which practically stars the equine wonder. The supporting cast includes Edna Murphy, Harry Woods, William Courtright and Mathilde Brundage.

McGowan Returns

"The City of Shadows" company, and P. P. McGowan, director, returned this week to the F. B. O. Studio from a two week location trip to the Mojave Desert.

Colo. Governor Impressed By "Marines" Epic

Governor Adams of Colorado was the guest of honor at the Victory Theatre, Denver, at the premiere of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's leatherneck epic, "Tell It to the Marines," now in its fourth capacity month at the Embassy, New York, and recording a similar sensational success at box offices throughout the entire country.

The Governor's reaction was indicated in a letter received by that company from his secretary. It reads in part as follows:

"Governor Adams desires me to extend to you his sincere appreciation of the courtesy extended to him in giving him an opportunity of witnessing the opening performance of 'Tell It to the Marines.' He was very much impressed with the picture and enjoyed it very much."

Mary and Doug At Work Soon

Mary and Doug will soon be at work again. "Captain Cavalier" the next Douglas Fairbanks picture, has for background the interesting story of the founding of California.

It is understood that camera work will begin very soon at the United Artists Studio in Hollywood, which is really the remodelled and enlarged Pickford-Fairbanks Studio.

As for "America's Sweetheart," the tentative title of her picture is "The Shop Girl," the story in all probability to be written for Mary by Kathleen Norris and said to be something of a departure from previous Pickford roles.

Rin-Tin-Tin and Nanette, his mate, in a new pose, even for these remarkable dogs. They are now making "Tracked by the Police" for Warner Bros.

Frazer Star of 'Craig Kennedy' In Artclass List

Artclass Pictures announces it has signed Robert Frazer to portray the character of Craig Kennedy in a forthcoming series of twelve two-reelers, to be released one a month commencing Aug. 1, 1927. Dallas M. Fitzgerald will be in charge of production.

The Adventures of Craig Kennedy appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine for a great many years. The books, consisting of a series of six volumes, received a circulation of millions.

At present, "The Adventures of Craig Kennedy" are being published in a great number of newspapers throughout the country in cartoon form.

Artclass expects, because of this great reader interest, this series will prove extremely popular.

Final Shots

J. Leo Meehan is shooting final sequences on "Naughty Nannette," Viola Dana's current starring vehicle for F. B. O. In support of Miss Dana are Ed Brownell, Patricia Palmer, Helen Foster, Joe Young, Sidney de Grey, Alphonse Martel, Mary Gordon and Barbara Clayton.

Next week comes the Twentieth Anniversary number. It's a stupendous book of facts. Get your copy.

College Men In Motion Pictures

Many college men are taking up motion picture work as a career, and several have already become quite noted in the cinema art.

Johnny Walker, a graduate of Fordham University, and born in New York City, plays "Stephen Decatur" in the Paramount historical film, "Old Ironsides," now at the Rivoli Theatre for an extended run.

All lovers of American history will recall the heroic part played by Decatur in the first great American naval victory, and the Fordham lad does very well with the role.

Charles Farrell, as the romantic sailor in this picture, attended Boston University for two years, where he participated in various athletics. Through taking a course in business administration he became interested in motion pictures, and has apparently made good. He is also seen in the "Rough Riders" at the George M. Cohan Theatre.

Reginald Denny, the Universal star, is a graduate of Oxford.

Olive Borden as "The Joy Girl" for Fox.

Title Changed

The title of the sixth Bob Custer production for F. B. O. has been changed from "Crashing Hoofs" to "The Fighting Hombre."

Take me out to the ball game. William Haines and Sally O'Neil in "Slide, Kelly, Slide," for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

A. M. Matinees of "Better 'Ole" In San Antonio

A morning matinee was necessary when Syd Chaplin in "The Better 'Ole" played the Aztec Theatre, San Antonio, Texas, and 6,000 children were turned away, according to a telegram from William Epstein, manager of the house. Mr. Epstein sent the following telegram to Sam E. Morris:

"'Better 'Ole' proved to be the most popular attraction ever played in San Antonio. Story action and synchronized score delighted patrons who jammed our doors for seven days. Was forced to give morning matinee for school children only, which drew largest attendance in history of city. Turned away more than six thousand youngsters on this one show."

Joe Rock Picks Comedy Drama; In Sterling List

"She's My Baby," a swift comedy-drama centering about night-life in New York, will be the next offering from Sterling Pictures Corporation, according to advices from Henry Ginsberg, president of this company.

"She's My Baby" is an original screen-story and will go into production under the supervision of Joe Rock, now affiliated with Sterling as general production chief, when "In the First Degree" is complete.

SHORT TALKS ON SHORT FEATURES

Renewals

A magazine boasts of the number of subscribers who renew their subscriptions when they expire. "Renewals" in large quantities furnish the magazine one of its big arguments in selling space to advertisers.

"Renewals" of contracts are a good test of any business, for they indicate satisfied customers, the best proof of a product of merit backed up by service.

Educational Pictures are showing today in practically every theatre now operating that played them seven years ago, when we began national distribution. They have played these theatres every one of these seven seasons. And to this number have been added every year a large number of other theatre accounts that have in turn become "renewals." Today they number 13,000, an impressive total.

This is the greatest testimonial exhibitors could give to any company, and we are justly proud of it. We are proud also of the fact that we can look forward to the same sort of "renewals" when our splendid program of short features for 1927-1928 is announced soon.

"The Crowd" To Be Vidor's New M-G-M Picture

"The Crowd" has been selected as the definite title for King Vidor's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer special, an original story of big city life, previously untitled, by the director of "The Big Parade."

Vidor has been working on this production for almost two months, with Eleanor Boardman in the feminine lead and James Murray, a new discovery of the director's, playing opposite her. Others in the cast are Dorothy Sebastian, Bert Roach, Lucy Beaumont and Daniel Tomlinson.

"The Crowd," said to be "a big parade of peacetime," is concerned with the ups and downs of a young married couple in New York City.

Bill Cody Star of Arizona Whirlwind

Billy Cody brings another thrilling Western to the Pathe feature program in "The Arizona Whirlwind," which is announced for release on March 27.

"The Arizona Whirlwind" is said to abound in chases, thrills and perilous stunts, and in addition to his hard riding and head-long falls, the star is called upon for some he-man fistic encounters in no less than three rough-and-ready fights.

Cody also has full opportunity to work with a lariat, which makes him a buddy of another Pathe star, Will Rogers, would travel and poet lariat."

Producing Unit For Leatrice Joy

The "production" four-some that produced "Nobody's Widow" was so successful that Cecil B. DeMille has ordered it kept intact for "Vanity," which is now being filmed for P. D. C. release.

Leatrice Joy, star of both productions, is once more working before cameras handled by Arthur Miller, while Donald Crisp is directing her from a script prepared by Douglas Z. Doty.

In addition, Charles Ray, who played opposite the attractive star in "Nobody's Widow," is once more featured in support of Miss Joy in "Vanity."

Alan Hale also plays a prominent role in "Vanity," which will mark the return of Miss Joy to the type of dramatic portrayal in which she made her first big success under Cecil B. DeMille's direction in "Manlaughter" and "The Ten Commandments."

Syd Chaplin in "The Missing Link" for Warner Bros., with the missing link "Akka," the marvelous actor.

Warner Sales Force Holding "Sam E. Morris Month" In May

MAY has been designated as Sam E. Morris Month by the sales department of Warner Brothers Pictures as a special tribute to the company's general manager of distribution.

From the home office to the furthest branch the spirit of competition is now keen to prove concretely the respect, loyalty and admiration felt for Mr. Morris by his staff.

This year will mark the second annual occasion of Sam E. Morris Month. It was inaugurated for the first time in 1926 and the enthusiasm put behind the idea was responsible for the writing of more business on the books of the Warner Brothers than for any period of equal duration in the history of the company.

This year the sales department hopes for new records.

Public Helps Laemmle Decide Release of "Les Miserables"

ANOTHER strictly European idea has been rejected for American moving pictures.

Six months ago Carl Laemmle, under the urge of a very strong picture in eighteen reels, felt very much tempted to release it in this country in two episodes of nine reels each.

The idea was to show these on succeeding weeks in theatres with a weekly change of bill and split an entire week with them where a theatre ran two shows a week.

This picture was "Les Miserables," the Victor Hugo classic made by Films de France.

Mr. Laemmle showed it twice in this country, once at the Rialto Theatre in Washington before a distinguished audience of literary, diplomatic and society circles, and one in Carnegie Hall, New York.

These showings were in eighteen reels. Following them, Mr. Laemmle frankly placed his problem before various sources from which critical opinion in this country might best be expected.

Among others he asked the moving picture critics and his Saturday Evening Post correspondents which course, in their opinion, he should pursue—that is, show the picture in its entirety, eighteen reels; show it in two parts; or cut it down to one big compact picture of ten or twelve reels.

At first the two-part proposition was voted so strongly that Mr. Laemmle was on the point of ordering the print cut that way and a campaign looking toward this distribution of the picture started. But later advisors won the day. He reconsidered at the last moment. The picture has been cut to eleven reels and Carl Laemmle now announces that it will be distributed to theatres next season as a single super-special.

"Jenny Lind" Film

Dorothy Farnum is preparing "Jenny Lind" for M-G-M. No star has as yet been named.

Cody-Pringle Paired; M-G-M Combination

A new screen comedy team will be introduced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer when Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle are paired in an original farce comedy, "His Brother from Brazil," according to announcement last week by Harry Rapf.

This picture, written by F. Hugh Herbert and Florence Ryerson of the M-G-M scenario department, will be directed by Robert Z. Leonard.

The announcement adds that Cody and Miss Pringle will play together in a number of comedies and comedy dramas to be produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer during the coming season.

Big Bookings On Columbia Films

Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures, has received a wire from A. W. Bowman, manager of the Columbia exchange in Detroit, that Keith's Uptown has booked three of Columbia's "Big 24" for the month of March.

These productions are "Wandering Girls," "Stolen Pleasures" and "The Better Way." The Uptown is the newest first-run house built by Keith in Detroit.

"Stolen Pleasures" also goes into the America, a first-run house in Denver.

"Sweet Rosie O'Grady," one of Columbia's outstanding money getters, will play the Ambassador in St. Louis during the week of March 12. This is a Skouras Brothers house, considered most important.

M-G-M announces "Anna Karenina," by Leo Tolstoy, which Lorna Moon is adapting.

Phyllis Haver's New Contract

With the signing of Phyllis Haver to a new long-term contract, a busy fountain pen and dotted line session was brought to a close at the Metropolitan Studio this week.

Miss Haver is the fourth personality to sign a new agreement with Metropolitan Pictures within the past fortnight. Marie Prevost, Franklin Pangborn, Metropolitan's newest comedy "Find," and E. Mason Hopper, the director of "Up in Mabel's Room" and "Getting Gertie's Garter" complete the quartet.

With the exception of Marie Prevost and Gloria Swanson, no graduates of the Sennett Bathing girl school have achieved such an enviable position in the film firmament as has Phyllis Haver.

Rogers Closes Contracts For Gotham Films

Although no complete announcement has yet been made as to the complete Gotham production line-up for the coming season, Budd Rogers, vice-president of Lumas Film Corporation, announces that several very important distribution contracts have been closed for 1927-28.

During the past week, representatives of the most important regional distributors have been in conference at the Lumas offices and have signed on the dotted line for another year of Gotham productions.

Sam Sax is now finishing production work on the last of this year's product and will come East for a short period to prepare the announcement of his future plans.

Younger's Story .. For Wm. Haines

A. P. Younger, who last year scenarized "Brown of Harvard" and "The Taxi Dancer," and Marion Davies' "Tillie the Toiler," is preparing "Twelve Miles Out" as a starring vehicle for John Gilbert.

Younger's original screen play, "Slide, Kelly, Slide," was recently finished by Edward Sedgwick with William Haines in the leading role.

After having directed several Charles R. Rogers productions for First National, starring Ken Maynard, wherein horses play a prominent part, Albert Rogell is now directing a picture, not of the western variety, but with more horses than usual, called "The Sunset Derby," a race track story featuring Mary Astor and William Collier, Jr.

"Red Grange" in "Motor Maniac"

Red Grange the "Gallop-Ghost," "Wheaten Iceman," and one of the most sensational cinema finds in years, has been selected by President Joseph P. Kennedy, of F. B. O., to star in "The Motor Maniac." Sam Wood is directing Grange in "The Motor Maniac," a racing story, with football in the discard for the time being.

Byron Morgan has turned out a "thriller" in this one.

Jobyna Ralston, for five years leading lady for Harold Lloyd, will play Mr. Grange's leading lady. Walter Hiers will furnish the comedy relief and Ben Hendricks the menace.

What "The Big Parade" Started In

This scene was taken in the Rex Ingram Cine Studios in Nice by an English company during the Metro-Goldwyn production of "The Garden of Allah." At the time this picture was being taken, "The Big Parade" was showing in Nice. This picture is to be called "Roses of Picardy," with Maurice Elvey directing.

Weil To Organize Exploitation Department For "U" Theatres

UNIVERSAL CHAIN THEATRES CORPORATION has engaged Joe Weil, formerly Exploitation Manager of Universal Pictures Corporation, to organize and to operate an exploitation and presentation program for their two hundred and sixty theatres. This move has been under discussion for sometime.

The success of such departments as conducted by other chains has been so productive of unity of action, efficiency and economy of management as to leave no doubt of its practicability.

The job of creating such a department required a man of exceptional experience and ability. Because of his success in putting over Universal pictures, both in New York at the Colony, Cohan and Central theatres, and through his efficiency in running the Exploitation Department throughout the country, the unanimous choice of the Universal Chain Theatre officials fell upon Mr. Weil.

Universal Chain Theatre officials will give Mr. Weil an absolutely free hand in the creation and direction of the new department. He will create and direct this department in accordance with his own ideas of the kind of presentations required.

A uniform publicity, advertising and exploitation service for all the theatres will be organized and centered in New York, with the proper machinery for extending it all branches of the chain. A uniform program will be published in New York for all the houses. A magazine will be started for their benefit and other plans with Mr. Weil will formulate will be put into effect as rapidly as possible.

Nat Rothstein, whom Universal sent last year to the coast to accomplish certain exploitation features in its production studios, has completed this assignment there, and will arrive in New York shortly to put into execution exploitation plans now being formulated for Universal Pictures.

These plans particularly concern Universal's biggest pictures, such as "Show Boat," "The Cat and the Canary," "The Big Gun," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Alias the Deacon," "The American Eagle," "The Chinese Parrot," "The Small Bachelor," "Cheating Cheaters," "Back to God's Country," "We Americans" and the Denny pictures. In addition, Rothstein will supervise the Universal's Exploitation Department.

Six Paramount Films Current On the Rialto

The premiere of "The Rough Riders" at the George M. Cohan Theatre last Tuesday evening gave Broadway six Paramount attractions running concurrently.

Three of these are road show productions: "Beau Geste," the Herbert Brenon special of the French Foreign Legion, now in its thirtieth week at the Criterion Theatre; "Old Ironsides," epic of America's early naval warfare, now in its fifteenth week at the Rivoli; and "The Rough Riders."

Of the remaining three, the following two are extended run specials; "Metropolis," the Ufa-Paramount spectacle, now in its second week at the Rialto, Paramount's long-run house; and "Stark Love," Karl Brown's realistic film of mountaineer life, held over for its third week at the Cameo.

Playing the Paramount this week is Bebe Daniels' newest vehicle, "A Kiss in a Taxi," a broad comedy with Paris as its locale.

'The Tender Hour' Has All-Star Cast

Lionel Belmore, Frank Elliott and Lon Poff have been signed for supporting roles in "The Tender Hour," the George Fitzmaurice production now being filmed.

The complete cast includes Billie Dove and Ben Lyon, in the featured roles; Alec B. Francis, Montagu Love, T. Roy Barnes, Yola d'Avril, Charles A. Post, George Kotsonaros, Constantine Romanoff and Laska Winter. The picture is based on an original screen story by Carey Wilson.

Elinor King Has F. B. O. Contract

Goldie Flynn was a chorus girl in Fred Stone's show, "Criss Cross," a week ago. Today Elinor King (formerly Goldie Flynn) is the lucky owner of a five-year contract, and leaves for Hollywood the end of this month to play leads in feature productions.

Joseph P. Kennedy, president of F. B. O., attended a performance of "Criss Cross" recently, saw Goldie and thought she was a fine screen bet. The next day a screen test was taken and Goldie passed her examinations 100 per cent.

Tom Meighan saw her and pronounced her "the best bet" he has seen in the last ten years. Goldie did not like her name, so F. B. O. obligingly changed it to Elinor King. Her mother, wardrobe mistress for "Criss Cross," goes to Hollywood with Elinor.

Fox Films Production Costs For Next Season, $15,000,000

APRIL ushers in at the Fox Studios the beginning of a twelve-month's production program that calls for an expenditure of fifteen million dollars for next season's pictures.

With its entire schedule for 1926-27 completed and with more than five million dollars worth of completed motion picture plays for next September now in its vaults, Fox approaches the new season with a gigantic fortune invested in finished films.

The statement of the activities of the studios, both in Hollywood, Fox Hills and New York was issued yesterday from the offices of Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president with an outline of production plans.

New pictures for the coming year, now completed, include eight specials, representing an actual cost of five million dollars. "Sunrise," directed by F. W. Murnau; "7th Heaven" directed by Frank Borzage, and "Carmen" directed by Raoul Walsh, are included in this list.

The studios in New York will produce twelve pictures during the coming year. Allan Dwan and other well-known directors will direct.

Victor Schertzinger has just been signed by Vice-President Sheehan to a long term contract and will leave shortly for New York to direct the first production for the Fox "Movietone," the new talking pictures. Schertzinger's fame as a musician as well as his directorial genius was responsible for his selection for this important post.

Additional stages will be built at once on the Fox Hills properties at Westwood where two stages will be placed near the Pico Boulevard frontage and an administration building erected there.

Mr. Sheehan will go to Europe in June and while there will spend four weeks in the Fox Studios in Berlin. These studios are under the management of Carl Freund, noted cameraman, who recorded "Variety," and now in charge of Fox European production. Plans for the new season will be discussed by Mr. Sheehan with Freund while there.

Jack Ford, Fox director is now in Germany shooting scenes for a special, which will be made in Bavaria and in the Hollywood studios. He is being aided in Germany by Carl Freund and will spend two months there.

Bonner Sisters' Twin Roles In Columbia Film

For the first time in their career on the screen, the Bonner sisters, Marjorie and Priscilla, will play in the same photoplay in the Columbia production, "Paying the Price."

An unusual angle about their portrayals is that they will also appear as sisters in a drama of life behind the scenes of the gilded palaces of a notorious resort city.

Priscilla Bonner was the first one in her family to embark on a screen career. She made her first hit in "Drusilla With a Million" and won country-wide popularity as Harry Langdon's leading lady. Encouraged by her sister's success, Marjorie followed her sister's footsteps.

Besides the Bonner sisters, Harry Cohn, vice-president in

Jack Cunningham Writing "Draws"

Jack Cunningham, who adapted and wrote the screen play of "The Covered Wagon," "The Three Musketeers," and other box-office "draws" has also been added to the list of writers.

He has just completed the screen play of "Captain Salvation," now being directed on location by John S. Robertson, who made Lillian Gish's new film, "Annie Laurie."

Chaney's "Unknown"

Waldemar Young, famous for such scenarios as "The Unholy Three," "The Blackbird," "The Road to Mandalay," "The Flaming Forest," and other M-G-M pictures has just completed the script of "The Unknown," which stars Lon Chaney under the able direction of Tod Browning.

Lya DePutti Is Co-Featured In "U" Production

Lya De Putti, famous Continental actress, has been engaged by Universal to play the leading feminine role in "He Knew Women," which the Laemmle organization soon will put into production as one of the outstanding pictures for next year.

Ivan Moskine is slated to play the leading male role in this picture, an adaptation of the Viennese musical comedy, "Polish Blood," one of the most popular stage pieces in Europe. It was written by Oscar Nedbal and Dr. Fritz Stein. The piece was produced in America by Morris Gest as "The Peasant Girl."

Edward Sloman is directing "Lea Lyon" for Universal, with Mary Philbin and Ivan Moskine featured.

M-G-M Scenarists Continue At Work

Dorothy Farnum, who last year scenarized "The Temptress," "Bardelys the Magnificent" and other M-G-M successes now is working on the adaptation of "Jenny Lind," scheduled as one of the biggest productions of the year.

Josephine Lovett, who wrote "Annie Laurie" for Lillian Gish, has just completed "The Bugle Call" in which Jackie Coogan is now playing the starring role.

Kyne Continues

Peter B. Kyne is to write more special historical Western stories for Tim McCoy, the M-G-M Western star.

charge of production for Columbia, selected a cast that includes Mary Carr, William Welsh, George Hackathorne, John Miljan, Eddie Phillips and William Eugene.

Harry Beaumont, director of "The Secret Studio," for Fox, discusses secrets with Olive Borden and Kenneth Harlan.

Hal Roach Signs Richard Currier As Chief Editor

Richard Currier, young film editor with the experience of a veteran, has been signed on a long term contract as film editor-in-chief at the Hal Roach studios, according to Warren Doane, general manager.

Currier has edited pictures there for the past year, and before that was associated with Universal and other companies. He has just completed the editing of "No Man's Law," the fourth Hal Roach feature production starring Rex, king of wild horses, with Barbara Kent, James Finlayson, Theodore Von Eltz and Oliver Hardy in the cast.

Mr. Roach, having affiliated with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, that company hereafter will release his comedies.

Larry Semon in War Fun Film

Larry Semon makes his latest star appearance in "Spuds," a feature fun-fest of wartime misadventures, which Pathe announces for release on April 10.

Semon's new vehicle is one ideally suited to the director-star. Larry makes one of the most comical doughboys who ever donned a nonfitting uniform and misunderstood a top-sergeant's stern commands.

"Spuds" is the story of a doughboy who peels potatoes for the American Army in France and it is reported from the West Coast studios that Larry actually peeled five bushels of potatoes before the camera to get the scenes required.

Dorothy Dwan enacts the leading feminine role of the French waitress in Paris.

"Winning Punch" Now Completed

"The Winning Punch," sixteenth and last two-reeler of the Universal Junior-Jewel series, "The Collegians," has just been completed under the direction of Nat Ross.

With George Lewis as the star and Dorothy Gulliver, Eddie Phillips, Churchill Ross and Hayden Stevenson supporting, the series of comedies based on college life, written by Carl Laemmle, Jr., is one of the best box office attractions of the year for short subjects.

Irving in Cast

Bill Irving is cast as villain in "Cash and Carry," the latest Educational-Christie Comedy featuring Neal Burns and Edna Marion. Irving has won new laurels as a droll comedian this season, and this new comedy offers greater opportunity for this versatile clown.

Stern Bros. Studios Manned By Reorganized, Expert Force

Sunny McKeen joined Stern Bros. March 17, a year ago.

New Plant, Acquired Since Disastrous Fire, Completely Fitted Out; Comedy Units Working on 1927-28 Products

RECENT two-reel comedies turned out by the Stern Film Corporation, at the new Stern Brothers studio, have caused Universal executives to become enthusiastic over the outlook for Stern Brothers Comedies for next season.

The Stern comedy plant, a new studio acquired after the disastrous fire of several months ago, and which has been completely fitted out at great expense, is manned by a reorganized and enlarged force of comedy experts.

Under the personal supervision of Julius and Abe Stern, the executive heads of the corporation, the studio is now finishing up the comedies listed for release for the 1926-1927 season and has launched into the release schedule for 1927-1928.

The 1927-1928 line-up of the Stern Brothers includes one Universal Junior Jewel series of 12 two-reelers, "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" series, adapted from the famous George McManus cartoons. Sid Saylor is Mr. Newlywed, Ethlyne Clair is Mrs. Newlywed and Sunny McKeen, the adorable baby, is Snookums.

The remainder of the Stern product for next year consists of four series of 13 two-reelers each, all being adaptations from popular newspaper comic strips. They are the Buster Brown comedies, the "Let George Do It" comedies, the first from the R. F. Outcault cartoons, and the second from a George McManus comic strip; and two new comic strip adaptations; "Mike and Ike, They Look Alike," from Rube Goldberg's popular comic strip, and "Keeping Up With the Joneses" from the Pop Moman newspaper comic.

The latest two Stern Brothers comedies to reach the Universal home office are "Kid George," a "Let George Do it" comedy, and a new "Mike and Ike" comedy, yet unnamed.

Leah Baird-Taylor Holmes In Gaiety's Short Comedies

LEAH BAIRD, one of the best loved stars of the silver screen is to again delight the hearts of movie lovers throughout the world in her appearance as feature player in the series of two reel domestic comedies now in production by Gaiety Pictures, Inc. Miss Baird will take parts similar to those played by Mrs. Sidney Drew in the famous and never-to-be-forgotten Drew Comedies, as a foil for the ready wit and natural humor of the star, Taylor Holmes.

Contracts were signed on the West Coast and as the remainder of the initial picture, production was started immediately. Before signing Miss Baird, Amedee J.

Van Beuren, president of Gaiety Pictures, Inc., chose this actress because of her wide experience in pictures, her exceptional ability as an actress and her sweet and attractive personality.

According to Roy McCardell, well-known humorist and author, who is writing continuities of all the stories, Miss Baird is the exact type to play the parts that have already been devised for the comedies. Miss Baird, a Chicago girl, appeared in pictures under the direction of Herbert Brenon and King Baggott. Besides being a motion picture actress of the first rank, she has written stories in which prominent motion picture stars have appeared.

Peggy Shaw and James Fitzpatrick in "Songs of Ireland," for Pathe, present a lovely touch of the "Ould Sod" in this scene from the famous melody series.

Earl W. Hammons Cup to N'Orleans

The New Orleans branch of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., won the E. W. Hammons cup for March, and will retain possession of it this month as a result of making the best showing among the 36 Educational exchanges during the past month.

N. P. Eberly only recently became manager of this exchange, coming from Oklahoma City, but within a few months topped all other branches in the Hammons cup race during February.

Joe Kaliski, manager of the Pittsburgh branch, won the cup for the previous month.

For the first two weeks in February, the New Orleans exchange established a new record gross for this branch.

"13th Hour" Script

Douglas Furber, famous English playwright, has completed the script of "The Thirteenth Hour," for M-G-M, and the picture is now in production.

Ernie Wood In Third Picture, A Patheserial

Ernie Wood, popular screen and stage player, makes his third appearance in features for Pathe in "The Princess on Broadway," an adaptation of the story by Ethel Donaher, starring Pauline Garon.

In "The Princess on Broadway," Wood plays the part of Morris Turner, a manager of a theatrical agency, and is ideally fitted for the part.

Wood's portrayals on the stage include roles in the original "No, No, Nanette" company, "39 East," "The Sign of the Cross" and "On Trial." He has also appeared in several Gilbert and Sullivan operas.

In his screen career, Mr. Wood has enacted both comedy and heavy parts, his last previous cinema appearances having been in support of Monty Banks in that star's feature comedies, "Ata Boy" and "Horse Shoes," also Pathe pictures.

Wm. Fox Starts Production On A Roche Story

"Rich, But Honest," based on a story by Arthur Somers Roche, was started on its way to the screen at Fox Films West Coast Studios last week.

Albert Ray is the director with the cast including Nancy Nash, Clifford Holland, J. Farrell MacDonald and Tod McNamara.

Vernon Comedy

"Jail Birdies," a forthcoming Educational-Bobby Vernon Comedy, is staged on a big scale, with extended sequences on a college campus, in the school auditorium at graduation time.

Natalie Joyce, the charming star of Educational-Christie Comedy fame.

These are scenes from "The Newlyweds' Build," one of the latest of the Stern Bros. series for Universal. Sunny McKeen is the baby, Sid Say'or is Mr. Newlywed and Ethlyne Clair is Mrs. Newlywed

Avalanche of Messages From Showmen on M.-G.-M. "Shorts"

A VIRTUAL UNPRECEDENTED expression of spontaneous approval has been sounded by exhibitors and theatrical pioneers in every section of the country, following the action of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in creating its new short subject department.

This department embraces the creation of a bi-weekly news reel, to be produced by the Hearst organization, and an affiliation between M-G-M and the Hal Roach studios for the distribution of the famous Roach comedies and short features. Fred C. Quimby has been placed in charge of sales distribution.

Since Nicholas M. Schenck made the first announcement of the expansion of the M-G-M organization to include the short subject department, telegrams, letters and verbal messages of congratulation have been showered on the M-G-M office.

Among those who wrote, or wired, are: Stanley N. Chambers, Wichita, Kansas; Eric T. Clarke, manager, Eastman Theatre, Rochester, N. Y.; Max Balaban, Chicago, Ill.; Louis J. Appel, Appel Amusement Co., York, Pa.; Alex Pantages, Los Angeles, Cal.; Chas. M. Olson, Apollo and Ohio Amusement Co., Indianapolis, Ind.; Caldwell H. Brown, Liberty Theatre, Zanesville, Ohio; John J. McQuirk, president, Stanley Company, Philadelphia, Pa.; Harry Zoitz, State Theatre, New Bedford, Mass.; Fitzpatrick & McElroy, Chicago, Ill.; Wm. H. Cadoret, Scranton, Pa.; Al Gonsior, Virginia Theatre, Champaign, Ill.; Robb and Rowley Theatre Circuit, Dallas, Tex.; T. and D. Jr. Enterprises, Inc., San Francisco, Cal.; Harry C. Arthur, Jr., Pacific Northwest Theatres, Seattle, Wash.; I. J. Hoffman, New Haven, Conn.; C. H. Buckley, Leland Theatre, Clinton Square Theatre, Albany, N. Y.; Sam Bendheim, Jr., Richmond, Va.; Charles A. Midelburg, Capitol Theatre, Charleston, W. Va.; W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., and E. C. Beatty, Detroit, Mich.; Morton G. Thalhimer, Richmond, Va., and Louis M. Boas, Olympic and Palace Theatres, Boston, Mass.

Tacoma Critic On Educational's 'The Mona Lisa'

The romance production, "The Mona Lisa," an Educational release, won first position and the lead over the longer picture when this short feature in technicolor was reviewed by the Tacoma Ledger, following its showing at the Rialto Theatre, Tacoma. The review follows in part:

"One of the most artistic screen offerings in many a long month is on view at the Rialto this week. It is but two reels in length and wonderfully photographed in pleasing colors, yet it tells a drama of human life that is gripping from start to finish.

"I refer to 'The Mona Lisa,' featuring Hedda Hopper in the title role. It is a gem of art, with a novel story unfolded, which relates altogether to the peculiar smile that Da Vinci gave his painting of the Mona Lisa."

Maine Subject, Fox Variety, to Gov. Brewster

"Rock-Ribbed Maine," a one-reel Fox Variety subject, was the object of some special attention last week when at a special showing for Gov. Ralph Brewster and the State Legislature of Maine, a complete film of the subject was presented the Governor by a representative of William Fox.

Gov. Brewster announced that the film would join the other valuable archives of the state that repose in the executive's office.

Twin Sisters' Role

Estelle Bradley will play a dual role in a forthcoming Educational-Mermaid Comedy recently put into production under the direction of Stephen Roberts. The Atlanta beauty will be seen in the role of twin sisters. The camera work is under the supervision of Dwight Warren.

Monty Banks, of Pathe, takes a shot with his automatic, but it's only a camera and no one is hurt

LAUGHING, lovely Leah Baird with Gaiety Pictures, Inc., seems even more beautiful than a screen star needs to be.

YOUTH to the front. Jack L. Warner, in charge of Warner Brothers' production, signs Darryl Francis Zanuck as his associate executive. Zanuck is said to be the youngest motion picture executive in the business.

Lucky Kangaroos

ANOTHER picture of Joan Crawford, the M.G.M. star, but more—or less interesting than the one on page 172.

IT can't be hard to take—George E. Marshall, supervisor of Fox Comedies, aided by Sally Phipps, the new "find," proves that even kangaroos are human enough to want a drink.

BARBARA WORTH, of Universal, wearing a gown that was the talk of Hollywood. It isn't difficult to figure that it caught the eye of every man and the envy of ———. Oh, well why be catty?

Monty Banks Takes His Pathe Cast to San Diego For Comedy

AMONG the passengers on the "Ruth Alexander," sailing on a recent morning, was Monty Banks, screen comedian, and his supporting cast and staff, en route to San Diego, Cal., to take location scenes for Monty's forthcoming Pathe feature comedy, "A Perfect Gentleman."

Incidentally, the other passengers on the steamship had an opportunity to see how movies are made as a boat sequence on the "Ruth Alexander" on the way to San Diego had been arranged.

With Monty will be Ruth Dwyer, who plays opposite him in this picture; Hazel Howell, also filling an important feminine role, Ernie Wood, Agostino Borgato and Arthur Thalasso, all of whom have important roles; Clyde Bruckman, director; A. MacArthur, general manager; Sherry Hall, assistant director; Charles Horan, who wrote the story; Jimmie Diamond, cameraman; Jane McDonough, press representative, and various members of the technical staff and players who fill minor roles.

Morgan's "Rookies"

Byron Morgan, who has written much successful fiction and many good scenarios, recently completed the script and story of "Rookies," a picture introducing Karl Dane and George K. Arthur as a new comedy team, for M-G-M with Marceline Day in the feminine lead.

Authors Signed

Two writers, recently placed under contract, by M-G-M, are Gladys Unger, famous playwright of London and New York, and Winnifred Eaton Reeve, author of many popular novels.

Something New

Jack Black, a new screen writer, is putting forth his initial scenario effort in an original prison story for M-G-M. A several-times-loser, Black is a reformed convict who has served in various penal institutions.

Martha Sleeper, the wide-awake Wampas star of 1917, in the swim for Hal Roach Pathe Comedies.

Ethlyne Clair Signed by "U" For Al Wilson "Stunt" Feature

Georgie Harris sees the styles of then and now in "The Bathing Suitor," a Fox Imperial Comedy.

"Dumb Belles" Comedy Ready; Dooley's Newest For Christie

"DUMB BELLES," a new Educational-Billy Dooley Comedy, has been completed at the Christie Studios. This latest fun film starring the goofy gob comedian features a whole bevy of leading ladies, all of them of the hand-picked variety of beauty that has long distinguished Christie productions. Notable among these examples of feminine charm is Ruth Perrine, who was brought to the Christie Studios from Chicago for a leading part in Billy Dooley Comedies as a result of the Film Fun girl contest.

Ann Christy, recently signed as the "only real Christy girl" at the Christie Studios, and Gayle Lloyd have other outstanding feminine parts in the picture. Miss Christy will play the leading feminine role with Jimmie Adams in a forthcoming comedy, while Miss Lloyd also is scheduled to appear as leading lady in another Adams picture.

Other Christie beauties in the new Dooley production include Peggy Hyde, Evelyn Egan, Ann Carter, Helen Cox, Joy Lynn, Agnely Allison, Elinor Black, Ella McKenzie, Doris Dumas and Charlotte Woodbury.

Jack Duffy and Bill Irving play the supporting comedy roles. As principal and professor, respectively, in a girls' seminary, these two are supplied with roles in which they appear at their best. William Watson directed.

Patheserial, "On Guard," Heads Schedule For Week of March 27

AIRPLANES in combat offer a thrill highlight to the ninth chapter of the Patheserial "On Guard" which heads the Pathe short feature program for the week of March 27. Other audience attractions in short features listed are Topics of the Day No. 13, "Keep Off the Grass," one of Aesop's Film Fables; Pathe Review No. 13 and two issues of Pathe News.

Cullen Landis heads the cast of "On Guard," the current Patheserial, and Muriel Kingston appears as leading lady. Both take to the air in the ninth chapter, entitled "The Air Battle." Arch Heath directed, from Paul Fairfax Fuller's scenario based on the story by Major Glassburn.

"Pipe Organs," one of the features of Pathe Review No. 13, offers exhibitors opportunity to show their patrons the secrets of organ manufacture. The house organist can improvise atmospheric music that will cue in with the un-reeling of the organ manufacture. Other subjects in the new review are "A Song of Triumph in Stone"; a Pathecolor study of Battle Abbey near London and another chapter of "With the Putnam Expedition to Greenland." Short Subject.

Play Adapted

June Mathis has adapted Channing Pollack's Stage success, "The Enemy," for M-G-M. Lillian Gish will be starred.

ETHLYNE CLAIR, pretty comedienne of the Stern Brothers Comedies, best known as Mrs. Newlywed of "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" series, has been engaged by Universal to play in a feature length picture.

Miss Clair will support Al Wilson, stunt aviator, in "The Sky Rider," that star's second production in Universal's announced group of five aeroplane pictures for next year.

Others in the cast are William Malan, William Clifford, Frank Rice, Billy Ned Jones, Joe Bennett, Frank Tomick and Art Goebel.

It is understood that Miss Clair's work in the Al Wilson picture will be completed in time for her to resume work in "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" comedies, the new 1927-1928 series of which will go into production soon. These comedies are adapted from the George McManus newspaper cartoons.

Timely Reviews of Short Subjects

Edited By C. S. Sewell

"The Return of the Riddle Rider"

Universal—Serial

As is obvious from the title, the newest Universal serial "The Return of the Riddle Rider" is a sequel to one of that company's earlier chapter-plays, "The Riddle Rider," and William Desmond again appears in the title role.

The plot of this serial is built up around a western mining town which is under the control of the lawless element. When matters are at their worst a mysterious personage known as the Riddle Rider, who has led them in former difficulties, reappears as their champion.

This is an exceptionally good serial and we do not recall having ever seen one with more dash, pep and action. Events move forward at a regular whirlwind pace and before one exciting situation is fairly over, another is under way. On the basis of the three opening episodes, this serial should prove a humdinger.

While the spectator knows the identity of the Riddle Rider, he is a mystery to the players and in his struggle to bring about law and order he is opposed at every turn by a sinister genius, a mysterious character who is never seen but telephone his orders to his henchmen.

William Desmond is excellent as the fearless editor and leader and also as the suave and courtly and dashing Riddle Rider. Lola Todd capably handles the character of Madge, and although at the beginning they appear to be on opposite sides there is a romance springing up between them as the story progresses. Grace Cunard, a serial favorite of earlier days, appears as the false friend of the heroine.

The big thrills are cokers. The first episode ends with the hero and heroine falling through a rotten floor into an underground stream, and these falls are unusually realistic. In the next episode the punch is supplied by the collapse of a floor on which a number of men are engaged in a free for all fight, and the third ends with the plunge of the heroine's horse over a cliff as the hero rides to her rescue.

"The Wise Old Owl"

Educational—One Reel

A SAYING OF A WISE OWL is illustrated by showing a hen hatching duck eggs in this Hodge Podge, hence the title, but the majority of the reel is cleverly worked around by showing the wide variety of meanings of the word "train," such as railroad train, a train for mill rollers, training for diving, training the guns on a battleship, etc. Trick photography is used to make the railroad train do stunts.

"Why Girls Say No"

Pathe—Two Reels

Marjorie Daw, pictured here, has the leading role in this Hal Roach comedy with Creighton Hale playing opposite. It belongs in the class of Hebrew Irish Comedies, as Marjorie is cast as a Jewish girl and the Irish lads are all in love with her. There is a novel twist when a supposed Irishman wins her love and she insists that he pose as a Hebrew to gain her father's approval. When the two families meet it turns out that he is really a Hebrew, so all ends well. It is amusing farce with slight touches of slapstick. Max Davidson appears as the Hebrew father and as usual is fine in the role. Leo McCauley directed and the supporting cast does good work.

"A Sorority Mixup"

Bray—Two Reels

IN THIS SUNKIST COMEDY the fun is built up around the idea of a chap masquerading as a girl and attending a sorority initiation. Buddy Messenger appears in this role with Ann Porter as his sweetheart. Some of the situations are rather risqué and are of a familiar type. A fake monkey instead of a real one appears in this offering and it is not as amusing as the earlier numbers in this series.

"Weatherproof"

Pathe—One Reel

THIS IS A GRANTLAND RICE Sportlight and as will probably be guessed from the title, it deals with indoor sports such as volleyball, basket-ball gymnastics, squash, bowling, and Indian club swinging. It is well up to the series standard and as usual several champions are shown at work, such as Hyde for squash, Nicoll for Indian clubs, and Lindsey for bowling, the latter exhibiting some seemingly impossible stunts.

"Pathe Review 9"

Pathe—One Reel

Beautiful cloud effects at sundown, Pathecolor views of Korea and various kinds of wild babies make up this interesting screen magazine. Most patrons will probably find the final section the most interesting, with shots of the baby birds and animals such as mallard ducks, malamute pups, skunks, lions, rocky mountain goats, and kangaroos.

"Local Talent"

Educational—One Reel

INSTEAD OF BEING confined to the familiar characters of the earlier numbers, this Life Cartoon introduces a wide variety of animals who are shown attempting or participating in the events at a county fair. There are ducks, skunks, elephants, etc. They engage in some novel stunts which have been cleverly worked out and it is one of the very best of this series.

"Chicken Feathers"

Educational—Two Reels

Like the previous Christie Comedies in which Anne Cornwall has been featured, this one is amusing and fast moving with the attractive and vivacious little star doing excellent work and Jack Duffy lending fine support in the role of her father. It should prove a popular attraction with the majority of patrons. The fun is built up around the idea of father hiding a large sum of money in a sofa pillow which Anne gives to a church bazaar. There is nothing new in this idea but it has been breezily worked out with a lot of good slapstick and some new and clever gags. An iceman and a pickpocket who are also after the pillow add to the fun which winds up in a cleaning place where hundreds of pillows are torn to pieces and the air filled with feathers.

"Stars and Stripes"

Educational—One Reel

IN HIS ATTEMPT TO SWIPE a barber pole which a baby thinks is a big stick of candy, Felix the Cat in this cartoon lands in jail. He makes a boring tool and gets away by tunneling under a lake which fills the prison yard and then transforms a horse into a zebra which finally lands in a zoo. There are several clever and imaginative stunts in this cartoon and it is up to the average.

"Back to Mother"

Fox—Two Reels

Worried by her husband's seemingly growing indifference, Helen, in this issue of the "Helen and Warren" series of comedies decides to make him jealous by pretending to have married before and to have discovered that her first husband is still alive. This results in a series of somewhat familiar but amusing situations, due to the fact that Warren runs across the supposed husband and brings him home. This chap proved to be a big, tough bully who lords it over Warren, acts as if he owns the house and bosses Helen, so that finally she is glad enough to confess to her deception. There is a fight in which fate takes a hand and Warren accidentally comes out the winner. Kathryn Perry and Allan Forrest again handle the leading roles, with W. E. Jamieson as the bully. Lydie Yeamans Titus is excellent and very amusing as the bully's uncouth and tough mother.

"Cracked Ice"

Pathe—One Reel

FARMER AL TRIES his hand at winter sports in this issue of the Aesop's Fables cartoon and as usual, the result is amusing and well punctuated by clever bits that will get the laughs. He tries skating and falls in a hole and is chopped out frozen fast. Then he falls prey to the mischievous gang of mice who pester him, and finally a gang of cats snowball him.

"A Perfect Day"

Educational—One Reel

In this Cameo Comedy, the fun takes place in a girls' school. George Davis, pictured here, and Phil Dunham are cast as two hustling young fellows who visit the school and fall in love with a pretty girl played by Estelle Bradley. This is resented by a homely aged maiden, portrayed by Elsie Fay, and by Arthur Rowlands, who appears as one of the professors. As a result their path is not a smooth one and there is a succession of slapstick situations that are up to the average in amusement value. An excellent gag is where George and Phil, in attempting to bring a piano downstairs manage to get it over themselves like a shroud and eventually to smash it.

Jack Miller, business manager of the Chicago Exhibitors Association, has returned from an extended southern tour and is making plans for a record Movie Exhibitors' Ball to be given on the opening of the new Stevens Hotel. Ludwig Siegel is chairman of the committee in charge of the big event.

Len Ullrich has resigned his connection with the Chicago Pathe organization and his many friends in the trade hope he will stay in the Chicago movie field.

Winthrop Harbor

A new movie theatre is planned for Winthrop Harbor on the north shore, to be erected by the Uptown Square syndicate.

Dr. D. Carmon has taken over the lease of Robert Moore on the Forrest Theatre at Sauemin, Ill., and will operate the house in the future. Moore will go into other lines of business.

Maywood

Local capital at Maywood, Ill., plan to erect a $300,000 movie theatre in that west side suburb, and work is planned to begin at an early date.

It is expected that the rebuilding of the Apollo Theatre, which the United Artists will take over from the Shubert interests on September 1, will cost about two millions, according to the announcement of the United Artists offices.

Charles Miller has joined the Chicago sales staff of the Universal office. S. R. Greiver of the Greiver Productions says they will open a Milwaukee office in a few weeks and Irving Mandel of the Security Exchange has returned from Indianapolis, where they have opened a branch office for the independent productions handled by the Security Exchange.

R. M. Kreps, M. E. Rieck, Edward Benson and R. D. Kandall have organized the Trianon, Inc., to own and operate theatres and other places of amusements, and will look after the management of the Trianon of the Karzas Circuit on the south side. The capital is 4,000 shares of no par value.

St. Louis, Mo.

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
St. Louis, Mo., Mar. 10.*

THE electrical workers union has abandoned its attempt to force the employment of resident electricians in various theatres of St. Louis. The international officers of the Electrical Workers and of the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees have agreed to abide by an agreement entered into several years ago whereby the work the electrical workers were attempting to claim will be performed by the stage hands. All major repairs and new electrical construction work will be done by members of the electrical workers union. As the result of the agreement the electrical workers have pulled off the pickets who have been handing out dodgers in front of three or four theatres.

Samuel G. Hoffman, who operated the Delmonte Theatre, 5630 Delmar boulevard, St. Louis, Mo., from January 24 to February 14, on February 24 obtained from the Circuit Court a temporary restraining order to prevent the Delmonte Investment Company from foreclosing on a note for $10,000 secured by a mortgage on property owned by Hoffman and his wife, Elizabeth M. Hoffman. The note was given as security for the carrying out a lease on the property. Under the terms of the lease Hoffman agreed to pay 15 per cent of the gross receipts for rent with a minimum of $12,500 a year. He asks for the return of the note and for damages from the owners of the theatre.

Yeggmen were frightened away after they had knocked the combination from the safe of the Chippewa Theatre, St. Louis, early on February 21.

Portageville

The wife of Jim Collier, Gem Theatre, Portageville, Mo., is critically ill in a Memphis, Tenn., hospital.

Kennett

The Star Theatre, Kennett, Mo., opens March 5. E. Vandever who also operates the Palace Theatre there is the owner.

Prompt work by the projectionist prevented a serious fire at the Newton Theatre, Newton, Ill., on February 24. When a reel caught fire the operator quickly shut all openings and extinguished the blaze. He not only saved nine other reels but the audience did not know a fire was in progress.

Harry Strickland who has travelled out of St. Louis for various film companies for a number of years has been made manager of the Kansas City branch of Warner Brothers. In recent months he has travelled Southern Illinois for that company.

Eddie Alperson is the new district manager for Warner Brothers. The St. Louis Kansas City and Omaha exchanges are in his charge.

Producers Distributing Corporation held an important sales convention in St. Louis, February 26 to March 2. The Coronado Hotel was the headquarters for the gathering. Nine home officials were on hand.

Bill Limits Ticket Sale

The Minnesota state legislature has before it a bill which would limit the number of tickets an exhibitor may sell. The bill would thus prevent an exhibitor from selling more tickets than he has seats.

Colorado

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Denver, Colo., Mar. 10.*

PROJECTIONIST S. SOLOMON was seriously burned about the hands and about three hundred women and children patrons were badly scared when a fire broke out in the projection booth of the local Navajo theatre during the matinee last Sunday afternoon. The fusible links on the projection booth openings worked perfectly as all openings to the booth closed soon after the blaze started. About $500.00 damage resulted to the booth and films. The theatre is owned and managed by Dominic De George.

Cheyenne, Wyo.

The new Lincoln theatre of Cheyenne, Wyo., will open its doors to the public next Wednesday night. The theatre will be Cheyenne's newest and finest and will be the only opposition house to the Carl Ray theatres which have operated in Cheyenne for several years.

Ten Sleep, Wyo.

A new theatre is under construction in the town of Ten Sleep, Wyo. The theatre is being constructed by W. E. Hatfield.

The Mazda theatre at Ovid, Colo., was compelled to close its doors last week on account of a scarlet fever epidemic in the locality. The theatre is managed by D. Bratton of Ovid.

Neil Kimball, owner and manager of the Victory theatre of Craig, Colo., was a Denver visitor several days this week.

The Shooker Film Exchange of Denver and the Columbia Exchange have been admitted to membership in the Denver Film Board of Trade, effective March 1, 1927.

Film shipments have been suspended to the Gem Theatre of Silverton, Colo., because of snow blockade. Silverton is a mining town with about 1800 people.

South Dakota

The new Orpheum theatre at Aberdeen, S. D., has been opened by Art Johnson. Five vaudeville acts and a program by a seven-piece orchestra featured the opening week.

Student Rush Involves Theatre in Fight

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Detroit, Mich., Mar. 10.*

OPEN warfare between the college authorities and the two motion picture theatres in Ann Arbor, home of the University of Michigan, is threatened as a result of an enthusiastic rush on the Arcade Theatre last Saturday night following the winning of the Conference Basketball Championship by the Michigan five.

One student was nearly blinded by tear bombs thrown by police to quell the riot and he is still in the hospital. Several other students were burned about the eyes. Students and members of the faculty are now discussing a boycott of the theatres.

A few nights after the tear bomb incident a stench bomb was placed in the Arcade, resulting in the forced closing of the theater. The Arcade Theater is controlled by the Butterfield Theatrical Circuit.

The Uptown Theater, the Keith-Albee invasion into the neighborhood districts of Detroit, had an auspicious opening last Monday evening and has been playing to capacity business ever since. The policy is vaudeville and first run pictures with changes on Sunday and Thursday.

Steel work on the new Hollywood Theater on Fort street, which will be the largest neighborhood house in the city when completed, is going up rapidly and there is every indication that it will be ready for opening before Labor Day.

Henry Zapp, manager and Kelly Decker, booker, are winners of watches as a result of a $5,000 prize contest recently conducted by P. D. C.

George W. Trendle, general manager of the John H. Kunsky theaters, has returned from a month's vacation spent in Florida, Cuba and the Bahamas.

John Flynn, former manager for the old Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and now district manager of the middle western section for M. G. M. has taken up his residence in Detroit.

P. C. Schram, Kalamazoo exhibitor, who has been spending the winter in California, is expected back around the first of May.

Jake Sullivan, managing director of the new Orient Theatre, owned by the Le-win Development Co., announces the opening will take place the latter part of the month. He will offer pictures and vaudeville and will broadcast radio programs from his organ, being the first theater in the city to undertake this angle.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Koppin became the proud parents of a baby girl last week. Henry E. is the son of Henry S. Koppin, who operates thirty theatres in Detroit and Michigan. Henry does all the booking.

Ohio

Cleveland

C. L. Nyerges, Cleveland, Ohio, is manager of the Majestic Theatre, which has been reopened in that city.

Movie houses at Pleasant Ridge, Cincinnati suburb, have been ordered closed by city authorities to prevent threatened scarlet fever epidemic.

Middletown

Harry Gordon, owner of a theatre bearing his name at Middletown, Ohio, was found dead in a nearby cigar store. Heart attack is given as the cause.

Uhrichsville

The Rex Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio, which is operated by W. B. Uhring, has changed from a straight picture policy to pictures and presentations.

Minnesota

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Minneapolis, Minn., Mar. 10.*

Minneapolis

ONE of the most spectacular fires that Minneapolis has witnessed in months partially destroyed the Old Mill Theatre last week. The Old Mill is a second run house on Hennepin avenue, one of the main thoroughfares of Minneapolis. About 50 patrons were in the theatre at the time the fire spread from next door, but they fled out without disorder. The rear of the theatre was burned away, and thousands of dollars worth of damage was done to the adjacent building.

About 1,500 persons, including members of the F. & R. organization in the Twin Cities and actors and actresses appearing at the local theatres, attended the ball at the Radisson Hotel given last week by the Finkelstein & Rubin Pep Club of Minneapolis. The ball was called "A Night at the Moulin Rouge," and prizes were offered for the most elaborate costumes worn.

W. D. Bugge, manager of Minneapolis new $3,000,000 auditorium which is nearing completion, is considering an offer from the Columbia pictures corporation to stage a historical pageant as an opening feature. This pageant would depict the history of the northwest.

Minnesota

Fred Coughlin, manager of the Astor theater in Duluth, is recovering from an operation.

Leland McEwen, who presides at the organ of the Garrick theatre in Duluth, is broadcasting a weekly program from WEBC, the Duluth station.

Wyman Carey, who played the piano in the Garrick concert orchestra, Duluth, has been busy passing out cigars. His baby girl was born on Washington's birthday.

An F. & R. Booster Club has been formed by the employes of the State and Park theatres in Austin, Minn. Monthly meetings are planned for the employes and their families, with programs of entertainment provided by the talented club members.

Work on the new Minneapolis theatre, the $2,000,000 house which will be leased by Famous Players-Lasky for 25 years, got under way last week when wreckers started to tear down the gasoline station and the old house at Ninth street and La Salle.

St. Paul

Clarence Berquist and Ed Elstrom have bought the Grand theater at Atwater, Minn., from C. R. Clark.

Dayton

The Pyramid Film Co., of Dayton, Ohio, has disposed of a site which it is said was originally to be used for a new film building, and on which a residence will now be built. The film company has made no further announcement as to a new building for the present.

Columbus

The Majestic Theatre, one of the most prominent houses in Columbus, Ohio, has been ordered sold at sheriff's sale, the court having issued the decree in connection with a partition suit filed by the estate of James M. Ross against one John McGaffrey.

Canada

Ottawa, Canada, Mar. 10.*

A SPECIAL drawing card at B. F. Keith's theatre, Ottawa, during the week of February 28 was a Harmonica Contest in which about 20 aspirants for the three cash prizes from the Canadian Capitol and neighboring towns competed. There were two lady contestants in the feature and their appearance added much enthusiasm. Manager Franklin secured window displays of harmonicas in local music and sporting goods stores.

Hull, Que.

The orchestra of the Laurier Theatre, Hull, Quebec, the manager of which is Donat Paquin, has been adding to its fame by giving afternoon recitals in the tea rooms of the Murphy-Gamble department store in Ottawa under the direction of Conductor Rene Marier.

Eastern Methodist Church, some years ago one of the largest edifices in Ottawa, has been purchased for conversion into a theatre by a syndicate of the Canadian Capital.

For the first week in Lent, Manager J. T. Moxley of the Imperial Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, adopted a split week policy. The Imperial Theatre has been changing programmes weekly for some time past.

Toronto

Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, has acquired the Langer chain of moving picture theatres in Vancouver, B.C. Famous Players already had three large houses in Vancouver, these being the Capitol, Dominion and Broadway, and to these have now been added the six suburban theatres of the Langer circuit, it is announced. The Langer theatres include the Kerrisdale, Windsor, Victoria, Alma, Regen and Grand view. H. M. Thomas, Western Division manager of Famous Players, is in direct charge of the Vancouver Capitol and has supervision over the other local theatres.

Calgary, Alta.

Manager J. B. Barron of the Palace Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, had a programme during the week of February 28 that caused quite a commotion. He called it a "Grand Carnival of Music" and the bill included Giuseppe Creatore, noted band conductor; Pauline Talma, soprano soloist, and Alfred Meunier's Symphony Orchestra.

Following the departure of Phil. Kauffman, former general sales manager of Regal Films, Limited, from Toronto to become Central European sales manager for First National, with headquarters at Berlin, Germany, announcement has been made at Toronto of the appointment of Henry Nathanson as general manager of sales for Regal for Canada.

Montreal, Que.

That propaganda against Sunday moving picture shows was being spread in Montreal, since the Laurier Palace Theatre disaster and that it should be combatted was the opinion expressed by Howard Conover, veteran manager of the Imperial Theatre, Montreal, before a luncheon of exchange men here.

Toronto

The various women's and ministers' organizations here are holding meetings about stage and movie cleanups in this territory and the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs have asked the Chief of Police, the theatrical interests and the Mayor's office to have representatives at their next meeting.

New York

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Albany, N. Y., Mar. 16.*

THE Tiffany exchange on Albany's Film Row will shortly move and occupy quarters in the first building on the Row, and in all probability the F. B. O. exchange will move from its present quarters on May 1, and take over the building which now houses Tiffany. This will leave only Pathe and Paramount in the downtown section. H. C. Bissell, who recently resigned as local manager for Universal, started in this week as a salesman for First National.

Hudson

Freeder and Grossman, who have two theatres in Hudson, as well as houses in Brooklyn, are said to be negotiating for two theatres in Albany and one in Troy. Mr. Freeder was in town during the week, but refused to divulge just how far the negotiations had extended.

Joe Saperstein, manager of Harmanus Bleecker Hall in Albany, passes up cigars and cigarettes, but when it comes to enjoying a pipe, that's a different story. Mr. Saperstein has a collection of pipes in his office that runs the gamut from the lowly corn cob to the superior Dunhill.

W. W. Farley, who owns theatres in Schenectady, Catskill and Yonkers, and who doesn't have to worry when it comes to money matters, is spending a few weeks in Florida. P. W. Mulderry, a local contractor, who with Mr. Farley, built Film Row in Albany, is also enjoying the southern breezes.

Troy

Jimmy Rose, of Troy, blossomed forth this past week with a trick mustache of light straw color. When he put in an appearance along Film Row on a shopping expedition, one of the managers was unkind enough to inquire if he had perchance imbibed in a soda and the straw had clung to his upper lip.

Cortland

The Schine boys of Gloversville are at it again. This time it's a new theatre for Cortland, N. Y. They recently secured an option on the main business street of the city, and will erect a theatre this spring. The house will include stores as well as the theatre. New houses are also going up in Albany by Harry Hellman and in Schenectady by George Dwore.

Watertown

There is nothing slow about the Olympic in Watertown, handled by Sol Manheimer. Although Watertown is 200 miles from Albany, invitations to the reopening of the theatre on March 19, have been sent to Governor Alfred E. Smith, and Mayor Jimmy Walker, of New York City, hasn't been forgotten. Oh, yes, one more thing, invitations were also sent by Mr. Manheimer to every motion picture star in the entire United States.

Saranac Lake

L. N. Sanschagrin, of Saranac Lake, who runs a hotel and embarked in the motion picture business a year or so ago, has decided to devote his entire attention to his hostelry. The theatre has been leased to the Gilmore Amusement Company of Syracuse, for a long term of years.

Willsboro

A well-known northern New York exhibitor passed away recently in the person of George Felt, of the firm of Felt and Murray of Willsboro. Announcement of his death was conveyed to the Albany exchanges in a letter from Mr. Murray.

James Roach, of Schenectady, staged his first presentation last week at the State Theatre. The presentation act went over big.

San Francisco

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Detroit, Mich., Mar. 10.*

AN unheralded premiere of "Sunrise" was held at the California Theatre, Berkeley, on the evening of February 24, and while several studio officials and West Coast Theatre heads were in attendance, they elected to remain in the background, desiring to have the picture judged strictly on its merits. Manager Clarence Laws, of the California Theatre, had members of the Parent-Teachers' Association and several university professors as his guests for the evening.

Among those in attendance were W. R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager for William Fox; H. J. Sheehan, district manager; F. W. Murnau, director; H. H. Cahell and K. Hilliker, title writers, and D. Hettrick, cutter; Fred Voight, manager of the William Fox San Francisco branch; Charles Thall, assistant manager of West Coast Theatres, and Jack Brehaney, executive secretary of West Coast Theatres.

For the first time since the opening of the new Pantages Theatre, a picture has been held over at this house for a second week, the production being "The Winning of Barbara Worth."

A. M. Bowles, general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc., was a recent visitor from his headquarters at Los Angeles.

George Roy, who conducts a moving picture house at Reno, Nev., was a recent visitor on San Francisco's Film Row, arranging bookings and greeting old friends.

W. O. Edmunds, of Progress Features, 177 Golden Gate avenue, has returned from a trip by motor car to Los Angeles. He was in the southern city at the time of the disastrous floods which slowed down business so noticeably for a time. While there he added E. H. Silcox and George Giroux to the sales staff of the branch maintained there.

The Co-operative Film Exchange, conducted by Floyd St. John, recently celebrated its eighth anniversary in business in San Francisco.

H. D. McBride, exploitation man for Universal, has had his territory enlarged and will now cover the entire West. He spent some time at the San Francisco branch recently.

San Jose

The opening date of the new California Theatre at San Jose has been set for April 16. This is a West Coast house.

Berkeley

A group of business men in the Ashby district has formed a corporation for the purpose of erecting a moving picture theatre with a seating capacity of 1,560, together with ten stores, at Ashby avenue and Adeline street.

Fresno

Some extensive improvements are being made in the Lyceum Theatre now being operated by Joseph Keneaster.

Thomas H. Bailey, for several years manager of the San Francisco branch of Famous Players, Lasky, has been named manager of the Boston division and has been succeeded in the local position by former Sales Manager J. J. Patridge, long connected with the San Francisco branch and one of the most popular men in the industry.

Recent visitors on San Francisco's film row have included W. B. Laughead, manager of the Westwood Theatre, Westwood, Cal.; Mr. Adams, of the Liberty Theatre, Susanville, Cal., and Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Hables, of the Reeljoy Theatre, Kings City, Cal.

Pennsylvania

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Pittsburgh, Mar. 16.*

THE Pittsburgh branch of the National Theatre Supply Company, is soon to move from their present headquarters at 1024 Forbes street, to more commodious headquarters at 1006-08 Forbes street. Removal will probably take place within the next two weeks. In the new quarters National will occupy 3,000 square feet of floor space. Edward Morton is branch manager.

John Hauer, owner of the American Theatre at Erie, is soon to commence erection of a new picture house in this city. He has purchased a piece of property close to Popular and West 26th streets, and will erect thereon an 800-seat theatre. Mr. Hauer also announces that he is soon to remodel the American, inside and out, improvements to cost in the neighborhood of $7,000 to $10,000.

Wheeling, W. Va.

Ground has just been broken for the erection of a $900,000 theatre building on Main street, between Ninth and Tenth streets, Wheeling, W. Va. The house is to seat 3,500 persons, is being built by the Capitol Theatre Company, of which John Papoulias is president, and the opening day is scheduled for October 1. The building will include a dance hall on the second floor to accommodate 2,000 persons. In the basement, plans call for recreational parlors to house twenty billiard tables, twenty bowling alleys, swimming pool, barber shop and cafeteria.

Manager S. A. Gearon, of the Capitol Film Exchange (Columbia Pictures), is spending much time on the road becoming personally acquainted with the theatre owners.

Exhibitor visitors on Film Row the past few days included: Charles Lynch, Meadville; Nick Anas, Wellsburg; Andy Battiston, Yukon and Irwin; B. E. Cupler, Washington; Rudolph Navary, Verona; Joseph Saeli and James Retter, California; William Gray, Monongahela City; Mr. Scrano, Madera; Peter Thomas, Parkersburg; Nat Walken, Washington; Carl Becker, Butler; C. R. Schultz, Parkersburg; George Cordi, Derry; J. E. Zearfuss, Somerset; C. B. Pascoe, Somerset; John Newman, New Castle; Nick Lambros, Leechburg; Mrs. R. G. Wilt, Ligonier; Miss McGinley, Elizabeth.

Nebraska

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Omaha, Neb., Mar. 10.*

THE Grand Theatre at Omaha has reduced its price of admission to 5 cents for children and 10 cents for adults. The Strand Theatre at Newman Grove, Neb., has been completely destroyed by fire.

Mrs. Helen Page, inspector for Liberty Films, died February 15 as a result of an operation she underwent for appendicitis shortly before that time.

Iowa

J. L. Brooker has bought the Paramount Theatre at Winterset, Ia. from J. L. Kale.

A. Frankel has sold the King Theatre at Albia, Ia. to Harry Weinberg. Mr. Weinberg also bought the Rex Theatre at that place.

Fred Kischer has bought the Empress Theatre at Albert City, Ia.

Stanley & Cecil have sold the American Theatre at Corning, Ia. to F. E. Robertson.

The Alma Theatre at New London, Ia. has been bought by Mr. Shipley from E. S. Perkins.

Exhibitor Brags He Never Uses Locals To Put Over His Small City Enterprise

ONE of the most amazing letters we have received in a long time drifted in the other day. It was from an exhibitor in a comparatively small city who bragged that he had not contributed to the local newspaper since he had been in town. Reading between the lines, we rather gather that his heat is partly induced by the fact that the newspaper has been very friendly to his opposition, not only because the other man is an advertiser, but because he is the sort of man the community likes. The editor has been very generous to this opposing exhibitor, which may be why the writer decides that the paper is moist to the point of saturation, but we cannot understand how any showman can ignore the local sheet, whether or not he likes the editor or approves his methods. We date back to 1891, and we don't think we can recall a similar instance.

If we had a house in a small town, we would patronize the local paper even though we might hold the editor in particular detestation. We should feel that we could not afford to be left out of the representation. It would be bad enough if we had the only house in town, but with an opposition that does get representation we should get into the advertising columns if we had to use a court order to obtain the space.

It would not matter in the least if we did not sell a single ticket from one New Year's to the next. Naturally we would endeavor to make the space pay a profit, but if the paper was so hopelessly poor that it could not influence the sale of a single ticket, we still would want to be represented if for no other reason than as a matter of civic pride. We should not want to have people think that we were too poor or too stingy or too ignorant to advertise.

We would advertise in the local paper for the sake of our own self respect.

The local paper is a part of every community. Often it is a very important part.

sometimes, through lack of ability, the editor is a nonentity, and his product is colorless, but still, it is a part of the town, and an exhibitor should be a part of every local enterprise calling for support.

Newspaper advertising is as much a routine part of the business as renting films or sweeping out the house. No man who offers his wares for public approval can afford to stay out of any of the town's enterprises, whether it is giving five dollars toward a new firehouse or a dollar toward the purchase of new uniforms for the town band.

The newspaper is a part of the town and as such deserving of recognition. Helping the paper helps to make the town better, and a better town means better business.

What we think of the editor or what the editor thinks of us would not matter. Even if we thought he deliberately favored a business rival, we would strive to find out why and seek to gain a favor that would at least give us an even break.

When the town is large enough to support only a weekly, this support is doubly important. People may overlook portions of a daily, or may prefer the newspaper from the nearest large city, but the weekly sheet is home news, and everyone will read it. And they will read it straight through, patent medicine ads and all.

And we should want to be among the advertisements to be read. We should want to be on the spot to offer our wares to the man who does or might go to the pictures. And we would make an especial appeal to the man who is not interested and does not usually go. We might get the regulars anyway, but the newspaper is the cheapest and most effective way to get at the undeveloped prospect. He might be reached through the mails or through personal solicitation, but in the weekly paper you can hammer at him once a week every week in the year. And we would want to be in the paper whether the editor was all that was abhorrent to us. We wouldn't have to kiss him. All we would have to do is pay the advertising bills, and we could do that if we advertised.

The more you strive to become a part of the life of your town, the more important your enterprise becomes, whether you sell shoestrings or superfeatures.

Eventually you'll get into the paper and if it's only notice of a sheriff's sale.

Another "Addie"

Add pancake eating to the rest of the 17,974 contest ideas.

Credit it to H. M. Addison, of the Binghamton theatres.

"Addie" offered to supply the cakes and managed to ring in the names of a number of local concerns to help them along, too, which pleased them.

Someone ran a story about a woman who could eat 23 at a sitting. Addie dug out a local contender, issued a challenge and got two two column boxes for a total of sixteen inches, just by writing good copy.

WAKING INTEREST IN TIN HATS AT THE RIALTO THEATRE, MACON, GA.

Montague Salmon used a machine gun nest in front of his house, since the lobby was too small, and a soldier carrying a rifle was on guard day and night. An officer and three privates in U. S. uniform marched a German captive around with fixed bayonets and an air of determination. The war story was put over with an extra big business.

How They Put Over The Features In Singapore

Sold Sorrows of Satan

With Bowl of Lemonade

It takes a born press agent to put over a picture like The Sorrows of Satan with a goldfish globe of lemonade, but that's Edgar Hart, of the Colonial Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H.

Edgar got a large goldfish globe, filled it with some colored water the druggist fixed up for him and wired it so that it would hang in a space cut in a banner below the regular banner for the picture. On either side he showed paste-ups from the lithographs, and below was "Green's Drug Store. Ice cold lemonade. The old Devil can never have any. That's one of the Sorrows of Satan."

It was so different that it had everyone thinking of where they could sell ice water for a dollar a glass, and the humor of the thing sank the title deep.

His first sales angle was to advertise widely that there was no devil in the picture. That was partly induced by the fact that Faust had recently failed to click for him. Then he got his film on Saturday for the Monday opening and he showed the Saturday patrons the opening scenes. That had them gasping. He ran up to the first scenes in the picture following the allegory and showed just enough of that to arouse interest.

Orthophonic Organ Records

For the actual showing he accompanied the picture with five organ records on the orthophonic. The music seems to have had much to do with getting the story over. Another aid was using the amber foots one quarter up as the title went on. This went to ruby for the first titles, changing to purple for the battle in the heavens and to blue for Lucifer's defeat. The light was killed with the first modern shot, but came up pink on the pagan rout. It takes nice judgment not to overdo this, but it helps wonderfully when done with judgment. And it cannot be done on every picture. It must fit in.

The answer is that the second day was better than the first. Edgar had put over one of the most difficult sales propositions of the season for a hang-up. We'll bet Bill Gray is glad he brought Edgar all the way from San Diego. He's in a class by himself.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

"Pompadour Days," a pretentious incident running 29 minutes, was the big presentation of the show which had Harold Lloyd in "The Kid Brother" as the chief feature picture. Lloyd's production required 1 hour and 20 minutes, while the Mark Strand Topical Review took up its accustomed 8 minutes. The remaining 11 minutes of the 2 hour and 8 minute show was given to the Four Aristocrats, a quartette of male singers and instrumentalists.

"Pompadour Days" opened each of the deluxe shows, of which there were 4 each week day and 5 on Saturday and Sunday. The set opened "in one" before a painted scrim representing the exterior of a colonial villa of the Louis XV period. The Minuet Ballet was danced by 8 girls, after which Joy and Conrad Gordon did a duet dance to the music of "Caprice Viennois." Following this the lights came up behind the scrim and the scrim was raised disclosing the interior of the house, the set still being in keeping with the period. A large French window opening upon a balcony was in the center of the set-piece looking out upon a moonlit sky. The Pompadour Trio, composed of a woman harpist, male cellist, and male violinist, played "Extase," following which Gladys St. John, coloratura soprano made her entrance in a very elaborate gown of the period, the train being carried by a little page girl in tights. The singer sang Oh Brilliant Bird from "The Pearl of Brazil." The Pompadour Ballet Corps composed of 16 girls then danced a waltz number with a solo feature by the premier danseuse of the Brooklyn Mark Strand Ballet Corps. Next came the special dance of Natacha Nattova, assisted by G. Rodion, this Russian dancer being billed as the world's foremost adagio dancer. For a conclusion Edna Burhans, soprano, and Charles Premmac, tenor, sang "Liebestraum" as a duet, while the various other members of the company took various poses about the stage.

The lights were as follows: 2 green and 2 magenta spots across draped ceiling; bridges No. 1 and No. 2 amber floods full. As curtain opened ceiling spots dimmed off; bridges going to light blue on 2 big vases upon right and left of stage. Two light blue floods, head high, as curtain opened. Light blue foots and light blue borders.

Following the Topical Review the Four Aristocrats appeared on the apron of the large stage for their presentation. A piano was placed permanently for the week center stage at the footlights. Their act required 11 minutes and was lighted as follows: White spots from dome; bridges No. 1 and 2 picked up artists as they entered right and left of stage, going to deep blue floods on draw curtains which were closed across the production stage; blue borders.

Sounded His A

Al Mason, who has been clicking away down in Texas at the Palace theatre, Dallas, did some pretties for The Scarlet Letter, his best being an eight-foot electric A in red lamps from the underside of a dirigible. The ship kept its siren going to get attention—and it assuredly did. It made the news columns for the benefit of the few who did not see and hear it.

Two banners were advantageously placed and a furniture store made a fine display of Colonial pieces in its show window.

Enjoined Caution

Charles Morrison used a man in evening dress to perambulate for Don't Tell the Wife. The man was correctly dressed, save for the fact that he carried his shoes in his hand. As he went along the street he would put his finger to his lips and utter a "Sh-sh."

Most persons turned to look after him and found on his back a sign reading "Don't Tell the Wife. Meet me at the Imperial."

The man wore insoles and woolen socks under the silk ones, for even down in Jacksonville some precaution is necessary.

THIS MAY LOOK LIKE LOCAL STUFF, BUT IT IS HOW THEY PUT THE PICTURES OVER IN SINGAPORE. The Bat was put over by four coolies, each carrying a large cutout lettered, with the base where the tail would be, if bats had tails. The other group shows the ballyhoo for The Son of the Sheik, employing seven men. Two of them wear white burnouses with the title letter in the back, just as they do it over here.

Made Chaplin Reissue a Broadway Show Feature

THE OLD AND THE NEW MEET IN LINCOLN, NEBRASKA
W. S. Perutz, of the Lincoln Theatre, borrowed the oldest fire engine in the department and hitched it to a tractor instead of the three white horses. The combination was very effective for The Fire Brigade.

Chaplin on Broadway Shares With Feature

No one ever accused Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, of not knowing his way about. He knows how to put his offerings over, and that he split his newspaper and lobby space between a new picture and a revival of Shoulder Arms is significant.

THE NEWSPAPER SPACES

Both in his Sunday splashes and his daily directory ads he played up Chaplin as strongly as he did Billie Dove, and the chances are that he got a good share of the ticket sales on the revival of a picture that is regarded as about the best of the Chaplin two reels.

He not only got the use of the Chaplin name, but he got a picture that works right in with the present fashion in Army and Navy comedies, and that is ten years ahead of the others but still as funny as ever. Getting it back on Broadway was an inspiration that brought Plunkett a substantial boost and it did not cost him a fancy first run price, which makes it all the better.

Got a Page

That The Whole Town's Talking about the big values in the cooperating stores was made the basis of a cooperative page for the Denny picture in New Bedford, Mass., when The Whole Town's Talking was played at the Capitol theatre. "Universlugs," the one and two column novelties supplied on all Jewels, were used in each of the spaces to hook to the title and serve as an introductory line. These slugs are decidedly useful.

Students Approve Series

The entire senior class of the Arkansas Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Jonesboro, were invited to be the guests of the Strand theatre at the second showing of Carle Laemmle Jr.'s, The Collegians.

Their letters of approval formed excellent advertising material, for they were agreed that these stories caught the college spirit exactly. The remainder of the series is over for a bunch of records.

A PATHE REISSUE SHARES THE LIGHTS OF BROADWAY
The Mark Strand Theatre, New York, gave equal space to Shoulder Arms when it played An Affair of the Follies, and Joseph Plunkett split the newspaper space as well as the marquee because he knew it would pay him.

Used Modern Tractor With Ancient Engine

When he came to play The Fire Brigade, W. S. Perutz, of the Lincoln theatre, Lincoln, Neb., borrowed the oldest fire engine the local department had, but instead of parking it at the theatre or drawing it about town with horses, he hitched it to the newest model tractor the local agency could supply, and the combination of the old and the new got more attention than horses could have gained.

He gave the tractor banner to the agent and took the steamer banner for himself, and the former paid for the loan of the tractor.

Mr. Perutz also found a new use for stickers. After all this time it would seem that all spots had been used up, but he found one more. The stickers were in red on black, and very showy. These stickers were pasted on the coats of all the waiters in one of the prominent restaurants. They were decorative and got an unusual amount of attention, and since the coats were laundered daily, a fresh supply was provided. The same idea can be used for the attendants in soda bars, now that Perutz has led the way.

The usual stunts were worked with the fire department, and 1,000 Fire Don'ts were put out by electrical dealers and the gas company.

Gunned for Patrons

Willis Grist, Jr., of the Galax theatre, Birmingham, Ala., borrowed a machine gun for his lobby display on Her Man O' War, and capitalized the fact that it had been captured by one of the Birmingham units during the war. A couple of German helmets were also on display and the announcement board was a composite helmet, camouflaged and then lettered with the necessary facts.

Animal Crackers

Loose-Wiles gave Fred V. Greene, Jr., 3,000 packages of animal crackers, each with the copy: Some of the animals to be seen in the Mighty Circus story, Spangles, Majestic theatre, Sunday. These are Sunshine Animal Crackers, made by Loose-Wiles Sunshine Biscuit Co. See the picture—"eat the animals."

This was worked for the Majestic theatre, Utica, N. Y. In addition the eight delivery trucks were bannered for a week.

Gave Local Firemen Something to Offer

H. G. Olson, of the Apollo Theatre, Janesville, Wis., pulled another niftie, this time on The Fire Brigade. The firemen were due to have a ball in a couple of months, and they were a bit afraid that if they sold The Fire Brigade they could not come back on the ball and yet their chief was pledged to put the M-G-M over.

H. G. solved the problem very neatly. He had tickets printed up good for The Fire Brigade and the Ball. You tore off a stub and used it for the picture and saved the rest for the ball. This sold for half a dollar more than the usual dollar ball tickets, but it looked like twice as much, and sold more readily. The firemen were given fifteen cents on each ticket for their fund, so they not only sold the ball to better than usual advantage, but they netted fifteen cents more on each ticket. Naturally they liked it.

With this working agreement, they staged a daily run to the theatre, where they ran ladders up to the roof and then tripped a banner for the show, and each evening they parked a steamer in front of the theatre for a ballyhoo and almost wore out the siren.

Fifty fire plugs were carded, (which would have landed Olson or anyone else in jail at other times,) and a man in uniform was detailed to address all school classes on Fire Prevention, winding up with the announcement of a special children's matinee.

When H. G. gets his mind set on a job it is done in a workmanlike fashion. He had his mind on this one. Twenty special windows were just a side issue.

Four Chairs—No Waits

Charlie Morrison, of the Imperial theatre, Jacksonville, used the free haircut stunt on Johnny Get Your Hair Cut, only he had four chairs on the sidewalk in front of the house and all four barbers were hard at work all afternoon. Jackie Coogan peanuts and other Coogan branded toys were given the youngsters at the matinees only, and on a two-day run Morrison got in 2,738 youngsters. And every last one believes that he is Santa Claus' first cousin.

See First Photoplay In About Ten Years

When G. R. Stewart played Tell It to the Marines at the Sterling theatre, Greeley, Col., he learned that the parents of the Marine after whom the local Legion Post was named had not seen a picture since their boy was killed. He persuaded them that the dead man would have urged them to go to help the Marines. They finally consented to be the guests of honor at the first showing, and received an ovation, their story having been told in the papers. Handled in a dignified fashion the stunt was not offensive and did form a very pretty tribute to the parents of a hero.

An exploitation man came down from Denver with a number of men from the Recruiting Service there, and they gave color to the house with their uniforms, and picked up a couple of recruits.

The exploiteer also persuaded the Legion and National Guard to parade for the picture.

Capitalizing the painted sweater idea, Stewart gave 500 tags reading merely "Tell it to the Marines" to the High School boys, who wore them for several days.

And finally Stewart got about 50 kids in a dog parade, a banner explaining that these were "devil dogs" going to see Lon Chaney. It gave a desirable comedy relief to the campaign.

Michael Was Lucky

Declaring that Michael Strogoff was far safer in his trip across Siberia with only the wolves and the Cossacks to face than the pedestrian of today made Mike the runner up in a safety first campaign when he played the Exkel theatre, Syracuse, N. Y. Prizes were given careful drivers, or rather the least careless, and school children were lectured on being careful.

With the Chamber of Commerce behind it, the idea went over big.

Played Hard on It

G. R. Stewart, of the Sterling theatre, Greeley, Col., used two boys to take It around town. One boy carried the I and the other the T, white letters in a red ground. The letters were provided with feet so they could stand alone. The boys would park them on a street corner and retire a few feet, but would pick them up presently and carry them on to the next corner.

The availability of the title got Mr. Stewart 36 windows, using inserts, 22x28s and regular stills to illustrate "We have IT," it being anything from the best brand of coffee to a red necktie, each possessing the mysterious quality.

The receipts went up to the top with very little cost.

USING A FIRE TRUCK FOR A PRAM IN MINNESOTA

The Garden Theatre, South Hibbing, got the use of a truck on which to perambulate a pair of three sheets for The Fire Brigade. Of course if the truck had run to the fire—but there was no chance, for there were no fires.

Fire Brigade Clicked Strong in Reading, Pa.

Trio of Hustlers Had Aid on Fire Brigade

All over the country the Fire Chiefs are keeping their promise to get back of The Fire Brigade at local showings, but in Reading, Pa., they were aces up. Howard W. Foerste, house manager, had the aid of Thomas Mason, from the M-G-M Philadelphia office and Earle Homan, his own publicity man as well as all of the city departments to put the picture over at Loew's State Theatre.

Ten weeks in advance they started plugging in the house program with screen teasers for four weeks in advance. A 12 by 40 foot banner was put on the house front ten days before the showing and later this was augmented by a 24 by 40 foot banner across the street, as shown in the photograph.

The fire department placed 5,000 blotters, as many stickers and Chief Neithammer personally handed out 3,000 buttons at a series of fire prevention talks at the public schools and inspected the fire drill at each school.

The Chief also announced the picture at a meeting of the Firemen's Union and the Berks County Safety Council urged all its members to get behind and push.

The Chief also loaned a collection of about 75 pictures of old time apparatus and companies, the best of which were used for a lobby display while others were laid off to various windows, two of which are shown in the cut. The newspapers wrote up these pictures and also used photographs of Chief Neithammer, Lieut. Bowman and State Fire Inspector Franks congratulating Manager Foerste in front of the theatre.

A local cameraman arranged an interesting prologue of old time companies and old time runs which made a local interest prologue, and the vividness of the presentation was heightened by three sirens loaned the trap drummer.

Each night some of the fourteen fire companies attended and there was a special matinee for the children Saturday morning.

With six newspaper specials, two art layouts and taxi spare fire cards they managed to keep the house filled.

Movie School Work

B. F. Hyde, Jr., of the Howell Theatre, Palatka, Fla., is solid with the high school students.

When he booked in The Scarlet Letter he sold the teachers in the English department on the idea of giving two points credit to all who saw the picture and an additional three points for each essay. The only student who was not at the theatre was homesick.

Used Holdover Cutout For New Lloyd Comedy

Using a cutout from the 24-sheet on For Heaven's Sake got a fine marquee attractor on The Kid Brother for J. M. Wiest, of the Tampa theatre, Tampa, Fla.

The head was large enough to be seen four blocks from the theatre, and with a flasher lamp in one eye the winker gave a strong attraction value. It worked just as well as one of the Kid Brother sheets, and gave Mr. Wiest a pair of these to perambulate on a truck.

The truck not only covered Tampa but went into the outlying towns and helped to bring in the auto trade on the newest Lloyd picture, holding business above the average for the four day run.

All Wool

To put over The White Black Sheep, Lee Levy, of the Capitol theatre, Reading, Pa., penned four sheep in his lobby. He tried to get a pair each of white and black, but the best he could do was to get some sheep so dirty that you could make your own decision as to whether they were white black sheep or black white sheep. Anyway it got the crowd for the Barthelmess picture.

PUTTING OVER THE FIRE BRIGADE AT LOEW'S STATE THEATRE, READING, PA.

The top line shows the house with two banners and a fire drill as staged by Chief Neithammer at all schools, following a fire prevention talk. Below are two of the windows obtained by the use of old-time photographs from the Chief's Collection, and the Chief, Lieutenant Bowman and State Fire Inspector Franks are congratulating Manager Foerste.

Gets a Good Newspaper Space With Type Alone

THE CASTLE FRONT IS REVIVED FOR BARDELYS

Frank H. Burns, of the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Florida, used this sketchy castle for Bardelys the Magnificent and sold the idea of a costume play without having to go into details. The centre panel is a shadow box.

Gets Better Ad Spaces By Dropping the Cuts

P. Doblin, of the Prospect Theatre, Flushing, N. Y., sends in a two fours that we are making a special place for it.

Doblin, who is a graduate of the Publix School for Theatre Managers, can use only a two fours, and with a heavy signature, necessary to sell the house, he has very little space for cuts, even when he can get them approximating his allowance.

Made His Lobby Over Into a Hotel Office

Selling tickets from the desk of the Hotel Imperial was the way H. M. King, Jr., put over the Pola Negri production at the Imperial theatre, Asheville, N. C.

Discarding the regular box office, he sold from a desk placed in front of the kiosk, this being backed by a painting of the usual letter box background. A couple of satchels in front, a few easy chairs, borrowed from a local hotel, and a transparent sign for the Western Union; the sort they used in hotels gave the lobby more the appearance of a hotel office than a theatre, and to heighten the illusion Mr. King borrowed some bellhop suits from one of the hotels to equip his ushers and doormen.

The decorations took up very little room and yet the metamorphosis was complete. The big selling angle was the surprise the lobby created in the minds of patrons. It looked so different as to suggest a different sort of play:

Skating Perambulators Sold The Red Mill Well

There was skating up the Hudson when Charles R. Hammerslough played The Red Mill at the Broadway theatre, Newburgh, and the annual skating races were on, so Mr. Hammerslough put out a couple of bannered boys to circulate around between races and advertise to the large crowd. Copy referred to the skating race in the picture.

A BOX OFFICE MILL

The cut shows how Mr. Hammerslough made over his box office. This is a window office. And island box office can be done over even more effectively. In that case you can have the fans revolve, which would be still more effective.

Lolipops

Edgar Hart's last special party at the Colonial Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H., was a lolipop party. It was held on a stormy day, but most of the kids in town turned up and they had a wonderful time.

You can buy lolipops, but a theatre lolipop is something else again. They tasted better.

"THE WINNING OF BARBARA WORTH" IS GREAT!
SEE IT TO-DAY

DOBLIN'S TWO FOURS

So he rolls his own, and we think that this particular space is a polished gem. It does not slop words all over the surface, it does not employ a lot of empty adjectives, but it does give you an idea that The Winning of Barbara Worth is a picture that should get your money.

Get the text, the display and the combination of the two. It's a fine example of all-type and John F. Barry should be proud of his alumnus.

What are you doing about Easter? That comes next. Get busy now.

HERE'S A NOVELTY—A BICYCLE RACE IN MIDWINTER

This was staged between the boys of two telegraph companies to put over Michael Strogoff in Ottawa. Mike beat it across the Siberian snows with a message. These boys tried the Ottawa brand. It got half the town out.

Copper Stubbed His Toe and Served a Summons

Gets Good Effect With Simple Type Equipment

H. C. Bamberger has been transferred to the Farragut Theatre, Brooklyn, where he gets more chance to do things. He sends in three recent examples of his work, two are good and one of which is better than that.

We cannot reproduce this last, as it is on colored stock, but it is a small throwaway with the upper half cut into nine squares by four solid black squares of the sort you can get from the type foundries. These are about an inch and a half square.

The width of the type is three times that of the block so that the use of one square each on the first and third lines, centered, and two squares on the sides of the middle line cut the space into nine equal portions with two type spaces top and bottom and one on the centre.

If these squares did no more than get attention, they would be worth while, but the centre space says "Not a puzzle. Just plain facts," and you get this line just as you are wondering what the puzzle is going to be, because it looks like a puzzle. The other four type areas are given to sales talk on program, service, the music and the atmosphere. The bottom gives the coming attractions. Try and visualize this and you'll like it.

The other pieces are a bogus check, nicely done on safety paper, and a "First Warning" on a baggage tag to be tied on cars. It is not in the least like any police printing, so it does not carry the unpleasant reaction that put the auto police card out of business. Of course the warning is that you'll miss a good show if you "fail to appear" to see "Held by the Law." The title is what helps to give a kick to the card, but we think that a first warning will go even where the summons card is hurtful.

Startled Students

Norman, Okla., is a college town. One noon, just as the students were coming from their classes, the entire Fire Department dashed onto the campus, the apparatus being bannered for The Fire Brigade. Sure it got the business, both student and town.

HOW LOEW'S STATE THEATRE, CHICAGO, PLAYED OUR GANG

This was the Gang's sixtieth picture, Love My Dog, but most of the Gang pictures are headlined because they get the crowd in. Nothing much new to this picture, but George Reddy asked us to run it, and he's a good scout.

Brooklyn Manager Gets Action on Good Stunts

Leonard Freund, of the Century Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., made a cutout of Beery and Hatton in We're In the Navy Now get him a record two day business. He also used the rear view pictures for his advance publicity, and oddity of the pose helped to gain interest.

The best bet, however, was a tie up to the Naval Militia whereby he obtained the loan of an interesting collection of small arms for a lobby display, and in the evening uniformed members of the militia stood guard in the lobby.

This is a good hint where you have a naval militia and no Recruiting Service.

Freund rolled in the coin like a policy man in a negro quarter. Nothing but.

Hurt Copper's Toe So Received a Summons

There was an unintended finish to a stunt used by Charles R. Hammerslough on McFadden's Flats at the Broadway theatre, Newburgh, N. Y.

Hammerslough put out 500 bricks labeled: "Irish confetti. This is one of the bricks from McFadden's Flats; Charles Murray and Chester Conklin, tenants," with the house and date.

Most of these were left on doorsteps, but a few were scattered about the street to attract the pedestrian. All might have gone well had not a policeman stubbed his toe on one of the bricks.

He served a summons on the manager, who had to appear in court and pay a nominal fine that was worth more since it brought a good story in the local paper speculating what the officer would have done had it been someone else's toe instead of his own.

To follow this up Mr. Hammerslough had a hod carrier with a load of bricks in a lettered hod. The sign explained he was on his way to build McFadden's Flats, not forgetting to explain that the flats were at the Broadway.

Local Appeal

The other day Edgar Hart sold the news reel over the feature at the Colonial Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H. The reel had a scene at the local Navy Yard. All the rest of the show was just filler.

TWO OF THE STUNTS WORKED FOR THE FIRE BRIGADE AT THE TEXAS THEATRE, SAN ANTONIO

Every fire house was bannered for the M.-G.-M. and the apparatus was freely used for ballyhoo. The fire department band gave concerts in front of the theatre, and the Chief figured that it did the department as much advertising good as they gave the house. This is one hook-up that seems to be working the full one hundred per cent.

The chiefs are making good.

An Attractive Series for Flesh and the Devil

Close Setting Hampers A Second Week Display

Close setting does not materially hurt this space from Loew's Columbia Theatre, Washington, D. C., on the hold over of The Winning of Barbara Worth, but it does not help display. Cutting those two lines of bold Gothic just below the top line would have given much more prominence both to the hold-over and to the title, and it would have told as much in eight point lower case Roman.

TOO CLOSELY SET

It may have made no difference in the ticket sales, but it certainly does not help. The setting of the sales talk in two columns removes what might have been a real detriment. This space is a three fives, and an eight point line five and a half inches long would have been entirely too long.

The design has been well planned and forms a nice attractor. Here the close spacing does not matter so much, since the title was put over when it was being sold for the first week.

Made Special Design Replace Extra Space

Lem Stewart, of the Publix home office, was one of the first to appreciate that Flesh and the Devil was going to do a little history writing. He saw it, of course, preview, and several weeks before the picture came into the Capitol Lem had sent out word that here was a picture all and sundry could boot up into nice figures with a little diligent application.

Publix managers have learned that Lem knows what he is talking about, and among others Pat McGee of the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, decided to splash up a little.

Splashing does not mean extra spaces around Pat's office. He knows he can do as much with less space if he makes it different, and so Pat decided to make the shape and style of his ads so different that the customers would begin to suspect that Pat was shooting something.

The three spaces shown at the bottom of this page are respectively four, six and five inches across two columns. All carry the same slanting double rule, and these and two or three others all carry a different cut. If you will look closely, you will see that Pat mentions a New Year's Eve preview, from which you will gather that he was unable to talk about the New York run, but he remarked with confidence in Lem's judgment that it was going to take place with The Big Parade, Variety and Beau Geste, and now he is in position to say, "I told you so."

For the opening he used a double column space a little more than fifteen inches deep, carrying the same rule work and all three of the cuts shown on this page. As he was fighting The Big Parade, which had a full two columns right alongside, he needed to make a showing, and the use of the rule and the three cuts crystallized the excellent advance displays. It was a nice accomplishment, and it had its natural result at the box office. And the best part is that it was done without costly art work and with very little cut. The design is what carried the set over.

Puts Over Its Appeal In Powerful Display

There is a good strong wallop in this four tens from the Fox Terminal Theatre, Newark, N. J. You get a large "John Gilbert," you have the title in letters that are not to be denied. You get the pictures of three beautiful women, with their well-known names in clear lettering. If these cannot lead you direct to the box office, we do not know what can, for there is still magic in Monte Cristo, and there is appeal in the star names, even though we never would recognize Gilbert from his portrait.

NICELY LAID OUT

You can't get away from that space. It's either very black or very white, and each helps the other. The star and title are given plenty of white space backing, instead of just a fringe, and it makes the rest of the dramatic page look like a bunch of three sheets trying to fight a twenty-four.

We cannot altogether admire the all-cap lines at the top of the space, nor the over-long eight point to the right of that "remember," but the printer's errors may be forgiven in view of what the artist has done.

As a general thing it is the artist who messes up the average space, but whoever planned this art design and took the pains to letter in so clearly deserves special commendation. It is one of the best examples of really good art work we have seen of late. And it might be noted that the artist is trying to sell the picture, not to show what a fine design he can make.

Loew Baltimore Theatre Follows Boston Style

Baltimore Theatres Take Up Type Faces

Now the Loew Theatre in Baltimore, the Valencia, seems to be following the Loew Boston Theatres in the use of type faces and has developed a series of displays using an outline in eighteen point and larger. If you have good memories and white whiskers you probably can remember when this was the only display type permitted in the New York Herald. If you have no hair at all you possibly can recall when even this was taboo and you had to make your display letters from eight point caps, making an inch high A from eight point As, and the C from the same letter in the smaller point. This seems to be getting back to early principles, but it makes a nice display and it can run any art work on the page up a tree.

OUTLINE DISPLAY

Of course if all advertisers on the page used the same face, the advantage would promptly disappear, but until the other advertisers do come in, the Valencia has the best of the page with no cost for art work. But if the use of this face is to be continued, we hope that the house signature will be redrawn to at least an inline if not an outline letter. As it stands, the signature is a blot.

It seems to be the house idea to make this heavy signature and equally heavy price schedules, (which have been cut out on this reproduction,) serve as top and tail pieces to hold the display together. It would be better to lighten up or else to use a solid rule border. The latter device would give even greater emphasis to the outline faces, which are now partly dependent upon the adjoining advertisements for their display value.

There is a new inline face on the Ludlow machine that gives even better results. Why not ask your printer about it? If he has it, it will pay you to turn from cuts for a time. When the others follow you in, you can turn back to cuts and still be ahead of the gang.

Ever since the show business was invented, the showman seems to have turned to the blackest type to be had. It is pleasant to find the Loew houses appreciating the fact that light faces are sometimes the best display.

Laughing Multitude A Frame for Keaton

This three twelves, from Loew's Theatre, Reading, Pa., is based on a plan book cut or else works up a mat into a house display. It seems to be the former, as most of these cuts appear to be smaller. Buster's serious face gains emphasis through a sea of laughs, and the story is very simply sold on the suggestion that Buster will be "Master of laughs" while a Hal Roach comedy will supply the accessory giggles.

IN THE PLAN BOOK STYLE

Setting the house announcement in only 15 cms gives a rather small share of the space for display and entails the use of a severe gothic for the star, as being the only thing that would give full display in that width. Any fancy letter would have been too small, since few fancy letters are as condensed, but the message is gotten over and chief reliance is placed on the laughing heads, which probably sold the idea. It is to be questioned whether the space carried full conviction

Another Good Example In the Use of Whites

Here's another display from Warner's State Theatre, Pittsburgh, done by A. K. Hoel. This is a two eights, which is smaller than a recent display of The Third Degree, but he gets pretty much the same display value.

This cut is not as well done as that of Miss Costello in the recent sample. It lacks strength and character as well as likeness, but it serves well enough as an attractor, and the type display is good because the three big lines are not compelled to fight through a mass of heavy set sales talk. You get the star, his play and his support at the first glance and then go on to read about the vaudeville features and the play itself. We think that another half inch drop would have helped, since then the sales talk could have been set in eight point instead of six, but otherwise the appeal is decidedly good.

Addison Follows Kiddies With Their Older Sisters

Recently we reported big business gained by H. A. Addison at a kiddie frolic at the Binghamton, (N. Y.) theatre, but he rolled up the biggest gross of the season with a local Revue using the older girls and tied in to a popularity contest. The winners got the star parts and some valuable prizes, the voting being done by means of ballots clipped from one of the local newspapers; which eased his advertising costs and yet gave the paper a better break with a good circulation stunt.

Fifty local girls were employed, and Addison got a set of ten wonderful stories with four cuts to each.

If you are overlooking the occasional use of local talent, you are booting real money into the gutter. Addison could have made no more money had he offered two roadshows as a double bill, and the cost was very much smaller. You'd be surprised.

Story of the formation of the famous regiment of "Rough Riders" by Theodore Roosevelt and the stirring part they played in the Spanish-American War; into which is woven a romance between a soldier and a nurse and excellent comedy relief. A big stirring super-feature, spectacular, amusing, thrilling audience entertainment.

PRODUCED on a lavish scale, with a cast unusually well selected, and following closely the historical records of the Spanish American war, Paramount has produced a sumptuous and often absorbing picture in their epic, "The Rough Riders." This is designed to take its place with "Old Ironsides" as a contribution to the historical pageant of the films, and it would be difficult for the historian to find fault with the details of this picture. But precisely therein lies the one handicap of the picture as entertainment. The history intrudes upon the intimate story of the cast or, if you prefer, the love story crowds on the heels of history.

The result is a loss of some degree of interest in the story as a story, yet the picture remains vitally interesting and in its second half a gripping glimpse of war as it was in 1898.

There really are three divisions of interest in this story, the historical narrative itself, the love story and the comedy story of the Sheriff and his intended victim. This in its turn makes for a certain division of the interests that detracts to some degree from the effect. In "Old Ironsides," the major interest lay in the comedy story, with the romance but slightly interfering and history merely the stirring background. In "The Rough Riders," Roosevelt, the sweethearts and the comedians pull apart instead of together and instead of the strong sweep of a single thread of story to its appointed end, the three factors are developed simultaneously.

But this is not saying that "The Rough Riders" is not strong drama, fine comedy and history made intimately interesting. The trouble is that it is all three.

The story starts with Roosevelt, then Assistant Secretary of the Navy, preaching against the lack of preparedness and our dillatoriness in meeting the Cuban situation. The Maine is sent to Havana and is destroyed. The country clamors for retaliation, but Congress and the bureaucrats are slow to act. The Secretary of the Navy takes a vacation while awaiting the result and Roosevelt, temporarily in charge, "puts water under everything that can sink, swim or float."

War against Spain is declared and Roosevelt and his friend, Leonard Wood; then of the medical corps of the army, are offered the eagles in the first two volunteer regiments to be raised. But Roosevelt declines the commission to become Lieutenant-Colonel in the regiment Wood is to raise, and together they start to assemble the Rough Riders at the training camp on the old Exposition Grounds at San Antonio.

Bert Henley, a local boy, is moved to enlist. Stewart Van Brunt, another volunteer, has seen Dolly, Bert's heart's choice, and falls in love. There is some rather stressed action in which he follows her with his entire company and a generally violent courtship in which Dolly is divided between her growing regard for Van Brunt and her sense of loyalty to Bert.

Happy Joe, fleeing from a Sheriff, who wants him for horse stealing, enlists just one jump ahead of the Sheriff's arrival, so the Sheriff Hell's Bells, enlists in order to follow his victim, to claim him after the mustering out.

There is a wealth of comedy between these two, the comedy of the shaking down of the cowboys into a cohesive regiment and the somewhat hectic affairs of Dolly and her two admirers. There is an amplitude of incident, but comparatively little plot advancement in the first half.

The regiment lands in Cuba and soon goes into action, following the famine of poor military stores and the pestilence of jungle fever.

Then comes the attacks on San Juan. The regulars are sent ahead while the Rough Riders are held in reserve. Bert, of highly nervous organization, goes to pieces under the first attack. Van Brunt, half pitying, half contemptuous, points him out to the Sergeant, and Bert is sent to the rear with one of the wounded men, and told to stay there.

His charge dies on the way to the hospital base and his words, "They can't call me a coward if I die trying," galvanize Bert into action. In an ecstasy of emotion he runs toward the front, past his regiment and on toward the objective on Kettle Hill. His comrades, fired by his example, follow him, and Roosevelt, now Colonel, and chafing under inaction, is nothing loath to follow their example. Bert and his fellows break the line, but he is wounded, and the compassionate Van Brunt carries him in his arms back to the base. This is one of the finest sequences produced in any war play, though a trifle overlong. It is in itself an epic, and barring an almost interminable trip back to the base; which runs too long to fully sustain the sympathy, which is carried beyond the high tension, it is splendidly directed.

Bert dies that night—a hero. When the war ends Van Brunt carries the news to Dolly. With singular good taste there is no love making at this point, but when the story ends, with the inauguration of Roosevelt in his own right as President, Van Brunt and Dolly come to the reception with two children; which naturally meets the approval of the most famous opponent of race suicide.

Frank Hopper, as Roosevelt, gives a fine character study. He emphasizes the human side of the man and both he and the director avoid the temptation to overdraw mannerisms. He suggests the dynamic personality without making it appear ridiculous through overemphasis, and Hopper's impersonation compares very favorably with the actual shot of the Inaugural scenes.

An almost equally difficult role is that of Bert, played by Charles Emmett Mack, who even in the earliest scenes gives the character drawing which motives his temporary cowardice in action and makes the man understandable without being despicable. He has been aided toward this end by the scenarist, but it is as much his own work as the character he is interpreting that holds sympathy for him. Charles Farrell is a dashing Van Brunt, audacious, masterful; just the type to win the regard of the demure Dolly, which is colorfully played by Mary Astor.

Noah Beery and George Bancroft handle most of the comedy with the practised touch of veterans. Beery is just a trifle too suggestive of the stage westerner in his make-up, but Bancroft as the lovable horsethief who is elected to the shrewdness by an appreciative constituency, carries his role with an easy dash and a winning good humor.

Col. Fred Lindsay is excellent as Leonard Wood and Fred Bohler is the almost-inevitable hard-boiled top sergeant.

While the story value is questionable, there is no room for argument as to the drawing power of the picture. It has a vital interest entirely apart from the fiction story.—E. W. S.

"Hot Air"

Universal—One Reel

IN THE NEWEST offering in the series of single reel Blue Bird Comedies featuring Charles Puffy, he appears in the role of a lover who is peeved because his sweetheart is fascinated with a French aviator. This fellow takes the girl up in his plane and Puffy decides to go up in another one. By accident he gets in a plane with another prospective passenger, each thinking the other is the pilot. In some unexplained manner the machine takes to the air and cavorts all over the sky finally landing a total wreck but with its passengers unhurt. This is one of the best of the recent Puffy comedies. There are a number of amusing situations, and considerable thrill stuff in the near collisions of the two planes. It is excellent stunt flying. Elsie Tarron appears as the girl and is entirely satisfactory.

AS THE OPENING ATTRACTION for his new multi-million-dollar 6,200-seat Roxy Theatre S. L. Rothafel selected "The Love of Sunya" a picture which also has the distinction of being not only Gloria Swanson's first to be produced by her own organization but also her initial release through United Artists Corporation.

Adapted from a stage play "The Eyes of Youth" which also served for a picture made several years ago, "The Love of Sunya" is built around the perplexities of a modern girl in choosing the right path to happiness. In structure, it is episodic drama with a prologue, then the running plot with two complete stories worked out to a conclusion showing what would happen to her if they chose certain paths, and then a short conclusion which acts as an epilogue, in which she chooses the right path to happiness, the path of true love.

Never has Miss Swanson had better or more varied opportunities, for during the course of the story she is called upon to assume many different contrasting roles, as a modern girl, as the wife of a millionaire, as a down and out woman of the streets, as a temperamental opera singer, etc., and in every character her work is excellent and in each phase she has fine opportunities to display real histrionic ability. The supporting cast is thoroughly capable, especially Andres DeSegurola a grand opera singer in the kindred role of an impresario, but the other players are but feeders to Miss Swanson who really carries the whole picture.

While the idea of the prologue and reincarnation may not appeal to some and there are several quite implausible twists in the modern story, the novelty of its construction adds to the audience interest. Admirably directed and acted, the theme gets an early hold on the attention and the interest is held tensely up to the end of the episode with the impresario. Here is the weakest point in the picture, for the return to the crystal gazing and starting all over again to show another angle is distinct anti-climax and spectators are apt to wonder as to how many such episodes will be introduced before the final solution.

As the next episode gets under way, the interest again mounts and at the end of this one, the picture is brought to a swift happy ending by the heroine's immediate acceptance of her real sweetheart.

This picture is marked by exceptionally fine and clear-cut photography. There is a noticeable preponderance of scenes which are semi-close-ups with subdued backgrounds and the figures brought out in sharp contrast, and this emphasizes the dramatic action.

Notwithstanding its story and structural weaknesses, "The Love of Sunya" with its exceptional opportunities for Miss Swanson will probably appeal to her wide circle of fans and in addition, with its elements of novelty in treatment, it should prove a good box-office attraction in the majority of theatres.

In Ancient Egypt a maiden seeking refuge in a temple casts herself into a flaming pit to save herself from one of the priests who, according to the belief, must atone by finally bringing happiness to her. After several reincarnations we find the maiden as Sunya, a modern woman, perplexed as to which of several paths she should follow. The priest appears as a fortune teller and as Sunya gazes into the crystal she finds that disaster and unhappiness result whether she goes with DeSalva and becomes an opera singer or whether she becomes the wife of the millionaire to save her father. She decides to follow the path of true love and marry Paul, a young civil engineer, which the fortune teller means happiness for her and peace for his soul as well.

"The Show"

John Gilbert and Renee Adoree in a Virile and Melodramatic Story of a Continental Side Show

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Present

With Renee Adoree and Lionel Barrymore
A Tod Browning Production

CAST:

Cock Robin	John Gilbert
Salome	Renee Adoree
The Greek	Lionel Barrymore
Soldier	Edward Connelly
Lena	Gertrude Short
The Ferret	Andy McLennan

Length—6,309 Feet

Among the performers in a side show is Salome who is in love with Cock Robin, a scalawag and thief who is indifferent to her. The Greek, a fiendish villain, conspires to bring about Cock Robin's death during the act, but fails. Salome hides Robin when the police get after him and he finally realizes the beauty of her character and his own meanness. They find happiness together when a poisonous lizard intended to kill Robin turns on the Greek.

IN A ROLE TOTALLY unlike the dashing debonnaire characters that he portrayed in "Bardsleys the Magnificent," "Flesh and the Devil," and several of his other recent films, John Gilbert is starred as a tough and a crook, a barker and actor in a cheap side show in "The Show," his newest for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Playing opposite him is Renee Adoree, for the first time, we believe, since their joint appearance in "The Big Parade."

Gilbert plays the hole listed as Cock Robin, a swaggering fellow who is a devil with the ladies, conceited, irresponsible and of low moral fibre, who does not hesitate to exploit the women who fall for him. The plot centers around the rivalry between Cock Robin, who appears as John the Baptist in a side show attraction, and the manager of the show, an out and out villain, thug and murderer, over the love of the girl who plays Salome in the show.

Director Tod Browning has handled this story with his usual forcefulness. It is pretty strong melodrama, well directed and holds the attention. The unusual atmosphere and characterizations, the touches of comedy and real drama, go to make up a picture that holds the interest taut in the early scenes, although the later part is rather long, drawn out. There are several excellent punches, as when the Greek attempts to kill Robin, and fine sympathy in the role of the girl. This is strikingly brought out in her treatment of the blind soldier to who she writes letters purporting to be from his hero son who is really in jail condemned to death. It develops that the old soldier is her father and finally the beauty of her character even pierces the armor of indifference, conceit and stolidness of Robin and he realizes his love for her and his own unworthiness.

While the melodrama is forceful and the scenes well handled, there is an atmosphere of gruesomeness about the whole plot, as indicated in the cold-blooded murder of the sheep herder by the Greek who jokes about it and then makes two fiendish attempts to kill Robin, and in the hanging of the old soldier's son. Particularly is this true of the climactic scene where the lizard, whose sting is deadly poison, is introduced and shown squirming around the garret and down through a clothes closet until it is killed. Women as a rule will probably react unfavorably against this and consider it too horrible to be entertaining.

An exceptionally interesting part of the picture shows how the illusion of cutting off the head of John the Baptist in the Salome episode is worked.

Gilbert does fine work that will appeal to his fans, even though his role is an unsympathetic one. In fact, the only sympathetic role in the picture is that of Salome which is wonderfully well-played by Renee Adoree.

Lionel Barrymore, as the fiendish manager, gives a fine performance and succeeds in making the role of the Greek exceptionally repellent. The minor roles are all well handled.

"The Show" is exceptionally tense, forceful, well-constructed melodrama, but its reception by the average patron will depend on whether this outweighs the sordidness of the characters and story itself, and the gruesomeness of a number of the situations.

ADAPTED FROM A NOVEL by Kathleen Norris, "Mother," an F. B. O. production featuring Belle Bennett in the title role, has been transferred to the screen by J. Leo Meehan who has to his credit a number of successful audience pictures founded on Gene Stratton Porter novels, including "Keeper of the Bees."

"Mother" has many of the same elements of audience appeal as the Porter novels. It is an intensely sympathetic story of a modern mother and her problems with her family. The earlier part of the picture shows the poor household with the husband out of work, and mother sacrificing to enable her children to be like the other boys and girls and hold up their end, and encouraging her husband to keep up the fight. When wealth comes to him, her problems change and she finds instead of peace and happiness that she must continue to keep both her husband and son from falling prey to the lure of designing women.

Belle Bennett has a congenial role and gives an excellent performance and the supporting cast is thoroughly capable. There is a lot of good human homey stuff in the earlier scenes, the later development holds the interest and there is a well-handled melodramatic climax wherein both father and son caught in a train wreck as they are eloping, realize the error of their ways.

"Mother," despite elements of weakness and overplaying of coincidence, should prove strong in popular appeal and prove a good audience attraction.

"Love Makes 'Em Wild"

Florence Reyerson

Directed by Albert Ray

CAST:

Willie Angle	Johnny Harron
Mary O'Shane	Sallie Phipps
Blankenship	Ben Bard
Charlie	Arthur Housman
Barden	J. Farrell McDonald

Length—5,508 Feet

Willie, a spineless office plodder, is told by quack doctors that he will die in six months, so he proceeds to even up scores with those who have bullied him. A real doctor tells him that the only thing the matter with his heart is love and he proceeds to marry the girl. Amusing comedy drama.

THE TITLE OF THE William Fox feature "Love Makes 'Em Wild" when considered in connection with the name of the story on which it was based "Willie the Worm" gives a good idea of the type of picture. It is a breezy entertaining offering revolving around a bashful, plodding clerk who falls in love. This starts a series of complications which eventually result in his becoming a roaring lion as it were, bringing to him business advancement and the girl.

While not entirely true to life, and exaggerated for dramatic effect, it makes a story that has considerable pep and action, well-placed sympathy, a lot of amusing comedy and characterization, and should prove good entertainment for the majority of patrons.

The manner in which the office worm develops a heart affection which quack doctors tell him will result in early death starts him on an orgy of spending to get rid of the money he has laboriously saved up. This is pleasing material and the average spectator will enjoy seeing the way he manages to settle up the scores of those who have taken advantage of him.

Johnny Harron fits well into the role of the hero and Sally Phipps is an exceptional attractive and likeable heroine. Arthur Housman contributes a lot of good character comedy as the hero's blustering, buck-passing pal. In fact the entire cast contributes toward making this a genuinely pleasing and amusing light entertainment.

"What Every Girl Should Know"

Romance of Orphan Girl and a Millionaire Features Patsy Ruth Miller and Ian Keith

WITH PATSY RUTH MILLER and Ian Keith in the leading roles, Warner Brothers is offering "What Every Girl Should Know," the story of a poor orphan girl who was rescued from an institution by a millionaire and who finally became his wife despite the difficulties placed in the way by a socially ambitious woman who wanted him for her daughter.

It will be seen that the outline of the story follows along exceedingly familiar lines and in fact follows the trend of the old-fashioned human interest melodramatic romances of the stage. Charles F. Reisner, in directing it has endeavored to play up every angle of emotional appeal. There is a big brother, who though innocent is jailed as a bootlegger, and a little brother who gets sick in the orphan home and his sister disguises as a boy to come to see him. The heroine is shown as leaving the millionaire's home as the result of a woman's lies and becoming a champion tennis player, and of course there is the inevitable reunion. Frustration and coincidence both play important parts in building up the story interest.

The players do good work, although Miss Miller is not entirely convincing as the young girl. The significance of the title is not clearly brought out.

While the story is pleasing enough it lacks the element of reality with everything working out in approved romantic story book style with suspense entirely absent.

Length—4,134 Feet

Bill's father is murdered by a man who has stolen a map proving title to rich gold claims. After being jailed on a frame-up, Bill escapes, disguises as a Spaniard and locates the murderer, straightening matters out and winning the girl. Exciting action western.

WITH A TITLE THAT describes his role in the newest of the series of westerns in which he is being starred Pathe is offering Bill Cody in "Arizona Whirlwind."

The story concerns a chap whose father is fighting a crooked ring to bring justice to real owners of a gold mine. The father is murdered at the beginning of the picture and the identity of the murderer depends on the son discovering the party who stole the map which would prove the real ownership. The hero is framed for a stage robbery but escapes and by disguising as a Spaniard finally gets the desired information and all comes out O. K.

"Arizona Whirlwind" moves along at a good pace with plenty of action and all of the familiar material of the usual offering of its class, including rescues, holdups, fights and plenty of fine horsemanship. Cody handles his role satisfactorily and Margaret Hampton is attractive as the girl. The subordinate players are effective. This picture is an average program western that should prove satisfactory with the regular run of western fans.

FIRST NATIONAL'S "HIGH HAT" is an inside story of motion picture making in which the spectators are afforded the novelty of seeing the three featured players cast as extras and a wardrobe girl respectively.

The story is built around the experiences of a lazy extra who sleeps at the most opportune time and places, a wardrobe girl, and another extra who is a conceited crook known as "High Hat." It is a moderately amusing comedy drama with much of the footage devoted to inside stuff and considerable good natured fun is poked at temperamental directors, stars, etc., and their methods. The plot proper is satirical melodrama with a lot of hullabaloo over the theft of supposedly valuable pearls from the girl, which after wild excitement are recovered by the hero and found to be cheap imitations.

This, we understand, is Director Creelman's initial picture and he also collaborated on the script. He has certainly presented a comprehensive panorama of the inside of a big studio for the situations take place all over the place, from the street door to the rafters and this is one of the big angles of interest.

Ben Lyon appears as the lazy extra, while Sam Hardy is "High Hat" and Mary Brian is the wardrobe girl, and each are thoroughly satisfactory in their roles.

"Stark Love"

Interesting and Absorbing Drama of Primitive
Life of Mountaineers, Acted by a Native Cast

Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky Present
"Stark Love"
Direction and story by Karl Brown
A Paramount Picture

CAST:

Rob Warwick.....Forrest James
Barbara Allen.....Helen Munday
Jason Warwick.....Silas Miracle
Quill Allen.....Red Groban
Length—6,203 Feet

Among the backward mountain folk, Rob is ambitious and has learned to read. While away at the settlement his mother dies and his father plans to marry Rob's sweetheart, Barbara. Rob and Barbara finally make their escape. Dramatic story portrayed by real mountaineers.

DIRECTOR KARL BROWN went down into the Smoky mountains of Western North Carolina to make a film record of the inhabitants who still live according to the standard of their pioneer ancestors of a couple of centuries ago, practically untouched by the path of progress, and the result is shown in "Stark Love" which is being distributed as a Paramount picture.

"Stark Love" is a unique production. Unlike most pictures of its type dealing with primitive peoples, the customs and daily life of the inhabitants has been woven into a real dramatic story. Notwithstanding this fact, Director Brown has not used regular actors but chosen his players from the mountain folk, most of whom has never seen a picture or a theatre.

It will be a revelation to most people to know that such primitive people exist right at our doorstep. No attempt has been made to lighten the drabness and even unpleasant phases of their daily life. In fact the big scene hinges on the unpleasant situation of an ambitious boy and the girl he loves being pitted against the boy's father who simply desires to eventually marry her but in reality wants her as a drudge.

The picture is at all times interesting and the big situation is intensely dramatic and is made even more forceful by the stamp of realism. There is a flood climax and a happy ending and it should register with the average patron if sold to them as exactly what it is, and register strongly with high-class audiences.

Of especial interest is the excellent work of the native cast and the performance of Helen Munday as the girl is truly remarkable.

With no previous experience she gives an exhibition of restrained emotion in the climax that would do credit to many screen stars. Forrest James is good as the hero.

While the unpleasant angles of the story and the drabness of the life of these people may mitigate against it with the movie fan who is in search of familiar types of picture entertainment, "Stark Love" will appeal to the discriminating as a screen achievement.

The photography is excellent and there are a number of striking shots of the mountain country. Director Brown has certainly achieved what he set out to do. He has used great skill in making a dramatic and instructive record of the mountain folk among whom the women are drudges in the fields, etc., and the men take life easy.

A Major Differs From a Sergeant

A MAJOR in the army is a lot bigger than a sergeant—in power. So, in this Picture Chart, a major error is one that has power to hinder exhibitors in getting accurate information when they want it.

As a part of Moving Picture World's service to readers—the service that wins leadership and holds it—we send out a dollar to each reader who writes a letter to us pointing out major errors—footage changes we were not told about, incorrect review date, etc.

But not the little "sergeant" stuff, please. One chap wrote that there was a line shifted out of alignment a quarter inch at the bottom of a page. Think he was kidding, but you get what the difference is. We're glad to pay the dollars when you show us major errors—incorrect titles, wrong footages, calling a comedy a drama—those are major errors.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

Exhibition Information Direct from the Box-Office to You

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

Columbia

S. O. S. (PERILS OF THE SEA). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. Very good sea story and drew a good business both nights played. Many people stopped to tell me how good the picture was. Thanks, Columbia! Here's success to you. Draw general class, town 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

F. B. O.

ALL AROUND FRYING PAN. Star, Fred Thomson. A good western and something different. Story woven around Alturas wild west show and rodeo. Tone O. K. Suitable any day, not special. Draw general class, town less than 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre, Cloverdale, California.

BIGGER THAN BARNUM'S. (8,361 feet). Star cast. Just a good program picture. Plenty of good stars, but the picture was away off from being a special, as they claim it to be. Print fair. Draw big city classes. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

DUDE COWBOY. Star, Bob Custer. Different than anything I have ever run before. Bathing girls, western scenes, comedy, all packed into five reels of real entertainment. Print good. Tone O. K. Appeal very good. Sunday yes, special no. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

FLASHING FANGS. Star, Ranger (dog). Just a good program picture. Worth seeing and sold right. Tone good, appeal fair. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farm and merchant class, widely scattered town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

HER FATHER SAID NO. (7 reels). Star, Mary Brian. And the two clowns (excuse that remark, Cooke and Guard, but you're there and over when it comes to that!). This is a good box office attraction and hope to see Cooke and Guard in another feature comedy soon. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

KEEPER OF THE BEES. Star cast including Robert Frazer, Clara Bow and others. This is a fine picture from the story by Gene Stratton Porter. Some parts are sad but most of our patrons liked it. It is well acted. Tone O. K. Suited to any day, not a special. General class, town less than 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre, Cloverdale, California.

LADDIE. (6,051 feet). Star cast. Here is a real picture. Something different and should go over in any little town. Sorry I didn't play it for two days, as I had a rare crowd the one night. Tone good, appeal 95 per cent. Sunday, special yes. H. L. Beudon, Grand Theatre, Port Allegany, Pennsylvania.

LADDIE. (6,051 feet). Star cast. This drew people who seldom come and all praised it. Cold weather cut the attendance. Tone extra good, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday, special yes. Draw farm class, town 400. Admission 10-15. Ross S. King, Opera House (250 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

LAST EDITION. Star, Ralph Lewis. A sensational newspaper story by Emilie Johnson, well played. Lewis does some fine acting. Great fire scenes also. Tone O. K. Suited to any day. Special in some towns. General class, town less than 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (420 seats), Cloverdale, California.

Boys, we volunteer these reports as unbiased tips on pictures we have played. You can depend on us, as brother exhibitors, to play fair; these tips are not paid for—they are given to you for better booking your shows.

Because we set the example by sending tips we have the right to urge you to do likewise. If we are helping you, as we try to do, turn in and help us by sending your picture tips.

OUR GANG.

ONE MINUTE TO PLAY. Star, Red Grange. Very fine picture: we were late in playing this, so did not make any money. Draw town class, town 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

RED HOT HOOF'S. Star, Tom Tyler. Say, boy—this Tom Tyler is coming fast. The picture is very good and will please both kids and adults. Little Frankie Darro and his pals fine in this one. Draw town class, town 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

TIMID TERROR. Star, George O'Hara. Program picture and very weak at heart. Will just get by, that's all. Print good. Tone O. K. Poor appeal. No special. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

First National

DARK ANGEL. (7,211 feet). Just an average picture. Pleased some; others said "rotten." Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 15-25. New Cozy Theatre, Springfield, Kentucky.

IT MUST BE LOVE. (5,577 feet). Very good. Pleased 75 per cent. Patrons thought she was better in Ella Cinders, though. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 15-25. New Cozy Theatre, Springfield, Kentucky.

THE KID. Star, Charlie Chaplin. Old as the hills, but it sure packed them in. I have run this several times before, but with Chaplin on the front pages of the papers—oh, boy! How he drew! Appeal good. Sundays yes, special under circumstances yes. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

LADY IN ERMINE. Star, Corinne Griffith. This is a fairly good Griffith subject, but about one reel too long, making it draggy in spots. Corinne is as lively as ever in this role and will please her admirers. However, it hasn't as much entertainment value as some of her other pictures. Appeal 90 per cent. Special yes. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

A LUNATIC AT LARGE. (5,321 feet). Star, Leon Errol. Errol deserves better pictures than this, as that boy is a real comedian. Too much impossible stuff in this number; similar to what is found in two-reelers. However, it went over O. K., as we heard very few kicks. Good paper. Tone O. K. Appeal fair. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all sorts, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MASKED WOMAN. Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. A great audience picture with a lot of good advertising angles. Go after them. She will make good and make you money. Tone good, appeal very good. Sunday, special yes. Draw from masses, city 45,000. Admission 10 to 50. Johnny Jones, Orpheum and Washington Theatres (1,000 seats), Quincy, Illinois.

MEMORY LANE. (6,825 feet). Star, Conrad Nagel. A very good picture: well liked here. William Haines going strong. Book it and watch your patrons smile. Tone very good, appeal 95 per cent. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

RECKLESS LADY. (7,224 feet). Star, Belle Bennett. A good program picture. My patrons just rave over Lois Moran: let's have some more like this and we won't starve. Appeal 100 per cent. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

SCARLET WEST. (5,391 feet). Star cast. This is one picture that you can call an epic. Truly a special and it should make you some money. Print poor, but it rode through. Tone good, appeal very good. Sunday, special yes. Big city draw. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SEA HAWK. Star, Milton Sills. Old, but still a winner. If you haven't played it you are missing a good bet. Print fair. Tone, appeal good. Sunday, special yes. Draw big city types. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SILENT LOVER. Star, Milton Sills. A very good audience picture. Many shots and parts of story similar to Beau Geste, otherwise just what the masses want. Tone good, appeal very good. Sunday yes, special yes. Draw from masses, city 45,000. Admission 10 to 50. Johnny Jones, Orpheum and Washington Theatres (1,000 seats), Quincy, Illinois.

TRAMP, TRAMP, TRAMP. (5,830 feet). Star, Harry Langdon. This is very good and is way ahead of The Strong Man, star's second feature. Langdon is in a class by himself. Print good. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Fox

FLYING HORSEMAN. Star, Buck Jones. Good picture. Buck is getting better and the stories Bill Fox is giving him helps. Bill, give him some 24 sheets and heralds. Tone, appeal good. No special. Draw town class, town 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

THREE BAD MEN. Have reported on this before, but find that it is still getting me compliments, so wish to report again that this was one fine picture. People liked it and remember it and talk about it still. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

Metro-Goldwyn

WINNERS OF THE WILDERNESS. (7 reels). Star, Tim McCoy. Paper not much on this, but the picture itself is so much good entertainment of the George Washington days. Played February 22 and it sure did satisfy. Sunday yes, special no. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

Paramount

ACE OF CADS. (7,786 feet). Star, Adolphe Menjou. An excellent Menjou show, well acted and cast. This kind of picture is not what they want, though, in this town. Tone, appeal good. Not special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

ALOMA OF SOUTH SEAS. (5,584 feet). Star, Gilda Gray. A snappy South Sea Isle show with Miss Gray lending it its snap with her famous dance. Had a fair crowd. Tone, appeal good. Not special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

CAT'S PAJAMAS. (6 reels). Star, Betty Bronson. Not a bad feature: quite a plot to this. Majority liked it a lot. Had a fine turnout. Appeal 90 per cent. No as special. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

COBRA. (6,895 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. An old one, but will draw on account of star's death. Very good. R. Guy Bayes, Globe Theatre (275 seats), Buena Vista, Virginia.

NIGHT LIFE IN NEW YORK. LaRocque is new here, but he registered with a bang here. We made money. So will you. A dance scene a little raw for our patrons though. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 15-25. New Cozy Theatre, Springfield, Kentucky.

PALM BEACH GIRL. (6,918 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Bebe steps fast in this and she registers. Book it. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 15-25. New Cozy Theatre, Springfield, Kentucky.

THE POTTERS. (6,680 feet). Star, W. C. Fields. A great family comedy-drama. Get behind this picture; will please any audience unless they are stony. Sure fire comedy. Tone good, appeal great. Sunday, special yes. Draw from masses, city 45,000. Admission 10-50. Johnny Jones, Orpheum and Washington Theatres, Quincy, Illinois.

THE POTTERS. (6,680 feet). Star, W. C. Fields. Rental on this was ten per cent. higher than it should be for this small town. A picture worth seeing, but not a super-special by any means. Tone good, appeal only fair. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farm and merchant class, widely scattered town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

QUARTERBACK. Star, Richard Dix. A fine football picture, only we should have been able to play it earlier in the season. Miss Ralston acted fine in this picture. Tone, appeal good. Not a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SAY IT AGAIN. (5,577 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Very good picture: had better than the average crowd, as Dix has quite a following here. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw town and farm class, town 600. Admission 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

WET PAINT. (5,109 feet). Star Raymond Griffith. No good here. Ray don't draw any more. I cut the run down to one day and glad to get rid of it. Big loss on the one. Draw town class town 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

WOMANHANDLED. Star, Richard Dix. This sure tickled me and I believe gave complete satisfaction to all who saw it. It is a clever burlesque on westerns. I bore down hard on this fact and the fact that Dix stars; but attendance was rather light, due largely to the name, which would be no asset to any picture in this community. I sure would hate to get a crowd out to see Dix's Too Many Kisses here. I'm not quarreling with these two titles, which I presume were actually valuable in the big first run centers; but I am simply stating facts. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special barely. Draw village and rural class, town 400. Admission 15-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

Two Old-Timers Back

Henry W. Nauman, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania, and E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre, Kinsman, Ohio, have sent in reports after a spell of quiet that made a hole in their cycle of service; but they are as greatly welcome on their return as they were greatly missed because they always sent conscientiously thorough tips.

Pathe

DEVIL HORSE. Star, Rex. This is the best of this star's pictures and I liked it very much. I didn't do as well at the box office as I expected, but still consider the picture very good entertainment and worth about what you pay for Universal's complete service. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

Producers Dist. Corp.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. Dog star. Only a fair program picture. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

COMING OF AMOS. Good picture. Patrons well pleased. Appeal 80 per cent. Draw small town class. W. L. Snapp, Princess Theatre, Saint Charles, Virginia.

COMING OF AMOS. Star, Rod LaRocque. Six reels in good condition. Drew a good house. This is a good picture. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special almost. Draw general class, town 470. Admission 15-25. A. H. Mathias, Dillsboro Theatre (250 seats), Dillsboro, Indiana.

CORPORAL KATE. (8 reels). Star, Vera Reynolds. Very good picture. Pleased my crowd 90 per cent. and drew well, considering bad condition of roads. My only criticism is that it would be better if cut about 2,000 feet. Special, yes. Theodore Reid, Paramount Theatre (200 seats), Round Hill, Virginia.

DANGER GIRL. Star, Priscilla Dean. Program picture that will please; nothing to rave about, but it is good entertainment. Print good. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

FORBIDDEN WATERS. Star, Priscilla Dean. 6 reels. In good condition. Show was punk, nothing to it. I'd lay off, knowing it now. Tone, appeal none; special or Sunday no. Draw general class, town 470. Admission 15-25. A. H. Mathias, Dillsboro Theatre (250 seats), Dillsboro, Indiana.

GETTING GERTIE'S GARTER. A good picture. But too much like Up in Mabel's Room to prove particularly interesting to fans who saw the latter production. L. E. Brewer, Hamly Theatre, Pauls Valley, Oklahoma.

JEWELS OF DESIRE. This is not what you call a picture. Sorriest picture Priscilla Dean has ever played in: Cast her many more times in pictures like this and she will be in the back row. E. Brown, Princess Theatre, Shelby, North Carolina.

MADAM BEHAVE. Star, Ann Pennington. Six reels. This was a good show. Book this, boost it and listen to your crowd roar. Tone fair, appeal good. Sunday no, almost special. Draw general class, town 470. Admission 15-25. A. K. Mathias, Dillsboro Theatre (250 seats), Dillsboro, Indiana.

NERVOUS WRECK. Picture good, but failed to draw here. Oil field town. C. F. Benefiel, Rex Theatre, Panhandle, Texas.

ROARING RAILS. Star, Harry Carey. This has some good thrills, comedy, etc., but is marred by having the villain too villainous and melodramatic. Tone, appeal fair. Sunday, special no. Draw village and rural class, town 400. Admission 15-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

SEA WOLF. Star, Ralph Ince. Poor story, little appeal. Good acting by Ince, but it did not please my patrons. Very poor showing at box office. Theodore Reid, Paramount Theatre (200 seats), Round Hill, Virginia.

UNKNOWN SOLDIER. (7,979 feet). Star, Charles E. Mack. A fine picture that any type audience can enjoy. Boost it and clean up. Tone great, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday, special yes. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Charles Epler, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

UP IN MABEL'S ROOM. Very good. One of the best pictures shown by us. Masonic Theatre New Bern North Carolina.

VOLGA BOATMAN. Good. Played it in bad season and ran into bad weather but pulled a fair crowd. Advertised extensively. Maple Electric Theatre, Jeffersonville, New York.

WEDDING SONG. A wonderful picture. Coal mining district. Suits better class of people. Pleased about 80 per cent. W. L. Snapp, Princess Theatre, Saint Charles, Virginia.

WITHOUT MERCY. Star, Vera Reynolds. Seven reels in good condition. If the film had not been so dark this would have been a good show. Tone good, not much appeal. Sunday yes, special no. Draw general class, town 470. Admission 15-25. A. H. Mathias, Dillsboro Theatre, Dillsboro, Indiana.

United Artists

PARTNERS AGAIN. Star cast. Only fair. I paid a big price and, as usual, lost money. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

SPARROWS. (7,763 feet). Star, Mary Pickford. Best she ever made and certainly pleased everyone. Tone, appeal good. Sunday, special yes. L. R. Markum, Dream Theatre, Indianapolis, Indiana.

SPARROWS. Star, Mary Pickford. The best Pickford picture yet. Well liked here. Good attendance and fine comments. Tone fine, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday, special yes. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

Universal

BEAUTIFUL CHEAT. (6,780 feet). Star, Laura LaPlante. Good little picture; nothing big, but should get by any place. Tone good, appeal fair. Sunday yes, special no. Draw town and farm class, town 600. Admission 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

CALL OF COURAGE. Star, Art Acord. Good action picture. Extra fine acting by horse and dog. Pleases the kids and makes a fine Saturday night show. Is only five reels and requires short subjects to make a full program. Draw town, farm class, town 600. Admission 10-30. E. C. Silverthorne, Liberty Theatre, Harrisville, Michigan.

FLAMING FRONTIER. (8,828 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Carl wanted to do Hoot a good turn and spent a lot of money on this, and it's a good picture; but Hoot is badly miscast. Not the kind of a picture for Hoot. The picture is good, but not the big special that Universal said it was. Strong opposition prevented me from making any money. Draw town class, town 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

GOOSE WOMAN. Star, Louise Dresser. A very fine picture and one that you can make a lot of noise over and it will back you up. Every person should see it, as it has a wonderful moral lesson and provides fine entertainment value. Louise Dresser sure does some wonderful work in this. Tone good, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday yes, special yes. Draw town and farmer class, town 600. Admission 10-30. E. C. Silverthorn, Liberty Theatre (200 seats), Harrisville, Michigan.

MAN FROM THE WEST. (5 reels). Star, Art Acord. Good for double feature (small). This fellow Acord had some draw in my town when we played the serial In the Days of Buffalo Bill. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

MIDNIGHT SUN. Star, Laura LaPlante. A real special here: everybody pleased on this one. Draw town class, town 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

MIDNIGHT SUN. Star, Laura LaPlante. A very good spectacular picture. It should do business and it's a Universal picture suitable for the masses. Tone O. K. Appeal good. Sunday, special yes. Draw from masses, city 45,000. Admission 10 to 50. Johnny Jones, Orpheum and Washington Theatres (1,000 seats), Quincy, Illinois.

OLD SOAK. Jean Hersholt. A very good picture, but not one of Universal's best. Sunday yes, special no. Town 3,500. Admission 15-25. R. Guy Bates, Globe Theatre (275 seats), Buena Vista, Virginia.

PHANTOM BULLET. Star, Hoot Gibson. Just a western with lots of horses and men (also chases). Went over fine, considering type of story. Tone no, appeal 50-50. Sunday, special no. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

POKER FACES. (7,308 feet). This is a clever comedy and is one that people liked. I have a hunch that I would like to play poker with Horton, but they had no cards in this picture, so perhaps he might be less transparent across the table. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

PRICE OF PLEASURE. Stars, Virginia Valli, Norman Kerry, Louise Fazenda. An extra good program picture that far exceeded my expectations. More like this one and we are satisfied. Very good moral tone and all of the cast do very high grade work. Very interesting story all the way through. Draw town, farm class, town 600. Admission 10-30. E. C. Silverthorn, Liberty Theatre, Harrisville, Michigan.

ROLLING HOME. (6,811 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Good picture; lots of chuckles and laughs. I can't get them out on Denny, but his pictures are good and this is no exception. Draw town class, town 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

STILL ALARM. (7,000 feet). Star, William Russell. It's a Universal thrill picture: not so good as far as action is concerned. The title should, however, bring them out. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

TAKE IT FROM ME. Star, Reginald Denny. A flop. Poorest Denny seen here so far. Too bad, as this boy has had them 100 per cent. This brings down his batting average. Tone O. K. Appeal not so good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw from masses, city 45,000. Admission 10 to 50. Johnny Jones, Orpheum and Washington Theatres (1,000 seats), Quincy, Illinois.

TEASER. Star, Laura LaPlante. Very good picture. My audience enjoyed it immensely. Not a special, but can be bought right and will please. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes. Draw town, farm class, town 600. Admission 10-30. E. C. Silverthorn, Liberty Theatre, Harrisville, Michigan.

WHAT HAPPENED TO JONES. Star, Reginald Denny. This, like all Denny's, is good. He gets into all kinds of trouble with suspense to the end, which is, of course,

My Error

Just as well as you do, I know that Senor Daredevil with Ken Maynard is a First National Picture; how I ever let it get past among the Fox picture reports in the last issue is beyond me—but that was the case. Sorry. It won't happen again. VAN.

a happy ending. Tone O. K. Sunday yes, special in some towns. Draw general class, town less than 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (240 seats), Cloverdale, California.

WHERE WAS I? Star, Reginald Denny. A real comedy with lots of action. Everyone pleased. Many good comments on this one. I believe this to be as good as any of his other pictures. Tone good. Appeal 100 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw town, country classes, town 500. Admission 10-25. H. V. Ritter, McDonald, Theatre (275 seats), McDonald, Kansas.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING. (7 reels). Star, Everett Horton. A farce comedy with Otis Harlan causing the most laughs. Free doings in my town that evening and a lot of people spent their time there. Sunday yes, special no. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

WRONG MR. WRIGHT. This was fair—rather a silly comedy in some ways, but for those who like matrimonial mixups and mistaken identity stuff it will go over fine. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

Warner Bros.

BRIDE OF THE STORM. Star, Dolores Costello. Not her best, but a good program picture. Sunday yes. Admission 15-25. R. Guy Bates, Globe Theatre (275 seats), Buena Vista, Virginia.

DON'T TELL THE WIFE. (Star, Irene Rich. Good program picture. Poor box office appeal. Good tone, fair appeal. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farm and merchant class, widely scattered town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

HERO OF THE BIG SNOWS. Star, Rin-Tin-Tin. Dandy little picture. Thought the kids would raise the roof off several times. Kept me busy keeping them quiet enough so the older people could enjoy the picture. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Mr. H. L. Beudon, Grand Theatre, Port Allegany, Pennsylvania.

MILLIONAIRES. Star, George Sidney. A picture that was hardly program. Actors have nothing to do. Story most inconsistent affair you ever sat through: couldn't ever be. The comedy portions very good, but when they get to the drama—blah! They all work hard—Vera Gordon, Louise Fazenda and Nat Carr; but such a story! Well produced as regards scenery, costumes, etc. You're going to play it, of course, but run it with something else if such is the case and talk nothing but the other picture. Dave Seymour, Palm Beach, Florida.

Miscellaneous

FOREST HAVOC. Star, Forrest Stanley. It will do for a Saturday night if they are not too particular. Just a program show. The print we had was very dark in spots. Tone good, appeal fair. Not a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

RIDING WILD. Star, Kit Carson. Fair feature for Saturday night. Don't see why they don't inject a little comedy into these cheaper westerns. Hard for some people to sit through them with no comedy relieving the drama. Tone good, appeal Saturday. Sunday, special no. H. L. Beudon, Grand Theatre, Port Allegany, Pennsylvania.

WHITE MAN. (Preferred). Star, Alice Joyce. Sorry to see Alice Joyce in a picture of this kind, as they don't come any better than Miss Joyce. You can't pull people in unless you give them real entertainment these days. Tone O. K. Appeal 50 per cent. H. L. Beudon, Grand Theatre, Port Allegany, Pennsylvania.

Short Subjects

BIG BUSINESS. (Fox-two reeler). A lively number from Fox that kept the audience chuckling, which goes to show that Bill can put out a good one when he wants to. Tone O. K. Strong appeal. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

BUSY LIZZIE. (Educational-George Davis). Gag upon gag in such rapid fire action that the audience hardly had time to draw breath after one laugh before they were holding their sides again. There's a popping good start and a whirlwind finish that makes a real comedy. The polecat episode almost made 'em raise our roof. Tone O. K. Appeal 100 per cent. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

CHOP SUEY AND NOODLES. Below the average for an Aesop Fable. New Cozy Theatre, Springfield, Kentucky.

CONTROL YOURSELF. (Fox-Imperial). Star, Sid Smith. Is above the average value of the general run of slapstick. E. L. Partidge, Pyam Theatre, Kinsman, Ohio.

DON KEY, SON OF BURRO. (Pathe-comedy). Another comedy from Pathe that pleased. Print good. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

EVERY MAN FOR HIMSELF. Away below the average for an Our Gang comedy. Very poor. New Cozy Theatre, Springfield, Kentucky.

FELIX THE CAT. (Educational-cartoon). Very good one reelers for us. Good tone and appeal. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

JERRY THE GIANT. (Fox-Animal comedy). A new kid with animals that can't be beaten. Everyone said it was the best yet. Hope the rest of the series are half as good. Excellent tone, appeal 100 per cent. Ross S. King, Opera House (250 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

KISS PAPA. (Educational-Lige Conley). An excellent Mermaid comedy. Had plenty of laughs on this one. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

MIGHTY LAK' A MOOSE. (Pathe-Chas. Chase). Again Charlie pleases the people and keeps them in good humor throughout the length of this two-reel comedy. Chase comedies are gloom chasers. Very good appeal. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SILENT FLYER. Star cast. The dog in this is very good. In other words a good serial from Universal. R. Guy Bates, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

WINDOW DUMMY. (Pathe-Ralph Graves). A fair comedy, rather silly. Ralph Graves has made much better comedies than this one. Print good. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

WINNERS OF THE WEST. Old-time story. Too many better Indian and Revolutionary pictures today. This flopped; I'd leave it rest. Johnny Jones, Orpheum and Washington Theatres, Quincy, Illinois.

The Theatre of To-Day

Presentations ~ Prologues ~ Music

Edited by O. T. Taylor

"A Day in Acadia" Suggestion

A Moving Picture World Presentation Devised by O. T. Taylor

THAT a stage orchestra needs more than musical ability to get it over in the same house week after week is demonstrated in the fact that practically all of the successful organizations of this kind avail themselves of the added advantage made possible through staging and novelties.

Novelty, comedy and ideas in presenting the orchestra, coupled with musical ability, does more towards getting the orchestra across and making it a box office asset than is generally realized by managers, especially in the smaller cities and towns.

We know of actual cases where a novelty orchestra, playing two changes weekly backed by proper presentation, proved of box office value for eight weeks in a town of 20,000 people. The same identical orchestra, with but one change a week, playing the best theatre in a city of 100,000 population, lasted but three weeks; because improperly presented.

Staged in the same stock olio, the same old drop that the patrons had seen time and again, on each successive change, with no effort made by the manager to put it over, the orchestra simply did not have a chance.

The eye must be pleased as well as the ear. As one patron, in the small town referred to above, said: "I love to see a good orchestra on the stage, to see it work, to admire the settings and lighting effects. When I go to the theatre I expect these things. If I do not get them I stay at home and tune in on the air."

That expression comes perhaps as close to voicing public opinion as anything we have heard.

Competition in theatres are now as keen as in other lines of endeavor.

The Radio has no doubt cut in on attendance, but the Radio appeals to the ear only. Stage orchestra presentations should be made to appeal to the eye as well as to the ear and after all the former is as important as the latter. If this were not so where would the movies be today; movies, the silent drama appealing to emotions through the eye.

So we contend that novelties and ideas in presentation of orchestras are important enough to merit careful consideration.

The presentation herewith, although primarily for orchestra, may be made more pretentious by addition of singers and dancers. The following routine may be modified or expanded to meet the producers' requirements. To acquaint the producer with the nature of the musical composition suggested as a theme for this offering, namely, "A Day in Acadia," the synopsis, as it appears on the music, is herewith reproduced. Synopsis. The shadows roll away—Dawn—Birds begin to sing—Fishing boats put off—Church bell for matins—The mill—The Blacksmith shop—The Smith's song—Twilight—The cattle are driven home—The young people gather on the green—The country dance.

under big trees. The time is early morning. Stage in blue light; the moon sinking slowly below the horizon. Music is heard from the darkened blacksmith shop. Antante Misterioso. Amber lights up slowly inside shop revealing orchestra through scrim doors.

Magenta lights up gradually from floor bank behind the shop, illuminating sky in early morning glow as moon sinks out of sight. Birds begin to sing. A rooster crows. Allegretto Moderato. Amber lights up gradually in back. Distant barking of dogs. A spot of white from right hits church as bell tolls. Matin. Andante Religioso.

White spot on Village changing to flood as day breaks. Allegretto. Scrim doors on shop are pulled back, amber up gradually in front. The blacksmith enters through gate at left; he picks up the hammers, sparks fly as he hits the anvil. White lights coming up gradually in front as the orchestra plays the next three movements, Allegro, Moderato Robusto, Allegro, until full up. Andante. Sound of cow bells, the lowing of cattle, heard faintly as from some distance. White light dimming. Allegro. Amber light up as white dims out. Then magenta up for second Allegro movement.

As the theme of the last Allegro is a country dance an appropriate dance number may be introduced. Have dancers appear as cued in the music for country dance.

Where a singer is available, for the blacksmith role, a vocal solo, with orchestra accompaniment may be used as a second number on the program.

Additional numbers, popular, novelty, or comedy, are optional.

THE SETTING. Figures 1 and 2

A sky drop or cye, A, forms the backing. The moon pan hangs about half way up on the sky as drapes part. Two short ground rows, B and C, representing hills and a distant village, are set in front of the sky, left. The incline is masked with a hill raking piece, D. A few steps, stone, lead from a point on the hill, through the gate to the ground in front of the fence, G. Two huge trees, EE, mask in the entire scene.

The shop, F, is set with the open end off-stage right. Directly back of the shop may be placed a bank of lights for effects.

A number of props, such as a barrel, wheels, blocks of wood, iron scraps, etc., may be used to acquire a realistic rural effect.

The hammers and the anvil are wired in on a rheostat to produce sparks when hammers come in contact with the anvil.

Construction Details and Painting

Construction of trees, raking pieces, fences, etc., has been explained in detail in previous presentation suggestions.

A, B, D, figure 3, shows construction of blacksmith shop, consisting of flats of frame and muslin, painted to resemble old weather-beaten boards. The roof suggests aged tile. The doors, made of scrim over a light batten frame are made to slide off.

The back wall, inside the shop, as well as the inside of the end wall, may be flats, painted on the same order as the outside walls; or the entire inside, ceiling and walls, may be hung in a medium grey sateen as indicated by E, fig. 3.

Do distance, rows B and C, in blues, purples, pale orange and dark green. D is bright

For Stage Decoration

Here is a suggestion for a novelty stage decoration. Flowers made from pieces of colorful Cretonnes, Chameusettes, Voiles, etc. Decorative plants, like these, made up in a giant size, will prove an odd and effective addition to a dance or style show presentation. Use heavy wire as core for the stems, wind with green crepe paper or strips of green sateen. Cut odd shaped flowers from the material, mount on light card board and attach to the end of stems.

green, yellow, blue. Fence the same as shop walls. Foliage in spring tones of light and dark green, blue and yellow.

A moon pan, C fig. 3, can be made as follows: Cut two circular discs of wall board, six or eight inches more in diameter than the actual size of moon. Use one piece for the back, and the other for front. Cut out the center of the front leaving a rim of 3 to 4 inches in width. Space the front and back about 8 inches apart by means of small strips of wood, f. Cut a strip of wall board or heavy paper to fit around the edge of the pan. Cover the edge around the back and front with heavy paper tape. Wire in receptacles. A number of small lamps are necessary to procure even illumination. The rim prevents glare from the lamps showing through the drop. This one moon pan will also serve for almost any size crescent moon by simply filling in part of the opening with wall board for heavy light proof paper, as indicated by dotted lines.

The use of the platform is optional, depending largely on the number of musicians used.

"The Mysterious Voice"

large and small, and two marimbas, harp, piano, siren, chimes, sleighbells and most of the drum traps.

A skillful organist can work these stops and effects to get almost anything from the roar of the hurricane to the wail of a child, the starting of a locomotive or the yap of the hot dog browsing in the sauerkraut patches of Coney Island. Crawford has something else, which he calls the "mysterious voice." It sounds strangely like the human voice, and although he has been at the Paramount several months and the orchestra hears him four time a day, none of the players is ready to bet it is or is not a concealed singer. They change their minds about as often as they recount the votes in a Pennsylvania primary.

After the tour of inspection the visitors were seated in the upper balcony, where they could get the best effect, and Crawford took an extra trick at the console to make the formal opening. It all seemed quite impromptu, merely the orderly display of the various components, but he casually remarked later on that he had been at work on it until four o'clock that morning to get it just right.

Explaining with slides, he displayed the various groups and illustrated their merging in a series of short selections. It was intended primarily for the handful of visitors, but he received a hearty burst of applause from the matinee audience, which seemed to appreciate it equally well.

It is a far cry from the thin, reedy tones of the first of the movie organs to this splendid development. It is far more carefully tended than the average church organ, and two men are constantly employed to keep it in order and prevent "cyphers" or mute notes. The pipes must be kept voiced and the complicated wiring system held in perfect contact. Moreover, the pipe rooms must be as carefully watched as a baby incubator. The temperature must be neither too hot nor too cold and the air neither too moist nor too dry. Moisture will swell the pipes, dryness will crack them, and too great a change in temperature will alter the "voice" to some degree, so thermostats control the temperature and other automatic devices control the humidity. You do not exactly have to sit up all night with the organ, but two men do stay by it almost all day, not counting the organists.

A pianist is judged by his dynamics; his gradations in tones effected through his touch. The organist is judged by his effective use of stops. In the modern Wurlitzer he has a profusion of tones. His skill lies in their blending into rich harmonies. A first-class organist is like a skillful stage director. He must know his mass effects and work for an ensemble. He is an artist in tone color. He must understand the symphony orchestra, the military band and about all the sounds in and out of nature. Outside of that he's just the man who fumbles over the keyboard.

Following the demonstration adjournment was had to the Hotel Astor where a dinner was given in one of the private parlors, while the organ, now properly and officially opened, stayed behind to play the supper show. It was a nice party with Ed. Olmstead, Frank Cambria, director of productions; Nat. Finston, musical director; Jack McInherney and Russell B. Moon, of the publicity staff, helping to make things pleasant.

New Laboratory Devices Give Automatic Timing and Titles

TWO laboratory devices have been brought to this country and are being demonstrated in offices at 45 West 45th Street, New York, by M. Burlin, an official of the Film-Kopier-Werke Rapid, makers of the apparatus in Berlin.

While the company has in Germany four devices, only two have been placed on display in New York. The two shown are an automatic title making mechanism with an adjunct in the form of a separate device for absolute registration and centering of the title on the material used for the master copy, and a machine by which the timing and regulation of printing light intensity can be found and judged with absolute accuracy.

The automatic title making machine can be made to print five different titles under the control of a single operative, and is so finely adjusted that any given number of feet of film can be allotted to any title with automatic stopping and automatic recording of the exact footage used on each separate title and on the complete run. It is claimed that 35,000 feet of title can be made with this mechanism under the control of a single operative in eight hours.

With this machine is shown a very simple and compact little machine for determining and maintaining an exact centering and registration for master copy of all titles to be used on the larger titler.

A mechanism for determining the timing of printing and light intensity for different densities of negative is also demonstrated, and is not only shown to be exceedingly simple to operate, but also furnishes results that remove all former "guesswork" from the process of adjusting light and time in positive printing.

This is done by making a series of exposures of the same frame with varying light intensities, each frame being numbered in progression to correspond with the lighting. Selecting the best result, that number determines the light for that strip of negative. There is an accessory arrangement for viewing the negative in order to determine the frame to be printed from.

Two other devices not on display but now in successful operation in Berlin comprise an automatic printer which is said to be able to print five positives from a single negative at one operation and at the same time to incorporate titles in five different languages if desired in five positives; also a complete developing machine which is capable of handling, from development through cleansing, fixing and washing, a capacity of 120,000 feet of film per day under the control of two men and a girl.

In all of these devices the principal claim besides precision is the reduction of employees required for control as well as the need for fewer skilled operatives in their manipulation.

WEBSTER CITY, IA.—Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Schuneman, owners of Isis Theatre, recently destroyed by fire, plan to rebuild.

BAY CITY, MICH.—Bay City Theatre Company, Arthur C. Harrison, secretary and treasurer, has plans by John Ebersson, 219 East Superior street, Chicago, Ill., for two-story moving picture theatre and store building on Washington avenue.

ELIZABETH, N. J.—Wolcott Holding Company, H. Hopilowitz, president, has plans by J. Cutanni, 142 Market street, Newark, EFFINGHAM, ILL.—Syndicate comprising W. B. Kneidler, J. B. Green and J. E. Spaulding, of Mattoon and Taylorville, have purchased half block facing corner Fifth street and Washington avenue as site for proposed new moving picture theatre, store and apartment building. Capacity, $1,000. Estimated cost, $100,000.

TOLLESTON (P. O. Gary), IND.—A. Rudzinski has plans by M. S. Bittner, People's State Bank, East Chicago, Ind., for one-story moving picture theatre, 55 by 125 feet. Estimated cost, $55,000.

CHIPLEY, FLA.—J. C. Blackburn will erect two-story brick theatre on North Sixth street.

WOODSTOCK, ILL.—J. Miller has plans by Elmer F. Behrns, 605 North Michigan Boulevard, Chicago, for two-story brick and stone-trim theatre, 65 by 120 feet. Estimated cost, $100,000.

ZANESVILLE, O.—Dunzweiler Construction Company has contract for one-story theatre and store building, 90 by 140 feet, to be erected for Brown Theatrical Company. Estimated cost, $200,000.

I. P. A. Housewarming Is One of Season's Best Get-Togethers

Throughout the country there are various organizations in the technical department of the motion picture industry which are doing good work but for the most part overlooked. Some of these societies are well-organized bodies with a large membership and some are small groups, but the sum total of their activities has a very important and beneficial influence.

One of the largest and best organized of these bodies is the International Projection Association with its headquarters located in its own comfortable clubhouse at 437 East 145th Street, New York City.

The officers of the International Projection Association are: A. L. Pollin, president; B. Norton, vice-president; Wm. Guth, secretary-treasurer.

Many excellent lectures are given at the club house but the social side of the association is by no means overlooked.

On Saturday, March 5, the International Projection Association held a housewarming and package party which was one of the most successful and pleasant entertainments of the winter. Although on not so elaborate a scale as some of the other entertainments there was an atmosphere of informality and general good will which made a pleasant change after the long series of dinners given by the other organizations.

Among those present were: Mr. A. L. Pollin and the Misses Pollin; Mr. B. Norton; Mr. and Mrs. William Guth; Mr. and Mrs. Al Ross; Mr. and Mrs. M. Fisher; Mr. and Mrs. P. A. McGuire; Mr. and Mrs. M. Scherer; Mr. and Mrs. George Mayer; Mr. and Mrs. L. De Bella and Miss De Bella; L. Miller; J. Albrozza; J. Ambrosio; D. Garden; Jeff Dolan and Miss Ethel Berlefin.

Better Projection Pays

Naval Projectionist Has His Complaint

FROM an enlisted man, who I think it may be better that I do not name, for very obvious reasons, comes this letter: "Am a motion picture projectionist by profession. Since joining the navy have been more or less engaged in that line of work.

"In the navy, however, as you doubtless know, it does not much matter whether a man knows his job as a projectionist or not, as he must run the projectors just as the officer in charge of them tells him to, entirely regardless of whether or not it be the right or wrong way.

"Owing to that condition I have done but little work along that line since I have been away from the San Diego training station. While there I was engaged as one of the two regular projectionists. We had two Powers 6B8s and one Powers 6A; also a Powers which was made up from parts from several models of Powers projectors. Used Mazda on the new projectors and old type arcs on the others.

"Operators" in the Navy

"The foregoing is given you for what it is worth, just to give you some idea as to what a 'movie operator' (as we are called in the navy) is up against in the navy. Would you kindly supply me with the C. O. D. price of your handbook (Bluebook of Projection); also books or literature giving detailed information concerning the Simplex with Mazda, Powers with Mazda, Baird, all models, and Peerless reflector arc lamp."

It really is too bad that both the navy and army insist upon disregarding the nomenclature adopted and approved by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, especially when by so doing they deliberately discourage the men from advancing in knowledge of motion picture projection by telling them they are merely operators of a machine—a machine attendant.

Poor Business

May I suggest to the Navy authorities that it is mighty poor business to in any way discourage men from advancement, and mighty good business in every possible way to encourage them to become real motion picture projectionists, who can and will give the men of the Navy all the entertainment value contained in the films they project.

True you may say that a "name makes no difference," but that does not make it true. A name very often makes a very great deal of difference. There is not one particle of encouragement in being considered merely as being the attendant upon a machine—a man to start and stop it and keep it lubricated—whereas there is real encouragement in being considered as being a motion picture projectionist, because that includes many things, and much accurate skill and knowledge in optics, mechanics, electrics and other things. Yes, there certainly is a good big difference.

Just How Far Can You See?

Normal vision is rather limited, but in the big Twentieth Anniversary Issue of Moving Picture World you can look back over twenty years of progress and even peep into the chaotic far beyond. Authentic film history written by those who know.

Not just a special issue, but an historical document. Out next week.

As to books, you can get descriptive literature from the manufacturers of the various equipment named. Address International Projector Corporation, 90 Gold St., New York City for Powers and Simplex, and J. E. MacAuley Co., 552 West Adams St., Chicago for Peerless. Don't think you can get Baird now. The new Handbook (the Bluebook of Projection) will be out in two or three weeks. Two volumes; limp leather binding; has detailed instruction on Powers, Simplex, Mazda, Peerless, etc., etc. Send six dollars to MOVING PICTURE WORLD, 516 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Wants Definition Of Series Arc System

J. L. HATCHARD, Unionville, Mo., asks: "Dear Mr. Richardson, will you please, to settle an argument, tell me just what a series arc system is? I have had a dispute, and we have both agreed to leave it to you."

A series arc system is a system in which a number of arc lamps are connected in series with each other, so that the same amperage flows through each lamp in its turn. It is a system in which the current is to all intents and purposes constant, but in which the voltage is highly variable, dropping at each lamp by the amount of pressure required to force the current through the lamp, or, more correctly speaking, through the arc.

Detailed Explanation

If there be ten lamps on the circuit, and it requires fifty volts to force the current through the lamp, or, more correctly speaking, through the arc.

If there be ten lamps on the circuit, and it requires fifty volts to force the current across each of the arcs, then at the first lamp there would be 50x10 equals 500 volts, but on the other side of that lamp there would be only 450 volts. Back of the next lamp the pressure would be only 400 volts, and so on. That is the series arc, or constant current system.

Queer Folks Bob Up In This Old World

THERE are many, many queer people in this old world of ours, but what is perhaps the most queerly queer of the queer ones is the chap who suddenly secures opportunity to be heard publicly, and immediately utilizes this opportunity in an insane, though usually abortive attempt to attempt the discrediting of those who have labored hard, and the best they know how, for improvement, many long years before the newcomer ever was even so much as heard of.

The mental twists of such men are past understanding. They are found in every walk of life. They often would have considerable real worth were their talents directed to building up instead of to attempted destruction. They often are honest enough, but that in nowise makes less the damage they do.

It is conceivable that Wilkes Booth really believed he was performing a service to the country when he assassinated Abraham Lincoln, but the fact that this twisted mind conceived that idea did not in the slightest degree lessen or excuse the terrible wrong or fearful damage he did.

There are those who assassinate physically. Booth was that sort. There are other kinds of assassins, or would-be assassins. Which is really the worst?

Film Samples Show Bad Sprocket Holes

L. BALL, projectionist, Empress Theatre, Arma, Kas., sends me samples cut from the Fox production, "Yankee Senior." They are colored and he wants to know why they won't run through the projector as smoothly as the plain black and white does.

An examination of the clippings, which are Eastman stock, show that the sprocket holes have been badly strained ON THE WORKING SIDE OF THE HOLE. Either your own or some other projector has an outrageously tight tension. It is possible—not exactly probable, but possible—that the colored stock may be a trifle thin and did not stand the strain as well as did the black and white, which was a bit heavier. I wish you had sent me samples of both kinds of film. I am referring the clippings to the Fox company for investigation. The thin stock theory seems unlikely, as there is now but very little difference in film stock, but it is the only thing which occurs to me, unless the colored stock dried out faster and thus weakened more than the black and white.

It is possible, also, that a different type of sprocket hole was in the black and white, but the Eastman holes are, so far as I have reports been very satisfactory.

Unrivaled screen quality

The photographic superiority of Eastman Film—zealously safeguarded by Kodak Research Laboratory experts—naturally makes prints on Eastman Positive Film from negatives on Eastman Negative Film unrivaled in screen quality.

And, since the public appreciates screen quality, insistence on prints on Eastman Film will have a favorable box office reaction.

Prints on Eastman have the black-lettered identification “Eastman” and “Kodak” in the transparent margin. Look for it.

PATHE presents

Leo Maloney in The Man From Hardpan

by Ford I. Beebe

(M.P. WORLD)

"The Long Loop"

Exciting Western Starring Leo Maloney Has Good Story and Exceptionally Fine Suspense

FROM THE OPENING SCENE right to the finish there is exceptionally well-sustained dramatic tension in Leo Maloney's newest western of his series for Pathe "The Long Loop" and it offers virile and stirring entertainment for western fans and all who like the kind of melodramatic action and suspense that keeps them on the edge of their seats.

Maloney has the role of a two-gun man, one that made William S. Hart famous where everything depended on his "kicker on the draw" than anybody else, and very effective and exciting use has been made of this, in fact it furnishes the keynote of the action and keeps the story pepped up at all times. There is a corking situation where the hero turns the tables on his enemies when they have set a trap to get him in the range of cross-fire, and an exceptionally exciting climax in which by sheer bluff after being shot through both arms, he uses his reputation to force the armed villains to "hands up" by giving them until the count of three.

The plot holds the interest and moves at a good pace and there is enough mystery in a good identity of the rustlers and casting the rest of the story on first one side and the other of suspicion on first one side and the other to keep up the excitement at high pitch. Woven through the story is a romance in

Leo Maloney in
"The Long Loop on the Pecos"

Length: 5934 ft.
Pathe VERY GOOD WESTERN. AN OLD PLOT BUT WITH SOME NEW VARIATIONS AND THE ACTION WELL PEPPED UP WITH FIRST RATE SUSPENSE.

Cast... Maloney in one of the old Bill Hart two-gun man type of roles. Tom London the mysterious leader of the Long Loop killers. Eugenia Gilbert the essential girl in the case and others Frederick Dana, Albert Hart, Bud Osborne, Dick La Reno, Chet Ryan.

Story and Production... Western. Leo Maloney is offering a consistently good line of western entertainment that show a better average for variation than is usual in the same type of picture. Maloney's latest, while based on one of the several conventional western patterns, brings a generous amount of action and suspense. The plot, some of the close, is typically reminiscent of the old Hart pictures when Bill would face his enemies squarely and offer to "shoot it out" with them. Maloney is more than usually successful in the matter of directing and acting his own pictures.

Direction.....Leo Maloney; good.
Author.....W. D. Hoffman
Scenario.....Ford I. Beebe
Photography.....Vernon Walker; good.

Again Maloney "gets the drop."

For wallop, sustained interest and cleverness "The Man From Hardpan" is all to the plus.

Picture for picture this series is averaging higher than any "westerns" made.

See them, and be convinced.

Attention of Mr. Joe Brandt

Gentlemen:

The box-office attraction value which Columbia Pictures have shown during the past season leads to the hope that you will find increasing exhibitor support during 1927-1928.

In showmanly qualities and real pulling power you have maintained a high average in Columbia Pictures that many of your biggest rivals would do well to emulate, and it is my personal opinion that no theatre owner, no matter what his affiliations may be, should fail to keep a few open dates until he can check up on your product for the coming season.

One fact which appeals to me importantly, is that you have demonstrated beyond a doubt that an independent producer can keep in business despite the increasing stress of competitive conditions, by making pictures which the exhibitor of all ranks can make money with.

More power to Columbia Pictures and to my friends Joe Brandt and Jack and Harry Cohn. I hope that every true-blue exhibitor in the country will feel as I do about it, and book Columbia Pictures. I am sure they will if they are wise.

Sincerely yours

THE STANDARD OF QUALITY

PEEERLESS leadership has been undeniably established by its actual performance record over a period greatly exceeding any other equipment now on the market.

PEERLESS Reflector Arc Lamps outsell all others two to one. They are standard factory equipment on Simplex Projectors. They are used by the largest theatres and theatre circuits in the United States and are sold and serviced from forty-three (43) cities in the United States by the greatest sales organization in the country.

Also that it is an actual fact that there are more PEERLESS Reflector Arc Lamps in service than the total of all others combined.

PEERLESS Reflector Arc Lamps are conservatively priced; their actual dollar for dollar value cannot even be approached; the vast savings they afford in current and carbon costs return your investment in an exceptionally short time.

With all the enviable qualifications we ask you

"to keep your house open against all odds"

Film fires; breakdowns—THE DARK HOUSE—an everpresent possibility of loss that every exhibitor must guard against. And when trouble comes, quick action alone can save that loss.

in emergency apparatus—projectors, mechanisms, intermittent movements, generators, and other emergency equipment, and with this one purpose in mind: "to keep your house open at all odds."

National Service isn't "shifty" (with you when there's an "axe to grind" and absent when you're in need of help). Men and machinery are held in readiness, day or night, to quickly meet any emergency that may arise.

This uniformly dependable service is always at your call from any one of the 31 National Branch Stores, and there's one near YOU!

National Engineering Service is also at your disposal on any equipment or construction problem that may confront you; ready to co-operate with you and assist you from "preliminary plans to presentation." National is ready to assume full responsibility for the mechanical excellence of your theatre.

Mack Sennett Comedies

All the ingredients first class.

The prettiest girls, the best comedy stories and stars, side-splitting subtitles, speedy action.

As many gags as there are raisins in a plum pudding.

As fine food for the epicure in laughter as for those who chortle from habit.

The Box-office value makes these comedies a lip-smacking dish for exhibitors or kings.

THE ACID TEST

Just what is it when applied to comedy?

The number of laughs and their kind.

"Clocking the laughs" of a representative audience is the acid test of a comedy.

"Horse Shoes" has been "put on cold" before three large audiences in three representative theatres.

The smallest number of laughs checked against these audiences was 201. The largest was nine more.

Giggles didn't count. Only the big roars of a lot of people thoroughly enjoying themselves.

That means the laughter was almost continuous.

Don't you want a picture like that, in your house?

Collins Resigns; Woodhull Serves as Exhibitor Head

Former's Theatre Sales Held Responsible

The sale of Eli Whitney Collins' theatres has resulted in his resignation as president of the M. P. T. O. A. and the election, at Wednesday's meeting of the Administrative Committee, of R. F. ("Pete") Woodhull to serve the unexpired term.

The organization's explanation of the change in heads was vague, simply stating that the Collins resignation was "caused by the unexpected change in the trade since his induction to the presidency.")

Mr. Woodhull will serve until the national convention at Columbus, Ohio, June 7, 8 and 9, when Mr. Collins' term expires. Woodhull has long been active in organization work and served in various capacities until his election as president at Milwaukee in 1925.

Earlier in the week exhibitor officials strenuously denied rumors that Collins was to resign.

Brandt Buys Tenth

Brandt's Theatre Enterprises, William Brandt, president, has purchased from Small & Strausberg the Terminal Theatre at Fourth avenue and Dean street, Brooklyn. It is one of Brooklyn's newest theatres, has a balcony and seats over 2,000. The purchase price was in excess of $500,000.

Kane Remains in East

The Robert Kane unit will continue producing in the East, making seven more features at the Cosmopolitan Studio, now owned by Warner Bros. The transfer of Vitaphone activities to the studio won't force Kane out.

London Cable

(Cabled by Moving Picture World London Correspondent, March 22.)

Commons gives a second reading to the Film Bill which purposes to aid British motion picture production by forcing British film theatres to show a certain proportion of strictly British-made pictures. The vote was 243 to 135, a comfortable majority and final passage of the bill is anticipated later.

Late Chicago News

Blair, McElroy & Fitzpatrick says there is nothing definite for announcement on the Saxe deal at present. The Newhafer-Ascher Circuit says that booking arrangements with the Midwest Circuit are under consideration. Lent has slowed up business in many houses. Cooney's new Avalong Theatre of 3,500 seats opens this month. Jacksonville, Ill., will have Sunday movies for the first time in its history. A permit has been issued for a 2,000-seat theatre for Seventy-fifth and Kingston avenue. Errol Smith architect. The Marlowe-Hurwitz interests will build a 2,000-seat theatre at West Pullman, Ill.

Big British Merger On

It is reported that Ostrer Bros., London bankers back of Gaumont, plan a merger of independent distributors. Each company would operate separately, but theatres would be pooled and new ones, in which all would have a joint interest, would be built. Ostrer Bros. now has, it is said, control of Gaumont, F. B. O. and W. & F. Film Service, as well as a good-sized interest in Ideal Films.

"U" Plans New "Cohen"

As a sequel to "The Cohens and Kellys" Universal will make for next year a production to be entitled "The Cohens and Kellys in Paris." This foreshadows a series of pictures with the characters played in its last year's success by Charles Murray and George Sidney.

W. O. Burkey Sues Distributor Over Arbitration Board Award

Another case of state courts versus Joint Board of Arbitration decisions will be tested in Kansas City this month.

The case is believed to be first of its kind in Kansas City since 1871. Recently W. O. Burkey, manager of the Admiral Theatre, Kansas City, contracted for a series of pictures from the Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., of Kansas City, of which E. C. Rhoden is manager. Burkey contends he later was informed by Rhoden that six of the pictures named in the contract would not be available as he, Rhoden, had decided not to purchase them, but that six substitute pictures would be furnished. Whereupon Burkey

Vaudeville the One in Danger Not Vitaphone, Says Warner

Can Give Artists Yearly Contract For as Much Salary as Vaudeville Chain Can Afford

By Sumner Smith

CHARACTERIZING as "absurd" the order of J. J. Murdock, general manager of the Keith-Albee Exchange, which forbids players under K-A contract to appear in any talking pictures, S. L. Warner, vice-president and production manager for Vitaphone, declared this week that Vitaphone "is not worried by any such statement, and the artists appearing on Vitaphone are big enough to combat any such move."

"Several years ago," he said, "when radio was comparatively new, the vaudeville offices issued statements that artists appearing before the microphone would not be wanted for vaudeville. Then these same offices found that radio was making acts, never heard of before, very popular and they went after these acts and were willing to sign them. They knew that names were being made and were glad to get them.

"Today, Vitaphone is worrying these vaudeville offices. It has and is doing more to publicize artists than any other form of entertainment.

"When presentation hit the picture theatres it hurt vaudeville. Acts were made over-night and were in demand. The vaudeville offices threatened them but could do no harm.

"Presentation today is a big issue with vaudeville people. Vitaphone is a bigger issue, and unless a sensible attitude is taken by vaudeville, it will be the sufferer, not Vitaphone, as we can give well known artists a yearly contract for as much salary as any vaudeville circuit can afford to pay, and they can work all season without leaving New York or Los Angeles.

"The trouble with the powers that be of so-called big time vaudeville today is that they lack the vision and the showmanship that have proven to be the chief assets of the motion picture producers and theatre owners. If they could only stop and analyze the situation they would discover, as we have, that Vitaphone

United Artists Dicker For St. Louis Theatre

It is reported in St. Louis film circles that United Artists is dickering for a first-run house in that city. Whether they will build a new theatre or lease one now operating is not certain.

Dame Rumor has it that Joseph M. Schenck will make an announcement concerning the company's plans for St. Louis in the near future. 'Tis said the company is not entirely satisfied with the first-run bookings secured for its big pictures in the past.

declined to play any further pictures named in the contract.

The Joint Board of Arbitration at Kansas City rendered judgment against Burkey, who paid an award of $250 under protest. Burkey's allegation is that it was the distributor, not the producer, who failed to produce the pictures named in the contract and, furthermore, that no one can be forced to arbitrate.

"Mr. Rhoden informs me that his company—a Missouri concern not dealing with uniform exhibition contracts—has had the approval of its contracts from the Hays organization," said Mr. Burkey.

Berlin Cable

(By cable from the Berlin Bureau of Moving Picture World, March 22.)

Second talking Variety picture of UFA is a big success. All companies are busy with producing. "Mare Nostrum" has been prohibited for all Germany and Austria. Director Schlesinger of UFA will sail abroad April 1 for a short visit overlooking the U. S. UFA branch. The new Berlin key theatre the Beba Palast, will be opened April 10, with 2,500 seats.

Kansas Loses Hope of Sunday Picture Shows

At the Kansas capitol in Topeka the last hope for legalization of Sunday shows was lost this week when the House of Representatives defeated a bill proposing a repeal of the "blue law" which has been in force since 1868. The Senate previously had defeated a similar bill.

At the Missouri capitol in Jefferson City the 10 per cent. amusement tax bill, which already had passed the House, received the final death blow when the Senate Ways and Means Committee voted to extend the public hearing on the measure one week, then refused to take any further action.

Police Guard Hot Election

In an election marked by such intense rivalry that Chief of Police Collins saw fit to maintain police surveillance, Thomas E. Maloy, business agent of the Chicago Motion Picture Operators' Union, Local 110, was found to have been re-elected to office by a large majority over Henry Gusenberg. Other officers who were also named by large majorities were: Thomas J. Reynolds, president; James Slonecker, vice-president, and Harold Johnstone, secretary-treasurer.

Sick At Heart

Dick Hartigan, Troy, N. Y., theatre organist, may go down in history as the first patient to present his doctor with a bill. He hadn't been feeling well and the other day summoned a physician, who read a temperature of 104 on the mouth thermometer and put him to bed. The next day "doc" apologized. "It was a new thermometer," he explained, "and I've found it registers 104 with everybody."

"Apology?" said Hartigan. "You owe me $20 for lost time."

Hokum Necessary In Picture Ads. Cochrane Avers

Tells Harvard Students Its Heart Interest

Hokum can be legitimately used in motion picture advertising, R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, told the Harvard Business College tonight (Thursday), in one of the series of lectures by film executives. He spoke on advertising.

"Hokum is a perfectly good word," he said. "The Funk & Wagnall's dictionary describes it as a 'word, act, business or property used by an actor to win an audience.' The aim of every advertisement, whether of pictures or anything else, is to win an audience. So it is legitimate to use hokum in advertising, because to win an audience for pictures you've got to reach its heart. And hokum is nothing in the world but heart interest."

Mr. Cochrane reminisced about early mistakes. One of the first things he tried to do was to elevate the tone of advertising. He was an ardent uplifter.

"But I soon learned my lesson," he declared. "I had heard theorists say, 'Never write up to your audience,' and others, equally theoretical, say, 'Never write down to your audience.' So I started down the middle course and began to write AT my audience. That's a pretty good thing to remember when you become executives of big corporations. See that your advertising department locates its audience and then writes AT it."

Throughout the lecture Mr. Cochrane stressed the necessity of an advertising man "discarding old rules every single day of his motion picture life."

Golf, Oysters on Schedule

W. C. Kunzman, chairman of the Arrangements Committee of the Spring Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to be held at the Hotel Monticello, Norfolk, Va., April 25 to 28, announces that a splendid social and business program is being arranged. In addition to a number of features specially prepared for the ladies, there will be a golf tournament and oyster roast at Virginia Beach.

29 Montreal Houses Hit

Formal announcement was made at Montreal, Quebec, on March 19 that three local theatres had been ordered closed, five more have been required to discontinue special stage presentations and 22 others have been ordered to make important alterations with entrances, exits, stairways and stages. The orders were issued by the Public Building Safety Commission of Montreal.

Leases Globe for Norma

Joseph M. Schenck has leased the Globe Theatre for Norma Talmadge's moving picture version of "Camille." This picture will have its world premiere on Thursday night, April 21.

Allan Dwan bids goodbye to Olive Horden, the Fox "Joy Girl," as she sails for California via the Panama Canal

Butterfield Circuit to Invade New Territories

The expansion program of the W. S. Butterfield circuit in Michigan, as announced last week by Col. W. S. Butterfield, president, is an extensive one. It includes the completion of the new Capitol Theatre in Kalamazoo, the new Masonic Temple Theatre in Saginaw, being erected by the Shriners of that city; the completion of a new theatre in Flint and one in Ann Arbor for which plans are now being drawn.

Other new houses are being planned, and some of these are in cities in Michigan not heretofore touched by his circuit.

Vaudeville in Danger

is the most powerful means of advertising that exists today.

"Moreover, it has been proven that the majority of vaudeville artists, with the possible exception of about six of the biggest names, are unknown to the millions of movie patrons. Vitaphone will create a new following for these artists.

"Everyone is aware that vaudeville today is only too glad to sign up all the motion picture people they can lay hands on for personal appearance tours in their houses."

Arkansas Meets April 3

The Spring Convention of the M. P. T. O. of Arkansas will meet at the Lafayette Hotel in Little Rock on Sunday and Monday, April 3 and 4. Sunday will be taken up with registration and screening of pictures with a special program of "Don Juan" in connection with "Vitaphone" at the Palace Theatre that night. The business sessions will be Monday morning and afternoon, with the closing banquet on Lafayette Roof Monday evening.

Publix in Indianapolis

The Circle Theatre Company of Indianapolis, one of the largest theatre corporations of the Middle West, has closed a deal with Famous Players-Lasky and Publix by which they acquire a part interest in the operation of the new Indiana Theatre which soon will be opened in the Indiana metropolis. The deal was concluded in New York through Leo W. Rappaport, secretary and counsel of the Circle Theatre Company.

COMING and GOING

James R. Grainger, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles last week for a series of conferences with Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president of the company, at which sales policies will be set for the entire 1927-28 product of the company. Grainger will remain on the Coast two weeks.

Having witnessed Erich von Stroheim launch the cutting of "The Wedding March," P. A. Powers, to whom the director is under contract, leaves next week for New York on one of his frequent business trips.

F. W. Murnau, who recently completed his first American motion picture, "Sunrise," arrived in New York March 22 from Hollywood and sailed on the Olympic on March 25th, on his way to Germany, where he will produce one picture under an old contract. He will return next October to begin work under his new five-year contract with Fox Films.

Donald Davis, son of Owen Davis, the dramatist recently added to Paramount's Eastern editorial staff, and Mrs. Davis have left for the West Coast.

Lou B. Metzger, general sales manager of Universal returned to New York this week after conference trip to Universal City, Cal.

Richard Dix, who remained in New York long enough to assist Julian Johnson and John W. Conway with the editing and titling of his latest Paramount picture, "Knockout Reilly," has departed for Hollywood.

Samuel Spring, secretary-treasurer of First National, and Ned S. Depinet, recently appointed general sales manager, left New York Tuesday on a brief trip to the Middle West where a number of important conferences have been arranged with exhibitors and sales executives.

Mary Brian, having completed her role opposite W. C. Fields in his new Paramount comedy, left last Friday for Abilene, Tex., where she will visit relatives prior to continuing to Hollywood.

Louis Weiss, vice-president of Artclass Pictures Corporation, left for the Coast on March 20. He will remain for several weeks, and on his return trip will visit all exchange centers including those now distributing Artclass Product.

Neil Hamilton, whose Paramount contract was renewed recently, has been summoned to California for his first role under the new arrangement. He and Mrs. Hamilton will leave New York Saturday.

Following a month's vacation spent in New York, visiting friends and taking in the new stage productions of the season, Edmund Goulding has returned to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio at Culver City.

Elinor King, F. B. O. star, erstwhile Goldie Flynn of the chorus of "Criss Cross," has left for Hollywood. She was signed a couple of weeks ago to a five-year contract by Joseph P. Kennedy, president of F. B. O.

In Western Home

Carl Laemmle and Samuel Van Ronkel, producer of "Andy Gump" and other feature comedies, on the grounds of Laemmle's Beverly Hills estate, recently purchased.

Roxy Grosses $157,611

Roxy gave brother showmen on Broadway plenty to think about when the figures for the opening week, including the special opening show on Friday night, were announced. The gross for the seven days and one show was $157,611. The gross for the week was $125,927, including the tax. Moving Picture World predicted last week that this figure would be around $125,000. Needless to say, these figures constitute a world's record. The house has 6,200 seats.

June Release For Thriller

Universal plans June release for "Men of Daring," a special historical thriller of gold rush days which was made last summer but not released last autumn because of probably confliction then with another "U" frontier picture. "The Flaming Frontier." It is considered timely now because of the Nevada gold rush. Its original title was "Overland Trail."

M. & S. Book "Strogoff"

The Universal Film de France, "Michael Strogoff," is due to be played over the entire Meyer & Schneider Circuit of New York.

Just Miss Death

Harry Huffman, manager of the Aladdin Theatre, Denver, his wife and several Denver detectives narrowly escaped death last Monday when they walked over a pile of debris in which was hidden a half bottle of nitroglycerin. Safe blowers earlier in the morning blew the safe door of the theatre and took about $500 in cash. Enough "soup" was in the bottle to wreck the entire building.

Name Committees To Run National Exhibitor Meeting

J. J. Harwood Announces His Selections

Chairman J. J. Harwood of Cleveland, chairman of the general committee for the M. P. T. O. A. convention, has appointed the following general committee: Henry Lustig, Cleveland; A. J. Make Comedy in Color

The first one-reel comedy ever photographed in natural colors, "A Greenwich Village Romance," has just been completed as a Tiffany Color Classic and is said to be an unusual laugh provoker. Four of Earl Carroll "Vanities" girls play leading roles in the picture, which was directed by Harold R. Hall.

Brenon Joins United Artists; To Make English Best-Seller

Herbert Brenon, Paramount director whose future affiliations have been a matter of conjecture, has signed a contract with Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the Board of Directors of United Artists, whereby he will produce and direct his pictures independently for release through United Artists.

The first new film from the director of "Peter Pan" and "Beau Geste" will be "Sorrell and Son," Warwick Deeping's current best-seller, the rights to which Mr. Schenck has bought.

Takes New Duties

Walter E. Green, now senior vice-president of the National Theatre Supply Company.

International Projector Dines Walter E. Green

The officers and executives of the International Projector Corporation tendered a dinner on March 22 to Walter E. Green, who has resigned as vice-president of that company and will at once take up active duties as senior vice-president of the National Theatre Supply Company.

Mr. Green has been in charge of sales of the International Projector Corporation since its organization and prior to that occupied a similar position with the Precision Machine Company, Inc., manufacturer of the Simplex Projector.

New "U" Serial Players

Universal has signed two popular serial stars. They are William Desmond and Jack Daugherty. Desmond is to be starred in a new chapter picture entitled "The Vanishing Rider." Daugherty will play in two serials for Universal during the coming months, "The Trail of the Tigers" and "Haunted Island."

Music Tax Men in Canada Failed to Register Pieces

Allied Opponents Seek Government Action

A formal request that the Performing Rights Society of Canada be required to pay the registration fee of $2 for all its copyrighted music, under the Canadian Copyright Act of 1912, before it could be allowed to institute legal or other action for alleged infringements in the Dominion, was made by a deputation of moving picture, band, radio and annual fair interests which waited upon a committee of the Canadian Cabinet at Ottawa on March 18.

As the Society is said to own the copyrights of some 1,000,000 musical compositions of British or European origin, the Canadian Government would be enriched to the extent of $2,000,000 in copyright registration fees if the requirement were enforced, it is declared.

A complaint of the deputation was that the Society had declined to publish a list of its copyrighted compositions so that exhibitors and others could avoid the use of controlled music, but that the Society, it was stated, had offered to applicants certain annual privileges, instead, which would enable members to play all music without fear, a flat royalty fee being charged for a year.

Lack of registration of copyright was what caused the Performing Rights Society to lose its $10,000 suit against Famous Players Canadian Corp., at Toronto, the Society claiming that "By Jingo" and "Colonel Bogey March" had been played at the Regent Theatre, Toronto, without permission. Mr. Justice Rose had thrown out the suit because the Society had not registered its claims at Ottawa and the Society was called upon to pay costs as well.

"Convoy" Opens Big

Robert S. Kane's "Convoy," an epic of the navy at war, opened big this week at its world premiere in the Strand Theatre, Hartford, Conn. Henry Needles, Strand manager, declares that hundreds were turned away. The New York premiere is scheduled for May 1.

Pay For Steffes

The executive board of the Northwest M. P. T. O. has adopted and recommended to the Board of Directors a budget calling for an outlay of approximately $18,000 for expenses for the year. This sum includes an allowance of $5,000 to pay the salary of a president. W. A. Steffes has served in this capacity for several years without pay, but he has announced that he will not continue in office.

Louis Aubert offers a prize of 25,000 francs for the French film director who shall produce the best French picture during 1927.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has acquired "Les Mensonges" (Lies) the brilliant French film.

The French C. E. A. has appealed to the Government for a modification of the box office tax.

Rene Clair is to make a film of "The Leghorn Hat," a classical French comedy, for the Albartross producing company.

The French Finance Minister publishes the receipts of the French cinemas, showing total receipts of more than 100,000,000 francs. About 31,000,000 people visited the cinemas during the past year, giving an average annual expenditure per head of 3.50 francs. From this it appears that the French public visits the cinema the least, only about 7 per cent of the entire population. An effort is to be made to arouse more interest in France in the cinema.

"The Big Parade" is freely discussed in France; the fact of the French Army being little shown is criticised. On the whole, the French have given the picture a good reception. Field Marshal Joffre was present at the opening show and declared himself charmed with the production.

Dolly Davis is on the Riviera finishing the exteriors of "La Petite Chocolatiere."

"Beau Geste" has been banned by the Internallied Commission in the Rif country, with the object of avoiding any possible incidents.

Theatres in Metz closed as a protest against excessive entertainment taxes. The authorities have granted them a considerable reduction of the tax and in the case of theatres taking less than francs 17,000 per month no tax at all will be levied in the future.

"Les Cinq Sous de Lavarede" is the title of a big film to be made shortly by Societe de Cinemans (Films de France), adapted for the screen by Arthur Bernede. Le Petit Journal, the Paris daily, will publish the story.

Stanley, Rowland & Clark And Davis Link Interests

The amalgamation of the Harry Davis Enterprises and the Rowland and Clark Theatres under the Stanley Company of America, was officially announced the past week from the Pittsburgh offices of the Stanley-Rowland-Clark Corporation. The merger, with James B. Clark and Harry Davis as vice-presidents and A. S. Davis as general manager, represents the combining of the oldest theatre enterprises in the state.

Harry Davis' holdings include the Davis, Grand, Alvin, Pitt, Olympic, Schenley, Ritz and Lyric, besides the amusement enterprises within the Grand Theatre building. The combining of the two enterprises forms a theatre chain in Western Pennsylvania of over 30 theatres.

Schader with West Coast

Freddie Schader, the likeable Variety writer on film topics, leaves the paper this week to go west with Harold B. Franklin and take general charge of publicity and advertising for West Coast Theatres, Inc., of which Franklin is president. Mrs. Ray Schader (Miss Exray of Variety) will accompany him. All Film Row wishes them the best of luck.

Famous Players Moves to New Home Over Week End

As this Twentieth Anniversary Number of Moving Picture World comes off the press, Famous Players begins moving the Paramount personnel and effects from 485 Fifth avenue to the new Paramount building. A continuous stream of trucks will ply between the two locations until Sunday morning, when the new address will become: Paramount Building, Times Square, New York.

The company will be functioning as usual Monday morning. It will occupy eight floors of the tremendous structure. Executive offices will be on the eleventh floor. The new telephone number is Chickering 7050. The number of Paramount News will be Chickering 8600. Entirely new equipment has been purchased, leaving only the steel file cabinets, typewriters, statistical matter and the like to be transferred.

Brown Has Unique Film

Colvin W. Brown, vice-president of F. B. O., has returned from a three-months' European tour in the interests of distribution with a short French film which he confidently expects will startle the American trade. It is a recital, rather than a story, of the events which make up a Parisian's daily life, showing the activities of several characters from one midnight to the next. It teems with significant touches, both symbolic and obvious, that will make it very interesting to the American trade as an example of technique.

Ad Men Write Play

Edgar M. Schoenberg and Milton Silver of the Universal home office advertising department are the co-authors of the latest mystery melodrama on the boards of Broadway. It is "The Mystery Ship," a three-act play launched this week at the Garrick Theatre. Silver is assistant advertising manager for Universal under Robert E. Welch. The play was produced by Gustav C. Blum.

Predicts Amendment Of the Constitution

The suggestion that the Federal Constitution may some day be amended to guarantee freedom of the screen, as freedom of speech and press now are guaranteed, is made by Will H. Hays in an article on "Censorship of the Movies" in the April number of Review of Reviews, on the news stands this week end.

Many F. N. Promotions Of Distribution Men

Samuel Spring, secretary-treasurer of First National, announced the following promotions in the Distribution Department:

Ned Depinet, sales manager of the Southern Division, to general sales manager; Ned Marin, sales manager of the Western Division, to assistant general production manager, located in New York City; A. W. Smith, Jr., sales manager of the Eastern Division, will continue as sales manager, in charge of the Eastern Division, but his duties will be extended to include Canada (Mr. Smith will be next in rank to Mr. Depinet in the Sales Department); Stanley W. Hatch, manager of the Franchise Department, to sales manager of the Western Division; W. E. Callaway, district manager of the South, to sales manager of the Southern Division, located in New York; R. S. Wehrle, manager of the Pittsburgh Exchange, to assistant manager of the British Foreign Department under Joseph Skirboll; Roy H. Haines, manager of the Cincinnati exchange, to the Pittsburgh exchange in place of Mr. Wehrle; Paul E. Krieger, manager of the Louisville exchange, to manage the Cincinnati exchange; Maurice White, assistant manager of the Cincinnati exchange, to succeed Krieger in Louisville.

An Institutional Ad Service

A department devoted exclusively to institutional theatre advertising and publicity in connection with the exploitation of feature pictures, will be inaugurated by First National. The service goes into effect immediately. Exhibitors receiving First National press sheets will hereafter find sample ads containing institutional copy as also suggestions relating to institutional exploitation by means of tie-ups, stunts and displays of various types.

Educational Moves April 9

Educational Film Exchange, Inc., is making arrangements to move its home office into the new Paramount Building, 43rd and Broadway, New York, early in April. The company expects to be fully established in its new quarters, covering all of the 22nd floor, by April 16. Most of the moving will be done on Saturday afternoon, April 9, from the offices at 370 Seventh avenue and business will be resumed in the new headquarters the following Monday without any interruption.

World Premieres For $3,000,000 in Carthay

World's premieres for over $3,000,000 worth of Fox specials is the record for an independent theatre, which the Carthay Circle Theatre has just established. We learned this week that Manager Fred Miller and James R. Granger, Fox's general sales manager, got together and arranged things so that, upon the expiration of the run in the Carthay of "What Price Glory," "Seventh Heaven" will make its bow, to be followed by "Sunrise" and then "Carmen." In all it is figured that these premieres and other runs will monopolize the Carthay box office for the next year and a half. "What Price Glory," according to word reaching us, will probably give place to "The Seventh Heaven" late this spring.

Writers Make Debut

Two new prospective publicity writers have made their appearance in Hollywood and both are "females." One is an eight-pound daughter that will eventually bawl "poppa" at Dave Epstein, free-lance publicity purveyor, and the other finds herself heiress to the Hoffman fortune, now controlled by Jerry, who incidentally keeps readers of the New York Telegraph informed on the movie business.

Starts With Acting

While it is said that Larry Semon's contract with Paramount provides that he may "act, direct and write," we learn this week that for the next couple of weeks Semon will pick on the first of the three. In other words, he will play a feature comedy role in Ben Hecht's "Underworld."

$500,000,000 Merger Waits on McGuirk's Return to New York

Mrs. Chaplin May Return to Films

Lita Grey Chaplin, wife of Charlie Chaplin, screen comedian, is threatening to return to the pictures. The comedian is now in New York where he went about the time his wife brought suit for divorce in the California courts, filing a sensational 48-page complaint.

Mrs. Chaplin claims she has had a number of offers from various producers.

"Hoot" Displeased?

There was a report late this week that Hoot Gibson would not renew his contract with Universal upon its expiration in October of this year. It was said in this respect, that Gibson's grievance was attributed to "faulty stories." Official sources in Universal City maintained an ignorance of any of these conditions when the World sought to check them up.

High Pay For Pollard

With the signing of a new five-year contract with Universal, Harry Pollard, it is said, will be one of the industry's highest paid directors. Pollard is now in the closing stage of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." His new contract will become effective immediately following the completion of the famous slave story and with the start of production on "The Show Boat."

"Sunrise" Now Titled

Katherine Hilliker and H. H. Caldwell have just finished titling "Sunrise," F. W. Murnau's super-production for Fox. This week they start work on titles for the "Seventh Heaven," another Fox special.

Confidential Statement Says One Big Company Already Has Signed on Dotted Line—Stanley Head in San Francisco

WITH John McGuirk in San Francisco at the time of this writing and credited with having made a statement just before leaving Hollywood that no merger can be completed until he gets back to New York, an executive of one of the companies involved in the $500,000,000 deal informed us in the West Coast headquarters of Moving Picture World that only a few days ago a contract definitely and finally bringing his company into the amalgamation had been signed in New York.

Attempts to amplify this statement were met with a refusal of any details, but a re-assurance that this company had signed the longest dotted line to merge yet recorded in the motion picture industry.

This information was obtained in confidence. Taken at face value, it is the first official verification of the merger, at least of the interests of Pathe, Keith-Albee, and Producers Distributing Corporation.

That it probably does not involve the second amalgamation of Stanley, West Coast and First National may be appreciated from the statement made by McGuirk as to his signature being required. It is expected in creditable sources out here and some who were fairly close to McGuirk during his latest visit to Hollywood, that McGuirk's signature will prove to be a final binder in the merging of the merged interest which, reports have it, has been nearing culmination during the past few weeks.

That McGuirk is actually the moving figure in the Stanley, West Coast and First National merger was first declared in this department last week. That McGuirk's signature, therefore, will be largely representative in any aligning of interests of over $140,000,000 with Producers Distributing Corporation, Pathe, and Keith-Albee is indicated by all information which can be obtained at this time on this subject.

The reports have caused an interesting reaction in Hollywood. Where a group of wags would wax loquacious over the prospects of a few million dollars being combined, the Boulevard discussions have now jumped into the billions. The idle talk which has become more prevalent than ever during the past week discourses one hour that the industry is mobilizing to dethrone Famous Players-Lasky, while the next hour Paramount is credited with being the leading figure in the amalgamation.

"Fatty" May Return

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle may soon be seen on the screen again after an absence of more than five years. Arbuckle is said to have received a flattering offer from Germany to go abroad and produce pictures there. Recently he has been engaged in direction and just finished "Special Delivery," in which Eddie Cantor is starred by Paramount.

It is thought that the Arbuckle foreign-made pictures may be shown in this country. The comedian is to tour the Pantages vaudeville circuit before turning to the German proposition.

Hollywood Now Talks in Billions of Dollars

Albert Conti

Albert Conti

*("As Wits and Wisdom Will
Or
As the Destinies Decree")*

By Tom Waller

West Coast Representative

LIKE they write about Dick Whittington wanting to leave his home town to dig up a few gold cobblestones in London, so it seems is a parallel case in Albert Conti's desire to get to America. Where the cases diverge, however, is that Conti, finding no gold in New York or Philadelphia, actually started digging with a real pick and shovel in California. And, although a few miles away from Hollywood at the time, he now avers that California's only interest for him then was its oil fields.

Conti is thus the first of several hundred individuals possessing well-known names that we have interviewed, who goes down on the record that he did not come west on account of the films.

Curly hair well oiled backwards and a dowdy little mustache and a military bearing a la Foreign Legion might give one the impression that Conti would be in his best mood while relaxing before one of the hackneyed gas log fires, draped in a silken bathrobe with Turkish tobacco smoke emitting from his nostrils.

Not so. Not so. Quite not so. Conti loathes hypocrisy and sham even to the extent that while exhaling a Lucky Strike in his bare dressing room on the Universal lot, he flipped back his coat and showed us a trademark which indicated we both had the same cash-and-wear tailor on the Hollywood Boulevard.

"I hate these bathrobe interviews, especially those perfume-scented gob of English which make an actor utterly ridiculous."

There is nothing about Conti to necessitate the above quotation. He is a he-man in every sense of the word. Not the burly type of square, bristling jawed American.

Rather the genteel specimen of well set-up European aristocracy. The kind of a man that has pedigree stamped in his face and carriage. The kind of a man who can be himself because nature has gardenized his family tree in a way that affords him little opportunity for affectation.

Conti's religion is fatalism. He has become an ardent fatalist since making Hollywood his habitat. Things just come to him, he believes. Lately everyone around the studios knows things have been coming to him so that his ambition—books, travel and a little of that "stretch and the world is mine"—is closer to being realized than ever before.

All Conti has ever needed is the opportunity. It isn't his fault that nature has endowed him with the material in its superlative for certain character roles—big ones. He's got one in Paul Leni's "The Chinese Parrot." He's got still bigger ones, not just in the offing but actually cinched. Albert Conti is a name that is already spoken with respect in Hollywood. Respect because they know it has the stuff in it that will fit into the biggest and best of marquee. In other words, Hollywood senses it as a bulb name.

With nature's gift and now and then a shovel for a cane and a laundry wagon for something nearer a Rolls Royce, Conti's character has been tempered so that it knows what determines the candle power even after the name is spelled in bulbs.

This gentleman with the poise and manners of a gentleman was the son of people who had an estate in Trieste where their boys grew up with the servants' boys—where a cradle for a valet was ordered almost at the same time as the silken cushiony crib for a son.

As such a son Conti entered the Austrian army in 1906. He was still in the service in 1914 when he became a second lieutenant. He was mustered out late in 1918 as a captain.

Conti admits that the luxurious surroundings of his early youth exchanged for trench mud and cooks and mechanics as bedfellows had caused him to give life its first serious consideration while he was a prisoner beyond the Russian line. Then he figured out his father's wealth. It was not enough. What could he do after the war? He was a good soldier during war time but not of the stolid and stoical type to be satisfied with the clock-like regulations of service during peace time.

In this state of mind he found himself as a clerk in a shipping establishment of a relative in Trieste. It was in 1919 and a boat was loaded up ready to sail for America the next day. Conti in some of his dreams had visualized life on a ranch in Canada. The cattle. A husky appetite. Then he thought of Trieste and its sparkle and he had remained. But this time Conti made up his mind. Next day he was the only passenger on a tramp steamer bound for Philadelphia.

In America Conti was immediately impressed with bustle and big salaries. So much so that in three months after landing he took out his first papers as an American citizen.

But getting a fat envelope proved an enigma. He could walk as fast as anyone else but the only thing which seemed open was the army. In avoiding recruiting stations Conti worked his way through the south—laborer, chauffeur, all around handy man—until finally he heard of California and its oil fields.

As one of the boys with a pick and shovel Conti worked the wells in the Fullerton vicinity for seven months. At the expiration of that time he had more beef on his shoulders than he had ever obtained in the service. He also had $700 in his pocketbook.

It was then, in 1922, that Conti decided to look for work indoors—to try his luck in a city. He found himself in Los Angeles. He took a modest room in a house near the Famous Players-Lasky cafeteria. There he would often dine. It never entered his head, however, to aspire for the big sums he heard painted people discuss around tables. He figured that an actor must be a man of great experience and that there would never be an opening for an ex-soldier and a man of all-trades.

While browsing around Hollywood Conti got entangled in a stock flotation which relieved him of his last dime. Necessity forced him to apply for a job at a local laundry and for two days he gathered Hollywood's soiled socks and shirts.

Then one day while looking over the want ads his eye fell upon a three-liner inserted by Eric Von Stroheim seeking an ex-Austrian officer to act as a technical research director. Conti applied and got the job. The production was delayed and Conti found that he would not be drawing a salary for at least another six weeks. It was then that Von Stroheim, needing an extra who could wear a military uniform gave Conti his first opportunity to appear before the camera.

This was in "Merry Go Round" and thus to Von Stroheim Conti extends his thanks for his first job in pictures. His next picture was "The Merry Widow," also under on Stroheim's direction. Following these pictures Conti underwent considerable experience as a technical director when he again stepped before the camera, this time in a still bigger part under the megaphone of Ernst Lubitsch.

To Hans Kraely Conti feels indebted for his first big part. This was in Valentino's "The Eagle." Kraely and Conti were closely associated at the time, Kraely was writing this Valentino story. Accordingly he wrote in an important part for Conti which is recognized as constituting that actor's tailor-made role in filmdom.

Thereafter Conti steadily ascended the ladder but even then he gives Svend Gade credit for assisting that career by giving him a different role. This was in "Watch Your Wife."

We last saw Conti on a set on which Paul Leni was directing a sequence in "The Chinese Parrot." That production had two weeks to go before it would be ready for the projection room. We are assured that it will present Conti in the biggest role of his career.

He's A Fatalist To Whom Things "Just Come"

Deny Discord On Famous Lot; Schulberg Rumors Distorted Turnbull Won't Succeed As Associate Producer in Charge of Production—Ricardo Cortez Finally Out—Cruze Rumors Remain Persistent

RUMORS that all was not well around the family hearth of Famous Players-Lasky and that internal strife was rampant in the organization were discounted by studio officials to a representative of Moving Picture World. According to official information "everyone is happy" on the Lasky lot and that satisfied feeling exudes all the way down the line from B. P. Schulberg, west coast chief, to the lowest office boy, we were told.

Nevertheless, Ricardo Cortez is finally out at the Famous plant. His contract has just expired and according to Schulberg, will not be renewed. Cortez was taken out of the cast of "A Woman on Trial," Pola Negri's starring vehicle, recently, because it was said he was not the type for the role. The fact that his contract was about to expire may have had considerable to do with the sudden decision to cast some other actor for the role Cortez was to play.

Reports that Hector Turnbull would probably succeed Schulberg as associate producer in charge of production on the west coast were also branded as distorted by Famous officials. Turnbull, it is declared, with much emphasis, will retain his present position of supervisor of production.

Persistent denials that James Cruze, director, would sever his relationship with Famous fail to stifle the rumors to the effect that he would shortly be receiving his weekly stipend from some other producing company. Rumors that all was not well between Cruze and Famous have been gaining in impetus.

It is common knowledge in Hollywood that Cruze was far from satisfied with conditions during the filming of "Old Ironsides." It was learned from an authentic source that Cruze even went so far as to make the trip from location on Catalina Island to Hollywood to air his displeasure. From the same fountain of information we also learned that Cruze actually quit the job at this time, while the story was still under production, but was prevailed upon to finish the picture.

The general belief prevalent here is that he will do but one more picture for Famous.

A few of the lesser known players and writers have to trek into town from the East with the taking of preliminary steps incidental to closing down on production at the Astoria, N. Y., studio.

Richard Dix is expected here this week, with Thomas Meighan and W. C. Fields soon to follow.

Later in the week we learned that Ricardo Cortez had not been idle for a single day after leaving Famous, having almost immediately signed up with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the male lead in "Anna Karenina," which Dimitri Buchowetzki is directing.

Louie P. Kramer

Louie Kramer Now in Hollywood; Associated With Grant E. Dolge

LOUIE P. KRAMER, one of the best known authorities on national publicity and exploitation, is now in Hollywood associated with Grant E. Dolge, manager of many well-known motion picture stars. Kramer resigned from Balaban & Katz to come to Hollywood.

Kramer has had a wide range of experience in all phases of film publicity, advertising and exploitation. In addition to handling the publicity and advertising for the two largest theatres in America, the Uptown in Chicago and the Michigan at Detroit, both with more than 5,000 seats, he was also director of publicity for Lubliner & Trinz, Chicago's largest theatrical circuit. He is, however, no stranger to the production end of the film business, having been eastern press representative for Thomas H. Ince.

Gliese Awaits His First

Rochus Gliese, new De Mille foreign director, is awaiting his first assignment as a P. D. C. megaphone wielder. Gliese was recently elevated to the directorial ranks after having been imported to this country from Europe as an art director. Gliese was responsible for the unusual settings used by F. W. Murnau, Fox director, in the latter's latest production, "Sunrise."

Gliese was formerly associated with the UFA as art director and supervised the technical details on "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari" and "The Golem."

Schertzinger's New York Trip Is Now Delayed

According to reports emanating from the Fox lot, Victor Schertzinger, who was scheduled to go to New York this month and make the first Movie-tone picture for Fox, will not board the train for some time.

When official inquiry was made into this report, it was said that the matter was entirely up to New York. At the same time there was also a report that Harry Beaumont, one of the Fox studio crack directors, had severed his relations with the organization. When this rumor was checked up it was admitted that Beaumont's contract had practically expired but that there had been only the most amicable relations between this director and the organization.

Wampas Help Los Angeles Ad Campaign

A check for $7,220.26 has been turned over by the Wampas to the All Year Club, to be used in helping advertise Los Angeles and environs. The check represented a share of the profits accruing from the recent Wampas Frolic.

The presentation took place at the installation of 1927 officers of the Wampas at the Breakfast Club, with Pete Smith, retiring president, turning the check over to C. G. Milham, executive secretary of the All Year Club.

At the installation Ray Coffin took up his new duties as president of the Wampas. The other officers are: Bob Doman and Sam Cohen, vice-presidents; Phil Gersdorf, treasurer, and Joe Sherman, secretary.

An Impressive Spectacle

A film of the Corpus Christi procession which Erich von Stroheim reproduced as a sequence of his production, "The Wedding March," is to be given the Austrian National Museum as a record of one of the most impressive of all religious spectacles, according to P. A. Powers, producer of "The Wedding March." The picture is now in the cutting room.

Miss Del Rio Picked

Dolores Del Rio was picked this week as the leading lady in "The Trail of '98," an epic of the North, which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is now producing on location in Colorado.

Miss Del Rio finished her part in Fox's "Carmen" a few days ago. It is expected that she will be on location with the M.-G.-M. company for fully one month.

Laemmle Signs Geo. Lewis to A New Contract

George Lewis, young Universal player, has been signed to a new long term contract by Carl Laemmle, according to an announcement from Universal City. Lewis recently completed the collegiate series written by Mr. Laemmle's son and his work made such an impression that he was immediately proffered a new contract.

From the same studio comes the announcement that Lewis is not the only player in the recent signing orgy. Mona Rey and Virginia Grey, now busy in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," will also remain.

Industry Watches F. P. As Rumors Fly

Director Brown May Double His Salary

Director Clarence Brown will be satisfied with a weekly stipend from Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer within the mathematical bounds of six thousand or so. We were advised on the M.-G.-M. lot this week that contrary to reports published in several papers, Brown did not think of demanding ten thousand for seven days as such reports credited him. We gathered that Brown's present contract pays him three thousand per week and that the same expires in May. After that, we are told, Brown may seek to double, but never to triple his present salary, at least not May, 1927.

Strike Talk Again Heard In Hollywood

Strike talk popped up again this week in a few circles of studio employees out here. That the union in its attempt to unionize all Hollywood studios was not beaten in its negotiations with Will H. Hays and a committee of producers last December was one version reaching Moving Picture World.

In this respect our informant, who is a studio employee, stated that the reason why the matter has lulled is because the unions have failed, among themselves, to appoint a coast representative to confer with a representative of the producers, as was the agreement reached at the New York conferences following the delivery of the union's ultimatum to Hays.

This informant and others in similar circles told the World that they look forward to a general strike affecting all union employees in studios and those of kindred locals throughout the country shortly after the appointment of the representative.

New Dramatic Work

With the completion of her role as "Mrs. Sergeant Dolan" in "The Bugle Call," for M.-G.-M., which features Jackie Coogan, Miss Rosing is returning to the Fox Studio for additional dramatic scenes in F. W. Murnau's production, "Sunrise." Immediately upon completion of her work for Fox, Miss Rosing plans to leave for New York.

"Phony" Firms and Film Tests Undergo Rigid Investigation

Casting Head Only a Youth

We hear a lot in Hollywood about young directors and youthful screen stars. Now we find on a tour of Harry Cohn's Gower street picture factory that Columbia Pictures boast of the youngest casting director affiliated with a large studio.

Billy Gordon, a likeable chap with a pleasing personality, has just been installed at Columbia as casting director. Despite his youth Billy has more than a bird's-eye view of the casting situation, having spent a number of years murmuring: "Nothing today; you're not the type," or "Report on the 'set' at daybreak in evening clothes."

Gordon was assistant casting director at Universal for quite awhile and previous to accepting the berth at Columbia was associated with the Central Casting Bureau.

"Hollywood Cinema Test Studio" in Salt Lake City Reported As Being Suddenly Evacuated—Many Check-Ups in Progress in Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD will soon prove too warm a neighborhood for "phony" film companies and their attendant evil, "the free screen tests" for aspiring stars that decide to forsake the factory and department store for a career before the camera. Official investigators are now engaged in ferreting out these "sham" outfits that profiteer on fake promises and bleed the guileless with promises of a screen career.

Wire despatches from Salt Lake City carry the information that authorities there report a sudden exodus of representatives of the "Hollywood Cinema Test Studio," following an investigation as to the validity of the "representatives'" claims as to contractual relations with Hollywood motion picture producers.

The Sheriff's office in Salt Lake City, getting wind of the arrival in town of the "big lens and celluloid men" from Hollywood, decided to do a little investigating on their own account. To this end they communicated with the Sheriff's office in Los Angeles and Deputies W. H. Kelthoff and A. G. Hoffman were assigned the task of checking up on the Hollywood connections of the "test studio representatives," then quartered in the Utah capital for the purpose of dangling starring opportunities before the unwary at so much per film foot for the tests.

These tests when filmed were then to be filed in Hollywood and an immediate avalanche of offers would, of course, flood Salt Lake City proffering huge contracts to those who screened satisfactorily. It was an intelligent offer naturally, with something like 50,000 extras already in Hollywood, a large majority of whom are lucky to get a day's work a week.

On checking up in Hollywood, Deputies Kelthoff and Hoffman found that the studio and laboratory of the outfit operating in Salt Lake was nothing more than a store room on Vermont avenue used by a furniture company, who insisted they were in the dark as to the entire matter. Claims that they had an agreement with the Screen Library Service, Inc., were also branded as a fabrication by B. C. Carre.

When the report of the Los Angeles deputies reached Salt Lake City it was found that the "test studio" had evaporated into thin air and the "representatives" had made a hasty exit, leaving a trail of "rubber checks," according to the police.

When questioned by the Moving Picture World on the investigation, Deputy Kelthoff declared that he and Hoffman had found the Hollywood references given by the Cinema Test Studio far from satisfactory. Claims that their organization had the indorsement of Will Hays were also emphatically denied by Fred Beetson's office.

While no steps have been taken here to prosecute the principals in the case, it is almost a certainty that the affair of Salt Lake City will result in a thorough clean-up of "flimsy" outfits doing business around Hollywood.

Kerry, Miss Windsor, Carew Very Pleasing in "The Claw"

By Jim Powers
West Coast Staff Writer

NORMAN KERRY, Claire Windsor and Arthur Edmund Carew, the trio of principals, turn in a pleasing performance in "The Claw," a Sydney Olcott production for Universal. The picture was previewed at the Westlake Theatre in Los Angeles the other night and was well received by a capacity house.

The locale of the story is laid in South Africa, where Carew as a major in the British army is the big noise. On a trip to London his path crosses that of an aristocratic belle, played by Miss Windsor. Being more or less fed up on her tentative fiancé, a worthless and idle member of society, portrayed by Norman Kerry, she is naturally attracted to the self-possessed major, who has established a brilliant record for himself in the foreign service.

The scene then shifts from the London garden to the South African wilds, where Kerry has gone with the major in an effort to get hold of himself and prove his worth to the satisfaction of the girl. She also joins the colony later, presumably to visit her brother, who is in the service, but more probably to be near Carew, with whom she is infatuated.

The rivalry between Kerry and Carew holds plenty of suspense, with the latter, because of his martial superiority, having all the best of the "breaks."

When the Zulus go on the war-path and threaten the town, Carew gets an excellent chance to prove to the girl that he is a four letter man with Zulus; he and the girl pledge their troth, while Kerry views the intimate clinch from a distance.

Kerry remains in the town with a handful of men to protect the women and children. When word is received that Carew has been taken captive and put to death, Kerry prevails upon the girl to marry him by the use of subterfuge. Upon learning of his perfidy and also learning that Carew is still alive she turns against Kerry. To atone, Kerry, single-handedly, rescues Carew from the Zulus and returns him to the girl. In the meantime she has discovered that Carew already has a wife and child and that after all she is really in love with her husband. Thus everything ends according to Hoyle.

Miss Windsor, Kerry and Carew all turn in excellent performances. The story is entertaining and the titles well-chosen. None of the virile theme of the Cynthia Stockley novel is lost in its filming.

Fred Newmeyer

Box Office
Director

By Tom Waller

West Coast Representative

FRED NEWMAYER, beyond a shade of a doubt, has to his credit today the record of having megaphoned more star comedians than any other director in the business. Newmeyer, after making some of Harold Lloyd's biggest bets has been loaned out by the Harold Lloyd Corporation, to which he is under contract, since 1925. During that time, or in the course of less than two years, Newmeyer has had under his directorial command such fun-making giants as Douglas MacLean, Larry Semon, Syd Chaplin, Leon Errol and W. C. Fields. In addition to star comedians Newmeyer has also crowded into the past two years big pictures for Richard Dix and Mildred Davis. Now, they say, he is going over to the Universal lot shortly to guide Reginald Denny through his next vehicle.

How all this happened is the point of interest. It always is on this page where we make it a point to start just a few miles before the station where the film career started.

Newmeyer first of all gives the impression of early and strenuous athletics. Exceptionally well set up he is equally conservative. He likes to talk about boxes because it was from one that he got his first perspective on the box office.

When Fred and Harold Lloyd spent part of their school days together in a little red brick establishment in Central City, Colorado, Newmeyer was a member of the School Nine. At that age Newmeyer had already been familiar with a box, so much so that it looked as if fate had carved out a Babe Ruth career for Newmeyer.

After they left Central City, Fred headed straight for big business in baseball. He went with a Minor League team but his prowess in the pitcher's box soon gained him widespread attention. It landed him in the box for the Philadelphia Athletics. Just when old Connie Mack had thumbs up for Newmeyer's curves being among the best of the season Newmeyer threw his arm out of commission.

Thus Newmeyer came to California fourteen years ago under doctor's orders. These were that for at least six months the big league pitcher was to devote eight hours of each day to picking oranges. It was hoped that the continual stretching upward of the hand to grasp California's select fruit would restore normal muscular action.

Standing on boxes and stretching, however, failed to fit Newmeyer so that he could go back East and step into the box out of which he had just started to reap a fortune. Seven months passed before Newmeyer was finally convinced that he would never be able to resume professional baseball on a big scale. It was then that he put hands down. An ex-baseball player. Out near Hollywood. Plenty of sunshine but nothing but oranges.

Harold Lloyd finally rescued his chum of school days from an orange picking career. It was at the time when Lloyd was making single reels for Hal Roach.

Why pitching a ball and picking oranges should make a man eligible to enact character roles before a camera may prove an enigma to many. But Hollywood is full of enigmas. Newmeyer's ambition and past made his start as an actor on the Hal Roach lot more or less of an enigma. But what has gone before seems to mean little or nothing if some of filmdom's most successful careers—pecuious to themselves and more so to their employers—is significant. And so Fred Newmeyer forgot about baseball and oranges to help dignify the rampages of his boyhood chum in Roach one reelers.

Although a character actor Newmeyer soon evinced an unusual appreciation for the things that make a comedy a comedy. Not being in a box or standing on a box Newmeyer decided that he would study the box as a contributor. This study enabled him even as a amateur in pictures to not only execute the suggestions of others but also to go a bit further and add to those suggestions himself.

An appreciation for well-founded comedy—walking across the street not just for the sake of walking across the street but to have a reason for getting on the other side—early evinced itself in Newmeyer's screen career. This technical phase coupled with Fred's natural love for sparkling wit was soon discovered. It provided Newmeyer with the megaphone that has grown steadily in reputation since it came his way about thirteen years ago.

As Fred Newmeyer, director, this ball player, orange picker and actor's first job was to megaphone Harold Lloyd in what since have been acknowledged among his best two reelers.

Among these was "I Do," rated by Lloyd and his followers as his greatest two reeler.

Two reelers firmly entrenched Newmeyer in the canvas chair. One of Lloyd's first three-reelers, "Never Weaken," screwed Newmeyer's directorial chair right into the floor in the Lloyd studio. After that came the big ones, among the biggest of which Fred Newmeyer, classmate of Lloyd, directed. Included in this list were "Sailor Made Man," "Grandma's Boy," "Why Worry," "Safety Last" and "Girl Shy." Newmeyer co-directed "The Freshman."

In all of these pictures Newmeyer evidenced an almost uncanny appreciation of the things which count at the box office. In this respect he was right up on the line with Lloyd whose insight into the kind of comedy that the people actually want is best evidenced by a glimpse over the books filled with exhibitor reports on every picture that Lloyd has made.

Four years ago, when Harold Lloyd established his own corporation, found Newmeyer directing Lloyd with Mildred Davis in "Safety Last." Upon the completion of that picture Miss Davis became Mrs. Harold Lloyd. Now Newmeyer is completing his direction of Miss Davis in "Too Many Crooks" for Paramount, which marks her first picture since her marriage.

Under contract to the Harold Lloyd Corporation Newmeyer in 1925 was loaned to Douglas MacLean. He directed that star in "Seven Keys to Baldpate," one of MacLean's most noted screen successes. Since that time Newmeyer has also received directorial honors for "A Lunatic at Large," starring Leon Errol. This picture together with W. C. Fields in "The Potters" and Richard Dix in "The Quarterback," were made in the East. Regarding these productions Newmeyer expresses his appreciation for the consideration shown him by William Le Baron, who was in charge of eastern production activities for that company before it centralized all of its units in Hollywood. Paramount pictures which he has made here merit Newmeyer's similar regard for B. P. Schulberg, West Coast chieftain of Famous Players-Lasky production.

Mary and Doug Soon To Start Two Productions On Their Lot

Fairbanks Definitely Selects "The Gaucho" and Begins Shooting Next Month—Miss Pickford Has Story About Sales Girl in Store

NOW Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford are both happy. After months reported to have been devoted to research by Fairbanks for a story which would eclipse all of his previous pictures as spectacles, and by Miss Pickford for a story that would depict her as the demurest of maidens, we finally learn that minds are made up and two more productions are soon to start on the United Artists' lot.

Fairbanks, at the time of this writing, was looking at costume tests on the screen in connection with his next picture, which is now definitely "The Gaucho." Actual shooting on this production will probably commence within the next month.

The story, it is said, will place in the hands of Fairbanks, as a romantic cowboy of the Argentine, a bolas or lariat which will be featured on the screen as the whip used by this star in "Don Q." The picture, which will be one of much romance and color, will be directed by F. Richard Jones.

Fairbanks, at this writing, was also endeavoring to pick a leading lady out of five or six well-known actresses which he has in mind.

Miss Pickford, as told by this department several weeks ago, will now start production soon on a story centering around a little girl in a five and ten cent store atmosphere.

As was prophesied by the World a few weeks ago, Sam Taylor, under contract to Miss Pickford, has been unable to finish the direction of William Haines in "Spring Fever," which he had gotten well under way when Miss Pickford decided she needed his immediate services for her new vehicle. Hobart Henley has taken Taylor's megaphone on the M.-G.-M. lot.

Tunney Through With the Films

Gene Tunney while in town this week was credited with making an open declaration that he was through with motion pictures, "at least for the time being." Almost at the same time the fistic champion and former Pathe star literally rocked Hollywood when he refused to accept the hospitality of Jack Dempsey. The ex-champion is one of Hollywood's favorites, being seen at almost every public event and party held in the film capital.

Should Dempsey ever attempt to regain his crown from Tunney, Hollywood now indicates that it will be at the ringside with a huge Dempsey banner.

Mack's Death Won't Interfere With Release of "First Auto"

THE death of Charles Emmett Mack, screen actor, will not interfere with the release of "The First Auto," Warner Brothers' production, in which he was playing the male lead opposite Patsy Ruth Miller at the time of demise, in an automobile collision. According to studio officials the picture was practically completed before the accident, with nothing but a few long "shots" remaining to be filmed. The picture will be released as per schedule.

Mack was with the company at Riverside at the time of his death. When the accident occurred he was driving to location in his closed car, according to the police. When his machine collided with one driven by a woman, he was killed instantly. W. H. Wiseman, another actor, was riding with Mack at the time but escaped serious injury.

By a strange coincidence Mack

was the second member of "The First Auto" cast to meet death in an automobile accident while going to location. Helen Howard, 23, died earlier in the week following a collision.

The young actor was just beginning to reap the rewards of hard work when overtaken by death. He first made a bid for prominence in "The Dream Street" when D. W. Griffith saw possibilities in him, and gave him an important role in that production. His fine work opposite Marguerite De La Motte in "The Unknown Soldier" earned for him greater laurels. In "The Rough Riders," just finished by Paramount, he also had an excellent opportunity to demonstrate his talents. He was making his first picture for Warners at the time of his death and a bright future was in store for him at that studio.

Mack is survived by a widow and two small children.

Sheehan Will Visit Germany Early in June

In a statement in which he reveals that $15,000,000 is being expended for the Fox production program for next year, Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president of the corporation, makes known that some time in June he will leave for Europe to spend a month in the Fox Studios in Berlin. Before his leave-taking, plans will be placed in execution for the erection of additional stages at the Fox Hills properties at Westwood, where a central power plant, storage and distribution system costing $300,000 will then be established.

In a lengthy review of Fox's production for 1927-28, in which many pictures which have been previously featured in these columns are mentioned, Sheehan also makes known several of the bigger prospects, such as "The Grand Army Man," with Alec Francis in the main role and "Prince Facil" with Charles Farrell and Dolores Del Rio. "Frozen Justice" and a comedy are two others.

It is estimated that the pictures already finished and ready for release, commencing next September, have exhausted one-fifth of the total production budget.

time back, the attitude of the studio at that time was that she could take it or leave it. Judging from official information she has decided to accept the studio's terms previously dictated.

Be that as it may, the presence of Greta in the cast will undoubtedly prove a magnet that will attract a paying clientele at the various box offices of theatres where "His Brother from Brazil" may be screened.

Temperament Proves Costly To Greta Garbo, Now Only Featured

WHAT price temperament! Sometimes it proves costly, as it apparently has for Greta Garbo in her controversy with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. We hear that Greta will now play a featured role in "His Brother from Brazil," which Robert Z. Leonard will direct and in which Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle will be costarred!

Thus we find, according to official word from the studio, the exotic Swedish actress who soared to the heights of public favor in "Flesh and the Devil," and by her performance in that alone merited stardom, is to play but a featured role under two other players cast as the stars. From the turn in events it is obvious that Miss Garbo has come out second best in the wordy battle with M.-G.-M. executives.

The difficulties between the studio and the actress developed when they offered her a new contract, which called for a salary far from satisfactory to her. As published in Moving Picture World, some

Too Much Efficiency

IN the following pages, the exhibitor, in whose interest this paper is published, will find a long chapter of the true history of moving pictures during the past twenty years, and plenty of food for thought.

He will observe how the producers, the distributing systems, the theatres, the export and import, the studios—how every branch, in fact, of the art-industry has grown to gigantic proportions.

He will notice the wonderful development of the house organs and publicity departments, as he has heard, louder and louder, the trumpet blasts of the film through all the nation's periodicals.

Side by side with this display of strength, he will notice the absolute domination of the financier; the passing or harnessing of the showman, and a remarkable decline in the independent trade press combined with a peculiar, steel-mill efficiency in a business that thrives through art.

He cannot help but sense that, for coldness and relentlessness, the trade press is going through a harder fight right now than MOVING PICTURE WORLD waged single-handed years ago against the monopoly of the Patents Company.

Something is wrong somewhere.

A powerful industry that deliberately sets out to destroy its own press—its first line of defense—is riding for a fall.

And you cannot deal forever in the intangibles of entertainment through promoters and bookkeepers, for there is a limit to the laughing and the crying that can be forced by mechanical means.

The Story of Twenty Years

By A. J. Chalmers

MOVING PICTURE WORLD can lay claim to a double record for priority, for not only is it the first actual motion picture trade paper in America, but in 1911 it acquired The Film Index, which was the first paper devoted to the films, though it properly classed as a house organ.

The Index was the idea of the late William T. Rock, of the Vitagraph Company, who vainly sought to interest several newspaper acquaintances in a publication. When they failed to enthuse, he combined with J. A. Berst, then general manager of Pathe Freres, and together they started the paper, which as its name suggests, was an index or catalogue of film releases.

There existed at that time no source of distributed information regarding releases, other than an occasional advertisement in the Clipper or Billboard. A list of titles, with release dates, footages and producer was essential, and meticulous care was exercised to get and keep this information correct. The rest of the issue was regarded as comparatively unimportant.

When the Motion Picture Patents Company was formed in 1909, the Index was made the organ of the trust.

Meanwhile James Petrie Chalmers, Jr., conceived the idea of a trade paper that should be conducted for the benefit of the entire trade, and in 1907 the first issue of MOVING PICTURE WORLD made its debut. This was a sixteen page sheet, printed on cheap stock and without the pink cover that later was to become the World's first uniform. The front page of that first issue is reproduced here.

A little later it assumed its pink coating which it retained until its absorption of the Film Index, when a change was made to a yellow stock the front page being reserved for an ornamental frame for a scene still, each company being given this space in its turn. It was ornamental, but not particularly profitable, and eventually the front page: the most valuable advertising position in any newspaper, was again devoted to trade announcements.

He who is without nickname is a pariah among men and "J. P." was far more widely known than "James Petrie." His simple, generous nature made a nickname inevitable, yet an innate dignity forbade the more familiar "Jim," save to his closest intimates. The publisher was christened almost with the birth of his first issue, and "J. P." he remained until his tragic and untimely taking off.

Most persons start new ventures in order to make money, and "J. P." was not insensible to the fact that money actuates printing presses as well as mares, but money making was not his first and immediate thought.

He had far greater vision than many who could boast the ripe experience of the full ten years of picture making. They saw only the immediate present, the profitable nickelodeon. "J. P." looked up the clouded vista of the years to come and at the end of that misty lane he envisioned the glories that were ahead.

On one side of his nature he was the hard-headed, practical printer, but dominating the business idea was the pre-vision of the dreamer. He could see the wonderful future, and he felt it his duty to encourage and foster this infant art of the cinema.

He came at a happy hour, for even then the battles between Edison, Biograph and their numerous infringers were making the contestants realize the costly futility of litigation. Biograph and Edison were in their last trenches. Suits and countersuits were plentiful, and much of the news space was given to the recording of various decisions, dire warnings and heated threats.

Not a picture man himself, much of the early writing was done by Alfred Saunders and Thomas G. Bedding, both photographic experts. It was a part of "J. P.'s" plan to make the World a technical as well as a trade journal and so he sought technicians.

But the trade was not interested in photographic processes. There was a war going on, and "J. P." soon realized that his own duties as news reporter were far more important than learned treatises on photographic processes. It took him but a little while to get the feel of the trade, and the news columns soon began to swamp the purely technical side.

Saunders soon retired. The little paper seemed to prosper. He sought to enjoy a similar prosperity for himself. He left the World to start his own paper under the title of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, which continued a rather uncertain existence until taken over some years ago by its present owners.

Thomas G. Bedding remained for some years, Stephen Bush being added meanwhile, as well as Louis Reeves Harrison, who like "J. P." dreamed himself dreams. Harrison was a splendid writer, highly educated, rich in suggestive ideas and gifted with the fine faculty of expression. He was the first to suggest in print that beyond the foul holes which largely represented the picture theatre of that day there lay the hope for places where light, music, good ventilation and good order might be enjoyed in luxurious ease. Managers who had just gone through the nerve wracking process of raising the prices to ten cents knew that he was all wrong. The exhibitor admitted that the dime had come, but the quarter would forever be an impossibility. The pictures never could compete with the 10-20-30 repertoire shows of that day; the figures representing the admission prices.

But it was "J. P." who formed the policies and guided the craft. It was pretty rocky sailing at first. There were few film advertisers, not many song slide men and the only full page display in those early issues was that of Miles Brothers, who conducted a chain of exchanges.

Back in 1907 it was difficult indeed to take sides, for there was so many sides. "J. P." played no favorites. He put forth a helping hand to all. He was not playing politics, nor was he trying to straddle the fence. He simply believed in helping everyone, and such was his reputation for fair play that all were his friends, both personal and business.

It was not until 1909 that "J. P." was called upon to make his first important decision. In the previous year was formed the Motion Pictures Patents Company. Roughly the idea was this: For nearly ten years Edison and Biograph had been in conflict against each other and everyone else.

The Edison company claimed that in its basic patent it had the control of every taking device. Patent Office officials were liberal in allowing "claims" in those days, and they were particularly generous to their wholesale client, Thomas A. Edison. In drawing up the patent papers his attorney claimed specific means for halting the film for an instant while the lens was uncovered "or any other device."

Biograph claimed that this did not apply to their beater or "dog" movement. Others did not bother to offer any alibi. They just went ahead, claiming they were using the Bianchi camera.

The Bianchi was supposed to be a non-infringing camera, since the film was not halted before the lens. Instead a battery of lenses traveled with the film. With rare good fortune a Bianchi could shoot as much as 200 feet of film before it was sent to the shop for repairs.

Several of the companies had more or less helpful devices such as the framing device for projectors invented by A. E. Smith of the Vitagraph. It was proposed to pool their patents, form a releasing organization sufficient to supply the demand, and then put the screws on the others.

Under this scheme all exhibitors were to be licensed, on payment of a fee of $2 a week. Only licensed exhibitors were to be supplied with films by the licensed exchanges, and theoretically, if an exchange failed to live up to its contract, it lost its license and the right to do business. The exchanges were supposed to collect the exhibitor's license fees.

Detectives were hired to go about and check up. There was still some independent film being made. If licensed exhibitors used independent films, they lost their licenses. If an unlicensed house used license film, the source was traced and the exchange lost its license. Theoretically the Patents Company was in complete control. About a year later the Patents Company sought to go further. It formed the General Film Company. Either it took over existing exchanges, paying for them in stock, or it cut off the supply of film and opened its own exchange.

But meanwhile there was a fly wriggling around in the ointment and putting up a pretty vigorous kick. Carl Laemmle had both houses and exchanges. Also he had a deep-rooted dislike for the methods of the Patents Company. He declared war.

Throughout this period there existed some independent producers, and there was a certain amount of film coming in from Europe that was made by others than those in the Patents Company; the latter being Pathe Freres, Charles Urban and Charles Gaumont. Today this probably would be called "bootleg" film, but then it was merely "independent."

Through the open columns of MOVING PICTURE WORLD this product enjoyed practically its only contact with purchasers. "J. P." realized that a trust would stultify the business. He was convinced that the independents had the moral right to existence. His columns were open to all.

This was held as giving help and comfort to the enemy. It was diplomatically suggested that these advertisements be excluded. With slightly less diplomacy it was pointed out that with the Film Index at command the advertising columns of the World were as non-essential to the Patents Company as a hip flask to "Pussyfoot" Johnson, though that eminent prohibitionist had not yet come into the limelight and probably some other simile was used.

"J. P." admitted that the argument was plausible, but added that it was not convincing. He was running MOVING PICTURE WORLD in the interests of the motion picture business in general and not the Patents Company in particular. Whereupon the Patents Company ordered the withdrawal of all of its advertising.

One particular thorn in the side of the Patents Company was the fact that the World was carrying the message of Carl Laemmle to the exhibitors. And it was a vigorous and disquieting message. Virtually "J. P." lost the advertising of the ten components of the Patents Company because he would not shut the door on the radical Laemmle advertisements. It was with no particular thought of benefiting Carl Laemmle personally. There was the deeper set belief that in assisting Laemmle the only fighter in the independent ranks with what is inelegantly known as "guts," he was fighting the cause not only of the independents but of the motion picture. He sacrificed a considerable portion of his revenue to a belief rather than to an individual, and it was to happen presently that Carl Laemmle was richly to repay that devotion.

The Laemmle plan of campaign was very simple. He simply goaded the General Film—General Flimco, in his picturesque phrase—and the Patents Company until they simply had to sue him for libel. On the legal principle that "the greater the truth, the greater the libel," this was libel neither pure nor simple.

A. J. Chalmers making the first trade paper delivery by airplane.

Then Laemmle shot his bomb. In his reply he charged that the Patents Company and its subordinate General Film was a trust, maintaining its own publication and performing sundry other heinous and illegal acts.

The result was all that Laemmle and his associates could ask. Had he accused them of breaking all the ten commandments their dismay could not have been greater. And one of their first moves was to seek to dispose of the incriminating Film Index.

Their own private burial ground was already overcrowded with the bodies of defunct exhibitors and exchanges. In a panic of terror they almost forced the sheet on "J. P." They let him have it at his own price and took their pay in advertising, and so it came to pass that the man who was the chief cause of the advertising being lost bought it back. MOVING PICTURE WORLD gained a double title and three new editorial writers.

The foremost of these was James L. Hoff, whose newspaper experience ranged from an undertaker's monthly known as "Sunshine" to the Billboard. The second was the Chicago correspondent James McQuade. These two men were automatically carried over to the staff as part of the agreement. The third was Epes W. Sargent, formerly of the Musical Courier, the Dramatic News and the New York Morning Telegraph.

With the Index laid to rest, with the Independents growing in power and with all three factions, not to mention the States Rights men, MOVING PICTURE WORLD entered upon its new career as practically the only film trade paper.

During the period just described the WORLD'S circulation had kept gaining steadily. Its readers admired the guts the paper and its owner had shown by fighting for a principle and by flatly refusing to be influenced or coerced by advertising.

Now that the independent market had been thrown wide open, circulation continued to increase faster than ever. Newcomers were entering the theatre business every day. They were greenhorns, most of them. They needed help. And the WORLD proceeded to extend that help generously.

Those were the days when many a theatre owner had to grind the crank of his projector as well as do the fifty-seven other varieties of work that goes with running a theatre. The average theatre owner was not a mechanic—and the machines of 1910-1911 vintage were far from the state of reliability that they are today.

It is perhaps difficult for many to imagine just how harassing those days were. But it only took a few dark shows to put wings of flight on what was intended to be a stable theatre investment!

Realizing the need that existed for really practical help in this direction and the value of a place where there could be an exchange of ideas, the WORLD opened the first Projection Department. The man whom "J. P." put in charge was F. H. Richardson. Since the day he joined the WORLD in 1910 he has been both praised and damned because he has never hesitated to come out and tell the truth—and the truth sometimes hurts. His friends far outnumber his enemies, and even those with whom he has had disagreements respect him.

The projection conditions in the theatres when Richardson took over his department in the WORLD were, to put it mildly, discouraging. It was no job for pussyfooting and the records of the department will substantiate the fact that its editor is no pussyfooter.

The WORLD through its Projection Department for over seventeen years has waged a continuous and most effective campaign, (battle might be a better word) in the interests of better projection. That Richardson and his department has constantly filled a most pressing need in a vital part of the motion picture industry is amply proven by the thousands of letters that have come to our hands from exhibitors and the men behind the machines expressing genuine thankfulness for the practical help and inspiration which they have received from Richardson's personal letters, his Projection Department not to mention his famous Handbooks which have sold into five large editions.

Encouraged by the good work which the written word was doing for theatre managers and projectionists, the WORLD, in 1917 sent Richardson on a lecture tour that took him all over the United States and into the most important sections of Canada. This trip was financed by the WORLD and was done entirely in the interests of the better projection of motion pictures.

The tour began February 28, 1917 at the time of President Wilson's inauguration, and lasted five months. During this time a distance of some 19,000 miles was travelled. It took Richardson into thirty-seven states and two Canadian Provinces where he addressed one hundred and forty one gatherings of projectionists, exchange men and exhibitors.

This trip established the WORLD and Richardson more strongly than ever in the favor of theatre owners and projectionists. It was the first really extended effort in the interest of better projection ever put forth, and it still stands today as one of the most valuable services ever rendered by a trade paper to this industry.

The early years were just as fraught with exhibition handicaps as they were with projection riddles. In 1911 Epes W. Sargent began helping exhibitors to advertise and merchandise their pictures through the department "Selling The Picture To The Public."

This department, ever since its inception has filled a most important need in the busy showman's life. To thousands of exhibitors it has literally amounted to a thorough schooling in the art of exploiting and advertising motion pictures. It has furnished a common market place for the exchange of selling ideas among exhibitors themselves. It has been and still is a source of inspiration and valuable aid to countless numbers of readers, and through sheer good work it has developed a reputation among showmen all over the United States and Canada as a place to come for friendly council and able advertising and exploitation device.

There have been several attempts to copy this invaluable service of MOVING PICTURE WORLD but they have all lacked the all important "know how" and complete familiarity with the subject which so easily distinguishes a winner from an "also ran."

Showmanship in the running of motion picture theatres has been and will continue to be one of the most important phases of the motion picture business. Therefore it means something to say that for close to sixteen years MOVING PICTURE WORLD has distinguished itself and made thousands of exhibitor friends by Sargent's skillful and sympathetic direction of this outstanding department. The adoption of ideas suggested in it have given many an exhibitor a profit on a show that would otherwise have been a flop.

When an industry is in its early formative period a trade paper must endeavor to be as general in its usefulness as possible. It cannot become highly specialized. The time is not ripe for that yet. As an industry develops specialization takes place. One of the forms it assumes in the publishing business is segregation of media. We find an excellent instance of this in our own case. Actually MOVING PICTURE WORLD played a triple role in the early days. It was the general business paper for the industry, it was the fan paper, and it was the scenario writers' best bet.

One of the first deliveries of the WORLD made each week was to the news stands down town where a budding film audience eagerly sought it out to devour the stories of the pictures which had just been made. Here was the industry's first fan circulation.

As more and more producers entered the field the demand for suitable stories increased. There was a ready market for scenarios and a horde of would-be scenarioists began sending in picture story ideas in helter-skelter manner. This called for recognition in the way of practical help so the WORLD started a Scenario Department which supplied the facts about scenario construction that were so badly needed. It was conducted by Epes W. Sargent and was continued until organized scenario departments and contacts with established novelists became a regular part of production when the demand for free-lance scenarios fell off. The department was supplemented by the publication of a text book on scenario writing called Technique of the Photoplay which sold into three editions.

While a scenario department in a motion picture trade paper sounds funny now, it certainly had its place in the early days, and was eagerly read. The fan circulation sounds funny also, but it too had its place and many an advertisement that was directed to exhibitors also "sold" a host of fans to search the picture out, and go and see it. At one time the WORLD was printing nearly twenty thousand copies—twice as much as today. As the industry grew the demand for specialization grew. It became the duty of a trade paper to concentrate its circulation upon the buying element of the business. Other magazines like Photoplay came along and specialized in fan circulation. The final step in this transition took place when the WORLD joined the Audit Bureau of Circulations as told elsewhere in this issue.

During all these years the bug-a-boo of censorship was cropping up. Against this stupid enemy of the films MOVING PICTURE WORLD waged relentless warfare whenever it appeared. The files of the WORLD are full of articles pointing out the dangers and futility of motion picture censorship as a way to keep the screen clean.

Arguments against censorship were printed in the paper itself. Pamphlets were gotten up and supplied freely to exhibitors and exhibitor organizations who were faced with the possibility of local censorship legislation. The WORLD literally did everything in its power to prevent censorship from forcing its withering hand upon an art-industry at a time when it would have been most disastrous to its future.

The first efforts towards exhibitor organization met the sympathetic approval of "J. P." He could see that there were many problems which could be met and more intelligently settled through organized effort than without it. In its reporting of exhibitor conventions the WORLD has set a record for thoroughness and accuracy. It is doubtful if a more complete story of the various exhibitor conventions during the past twenty years can be found anywhere than is to be found in the files of MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

It was while attending one of the first exhibitor conventions held in the National Cash Register Building in Dayton, Ohio, that "J. P." met his untimely end. This was in March, 1912. The fatal accident occurred when, in a dimly lighted hall, he opened a door and stepped into what he must have believed was a projection booth, but which actually was an elevator shaft. He never regained consciousness and died a few hours later in the hospital to which he had been taken.

With his untimely death the motion picture industry lost one of the clearest-visioned, honest, square-shooting men it has ever had. During the short time he was privileged to hold the reins "J. P." established a policy of editorial independence which has endured. The pity is that Fate decreed he should be taken just at the period when the industry entered upon the tremendous development which he had envisioned, and before being permitted the opportunity to enjoy the results of his personal sacrifices, and conscientious efforts to build a substantial publishing business.

Shortly following the tragic death of "J. P." the WORLD property was incorporated under the name of the Chalmers Publishing Company with the right to engage in general publishing work. This was in accordance with ideas on the future which "J. P." had often expressed.

The first step in this direction was the publication of various books. Starting in a very modest way this division of the Chalmers Publishing Company's activities has enjoyed a constant and profitable expansion. Many of the books have sold into several editions. Of later years the activities of this department have been extended into the Spanish markets where success has been immediate and where there seems to be unlimited opportunities.

In 1916 the Chalmers Publishing Company started another publication—Cine-Mundial. This paper, a monthly, under the immediate direction of F. G. Ortega was at first devoted in a trade way to film interests in Spanish markets. Later the editorial policy of the magazine was changed from trade appeal to national appeal. Subsequent developments have proved that this was a happy decision.

FRANK G. ORTEGA

Editor of Cine Mundial since its inception and now General Editorial Director of the Chalmers Publications.

The row which Cine-Mundial had to hoe was a hard one. It grew up amongst hard knocks, lean pickings, and in an atmosphere of general crepe-hanging—not to mention witnessing quite a few actual demises of Spanish contemporaries. Yet even when things were blackest the staff of Cine-Mundial and the publishers never became panicky. Always blessed with a sense of humor, a sense of proportion, a tremendous faith and an actual knowledge of the market, they successfully dealt with the many wierd situations they had to face. In the current slang of today Cine-Mundial was "a tough baby."

Cine-Mundial's circulation has steadily mounted up to the point where now just a few more issues will put it in the fifty thousand class. Over 90% of its circulation is newsstand sales—a purely voluntary circulation. Through Cine-Mundial the Chalmers Publishing Company has built up the finest distributing system of its kind in Latin-America. Its present advertisers, numbering over one hundred separate accounts, represent the cream of America's best known manufacturers—firms whose trade-marked products are household words throughout this country and in some cases throughout the world. Last year this magazine increased its advertising revenue 33% over the year before; and what perhaps is even more gratifying it renewed 97% of its expiring advertising contracts.

When the motion picture trade papers joined the Audit Bureau of Circulations in 1920 the motion picture trade for the first time in history was given the opportunity to get a fair, unbiased, undisputable analysis of just how its papers stood in the estimation of exhibitors.

An examination of the yearly audits of the Audit Bureau will show how the WORLD has continued right up to the present day to merit the respect, confidence and preference of the readers in the theatre field. The exhibitors of the country have proved this by the only two methods at their command. They have given the WORLD the largest paid circulation. And they have given it the highest record of subscription renewals. No paper can receive a greater tribute to its editorial correctness and excellence than a vote like this from the readers of the field it serves.

In the matter of utilizing new inventions and new methods to increase its usefulness and service to the trade the WORLD has always taken the initiative. It was the first motion picture trade paper to use the airplane.

At the M. P. T. O. A. convention in Washington, D. C., in May 1922, following a week of business sessions, the election of officers took place very late on a Thursday. The full report of the convention including the election results was rushed to New York, printed after midnight that night and at 9 o'clock Friday morning the writer left New York for Washington by special airplane with 500 complete bound copies of MOVING PICTURE WORLD. Before noon every exhibitor at that convention had a copy in his hand giving a complete account of what had taken place up to the closing time of but a few hours before.

Several years ago the WORLD adopted the flat envelope method of mailing which is so far superior to the ordinary, cheaper, "roll 'em—crease, 'em" way. Advertisers and readers benefit materially by this service.

When it became possible to radio photographs and printed matter between continents the WORLD was the first trade paper to carry a photograph sent in this marvellous manner. While travelling abroad E. W. Hammons, President of Educational Films Corporation, put an English poster of Ideal Comedies on the air in London at 12:03 A. M., July 1, 1926. It was received in New York at 1:03 A. M. and reproduced in the issue of MOVING PICTURE WORLD printed that week.

In this comparatively brief, word sketch of twenty years only the high spots have been touched upon and even these rather briefly. Two decades have gone by. Twenty years of motion picture history—all of them years characterized by hectic activity are now in the background. Throughout this span of time MOVING PICTURE WORLD has endeavored to serve a great art-industry honestly, fairly, and to the best of its ability. It has consistently maintained and protected its right as an independent publication to present its own editorial views. It has been the nucleus around which a real publishing organization has been built. The little MOVING PICTURE WORLD seed which "J. P." sowed back in 1907 has grown to be the industry's largest publishing house.

The March of the Years

By Merritt Crawford

TURN back the pages of the calendar twenty years and, if you are sufficiently curious about moving picture history, delve into the musty archives where lie the records of the men who made it—the “giants in those days . . . men of renown”—and you will find they are not greatly different, save in the cruder, more complaisant methods used by them in attaining their objectives, from the average movie magnate of today.

The future film historian will record that the genus in 1927 had rather more finesse than the 1907 variety. Possibly also the big film men of the present generation have a more lively sense of responsibility than their fore-runners. Otherwise the two are about the same.

Not so the two periods in the history of the motion picture industry. To find a common denominator for the “fillum” business of a score of years ago and the great industry today of which it was the progenitor, upon which to base a comparison, is all but impossible. The contrast between the two is almost too great to be bridged.

Yet in its human elements, intensity of competitive conditions, and showmanship requirements, each is essentially and basically the same as the other.

The year 1907 was to the moving picture industry what the year 1849 was to California. The “gold-rush” was on. Everyone was hastening to “stake a claim.” The butcher, the baker, the candlestick-maker, all swarmed into this newest of golcondas, eager to gather a share of the riches, which seemingly awaited anyone who could rent a vacant store, hire three or four dozen chairs from the nearest undertaker and arrange for a projection machine and a supply of film.

The year 1927 sees the “claims” all “staked out,” unlimited capital extracting the “pay dirt” in greater and greater quantities. Opportunity for the man operating with a “shoe-string” bankroll or the fly-by-night, “get-em-in, get-em-out” showman is gone forever.

But for brains, specialized talents or creative ability, the word “OPPORTUNITY” was never spelt so large as it is today, in the making, selling or exhibiting of moving pictures.

Nineteen seven really marked the beginning of the film’s history as an industry. Its development before that period had been largely on the mechanical or laboratory side. Improvements in the moving picture camera, crude and cumbrous as it was, in the film, itself, and more especially in the projection machine, which took the movie out of the “peep-box” or kinetoscope, where perforce the camera had had to leave it so long, and put it where all might see the marvel of its motion, had at last made the film adaptable for general amusement purposes.

Before that era the making and marketing of film, as well as the exhibiting, was about as chaotic and uncertain a business as could well be imagined. The seller could by no means keep up with the swiftly mounting demands of his customers. The buyer could never be sure of getting a fresh supply of film when he needed it.

Every owner of a “store-show” (there was no other kind then) had to keep a few reels of “junk” on hand to serve as its “program” in the event that the regular delivery of his “show” could not be made on time.

The “exchanges” of that day were complete in themselves. They rented projection machines to their customers, furnished all the accessories, and bought anywhere they could get it, as well as made the film they distributed.

Subjects ran from 100 to 700 or 800 feet in length. Film was bought by the foot or pound and rented by the reel or program. What the subjects might be in a given “program,” whether comedies, dramas or scenics, made little difference to the exhibitor. Film was “fillum,” and as such, entertainment for the “store-show’s” patrons, who were not highly critical, so long as it “moved.”

At least fifty per cent of the film then shown was foreign made, France supplying by far the major portion of the imported article, though Italy, England, Germany and the Scandinavian countries all contributed a share.

Safety devices were just beginning to come in. In a majority of houses projection machines were still hand-operated. Such a thing as a fire-proof booth was still almost unknown and the film as it came from the machine was run loose into a bag, instead of being rewound into a metal magazine.

Such was the condition of the infant moving picture industry when James P. Chalmers brought out his first issue of MOVING PICTURE WORLD on March 9, 1907. It consisted of a dozen or two more or less nondescript manufacturers, half a hundred distributors, a number of agents for foreign film makers and a host of little, mushroom exhibitors, who had sprung up almost overnight everywhere a vacant store was available.

Many of the former were still conducting the business in which they had been previous to listening to the lure of the celluloid siren. For them the “fillum” business was still a side line—a casual adventure of uncertain duration.

The two most important companies in 1907 were the Biograph and Edison. Between them they claimed to hold all the basic patents to the film, the moving picture camera and the projection machines.

Early in 1907 the decision of the Federal Court established for the time the priority of the Edison camera patents. The Biograph patents, which covered the famous “Latham Loop” and other parts of the projection machine, had been previously recognized by the lower courts, and the combination of the two made possible the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Co. in December of the following year.

Its avowed purpose was the monopoly of all branches of the motion picture business by virtue of its patent rights. Its high-handed methods and onerous license conditions, however, proved in the end to be its undoing and that of the General Film Co., its distributing organization.

No attempt can be made here to tell of the spectacular struggle between the licensed companies operating under the Patents Co. and the independent groups. It need only be said that from 1909 until 1914 it was a continual legal battle between the opposing elements in the industry. In the end the government’s highest court decided against the Patents Co., as a trust, under the Sherman law, ordered its dissolution and imposed a heavy fine upon its members. The Edison and Biograph patents also were declared to be invalid, and free to all who wished to use them, a decision which worked a revolution in the film industry.

But the Motion Picture Patents Co. and the General Film Co., though they ruthlessly destroyed many small independent distributors, and threatened for a time to swallow up the whole industry, did much to stabilize it. They organized a country-wide group of exchanges, where the exhibitor could obtain an assured and consistent supply of screen material. They also did much to improve theatre conditions by cooperating with the authorities in securing the installation of safety devices and in educating the exhibitor in improving his house.

Various organizations were formed by the independents to oppose the Patents Co. in the courts and competitively, and in May, 1910, in Chicago, the Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Company was organized.

Twenty-five concerns agreed to market their product through this new distributing organization, whose officers were: Carl Laemmle, president; P. A. Powers, vice president; C. O. Baumann, treasurer, and Herbert Miles, secretary. William Steiner, William H. Swanson and J. J. Murdock formed the executive board.

The Sales Co. is mentioned not alone because of the successful fight, which it waged under Mr. Laemmle’s leadership against the attempts to monopolize the film business, but because out of this organization, which only held together about a year, grew the big independent national distributing companies, which, with the General Film Co., form the model upon which those of today are based.

Up to 1908 practically no moving picture was made over seven or eight hundred feet in length. Many did not believe that film longer than this would be practicable or popular, because of the eye-strain due to the “flicker” of the projection machine and because most could not conceive of a story which would require any more footage.

In this year, however, General Film released a number of films of longer length than one reel. Biograph, where D. W. Griffith was then located, led the procession and others in both the licensed and independent groups quickly followed. Griffith, who had already given the "close-up" to the screen, in this year also made what I believe is the first American-made feature of more than two reels. It was a three reeler, "Judith of Bethulia," later built up to four reels from cut-outs for special distribution in 1914, and a picture which would stand up today against many modern films.

General Film could not release it, because it could not be made to fit into any of its programs, and so the Biograph officials put it on the shelf and charged it off as another of their privileged director's "experiments."

Until 1911 film manufacture had been confined to New York, Chicago and Philadelphia. In that year Francis Boggs, a director for Selig, is credited with making the first moving picture on the Pacific Coast. Adam Kessel, Jr., arriving there soon afterward with his 101 Bison Company, brought East the news of California's unique advantages for filmmaking, and thus may be said to be chiefly responsible for making it the world headquarters of the motion picture.

During all these years the film had remained in the nickelodeon class. Admissions remained five and ten cents. Most of the so-called "magnates" believed they would always remain so. Many still had doubts of the movies being more than a "craze" which would pass away overnight.

Two things, however, occurred along about 1912 to change this idea considerably. One was the improvement in projection and the beginning of the elimination of the "flicker." The other was the importation of a number of features of multiple reel length from Europe. These features, of course, had to be "roadshowed" and handled as special attractions, there being no distributing company so organized it could release them.

Adolph Zukor, with Sara Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth," from Films d'Art of France, was among the first of these. With Daniel Frohman and Edwin S. Porter he had formed Famous Players to handle this picture. His financial success was not great, but he demonstrated the possibilities of the feature length film and the budding State Right market.

The next year, 1913, saw a great increase in the number of pictures of more than two reel length, although this was the limit to which the regular national distributors up to that time consented to go. They still remained steadfast to the old "program" idea of four to six "reels," which ordinarily would include a comedy, a drama and a scenic or novelty film of some kind. This was a "show."

The distributing companies then were the General Film Co., handling the productions or "brands" of the licensed group forming the Motion Picture Patents Co., which released about sixty reels a week, and the companies composed of the elements originally making up the Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Co., previously mentioned.

These were the Universal, headed by Carl Laemmle, which then distributed about thirty-two reels a week, the Mutual Film Corporation, with about twenty-eight, and the Film Supply Co. with some twelve or fifteen. There were also numerous other smaller companies, who were issuing with more or less regularity programs of five or six reels for individual exchanges.

Four reels made up the usual "show" in those days, for which five or ten cents admission was charged, and inasmuch as each exhibitor changed his program daily, it will be readily seen that no theatre could buy its film entirely from any one company, other than the General Film, if they required more than four reels daily. Competition was making them all show more and more reels to get the business.

Naturally, these showmen liked features, as the longer films were at once named, because they could get higher admission prices on the days they showed the "special" and also because it enabled them to strengthen their programs on other days in the week, with the reels they did not use on the day they showed the feature and which they had to take.

The demand for features grew rapidly. Companies were formed to produce and market features exclusively. Soon the exhibitors found that what was good business on one day a week was better on two. Before long, as the supply of features increased, they were using features every day in the week.

The "super-feature" or "big special," which then appeared, bore the same relationship to the exhibitor's feature program as the feature originally had borne to his "show" of short reel subjects. It served to bring about patronage, generally at an increased admission price.

Long before this time the industry had been gradually getting away from the "store show." Theatres had greatly improved in character and increased in size. The feature, which had taken the movie out of the nickel admission class, also led to many changes and reorganizations among the old line companies. All of them added features to their short reel programs and organized special companies to produce and distribute them.

The opening of the Strand Theatre on April 11, 1914, gave a tremendous impetus to theatre building and demonstrated that the week "run" could be made a practical reality. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation," which ran forty-four weeks at the Liberty Theatre, ending its record run for that time on January 2, 1916, also showed that an admission price of $2 top meant little if the attraction value in the picture was there.

The feature also was responsible for bringing the screen star out of the can and making the name of the popular actor or actress known to the movie public.

Before 1909 movie fans only knew their favorites, with very few exceptions, by a description of some characteristic, but not by name. The big producers were loath to advertise their principal performers, first, because they feared they might have to increase their salaries, and second, because some other producer might thus be enabled to identify them and bid for them.

Mary Pickford, for instance, then with Biograph, was known as the "girl with the curls" or "Mary." She was then receiving something like fifty dollars a week as salary.

The feature's popularity necessitated the development of the so-called "star-system," which later brought about many changes in both the distributing and exhibiting fields.

Adolph Zukor, always a showman of the keenest vision, was among the first to realize the possibilities of a personality and a "name" to attract box office patronage. His Famous Players Co., formed, as already noted, in 1912, was originally designed to bring eminent artists of the stage to the screen.

His early association with Mary Pickford, whom he brought out largely because most of the famous stage stars he approached were unwilling to lend their talents to the then much despised movies, also must be recorded as being one of the prime factors in making the motion picture industry of today possible.

More than anything or anyone else, I think, these two brought the motion picture out of the limited and shoddy environment in which it had till then flourished, dignified it as an amusement, made possible the great movie palaces we have today and showed the amazed world that production costs were unimportant, provided the attraction value was there for the public.

Add D. W. Griffith to these twain, and we have the triumvirate, who may fairly be said to have transformed the despised movie to the triumphant motion picture. All others must perforce take second place.

Harry Raver, with his All Star company, was another, who visioned the box office potentialities of great stage names and popular stage plays, if transferred to the screen. He also pioneered. Other companies quickly followed.

Early in 1914 Jesse L. Lasky formed his company, later to be merged with Adolph Zukor's Famous Players and again to be combined with the Paramount distributing organization, originally formed by W. W. Hodkinson.

These were the days of the industry's greatest and most rapid development, the really formative period out of which the motion picture business of today has grown. The ramifications of this period are so many, the chess board moves so lightning-like and so numerous, as to make it impossible even to touch upon them here.

It may be said, however, that the "star-system," the natural development of the feature photoplay, formed the pivotal influence of all these activities and changes in the film business. The feature produced the star, the star helped to evolve and make possible the great motion picture theatre, and the theatre demanded better and ever better film attractions.

In 1915 the Triangle Film Company was formed by Harry Aitken, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, who, with D. W. Griffith had made "The Birth of a Nation."

The Triangle Co. brought together the greatest group of stellar and directorial talent up to that time assembled in the history of the film industry. Its first picture, "The Lamb," supervised by D. W. Griffith and directed by W. Christy Cabanne, brought Douglas Fairbanks to the screen.

It was shown at the Knickerbocker Theatre, which had been taken over by the Triangle Company, early in the summer or spring of 1915, and as I recall it, the presentation was made under the direction of S. L. Rothafel, then the highly successful manager of the recently opened Mark Strand and now head of the great Roxy Theatre.

The initial success of the Triangle Company was tremendous, but it is mentioned chiefly because it accentuated the importance and value of the "star system." It bid high for artists or directors and, it is said, its competitive gesture was largely responsible for the enormous increases in stellar salaries which began to take place at that time.

It is no exaggeration to say that Harry Aitken's bold and aggressive tactics with Triangle, with its implied threat to all film producers having box office stars, helped to enable Mary Pickford to form her own company upon most advantageous terms in association with Adolph Zukor and Famous Players. It also enabled Charles Chaplin, in February, 1916, to make a contract with John R. Freuler, then president of the Mutual Film Corporation, for the then record salary of $670,000 a year.

Probably Triangle's activities also had considerable to do with bringing about the merger between Famous Players and the Lasky company, which on June 28, 1916, announced their merger, with a capital stock issue of $12,500,000.

The telephone numbers, in terms of which film men had been wont hitherto to discuss deals and salaries for public consumption, had at last become real.

The development of the "star system" had meanwhile brought about distinct and important changes in the theatre situation. Exhibitors found that they must have the stars to attract their patrons, no matter at what price. They found, however, that to get the more popular ones they were forced often to buy and book other pictures of mediocre attraction value. Production and rental costs also had vastly increased.

Even the largest exhibitors found themselves entirely at the mercy of the big producer with the most popular stars, of whom there were but few, then, as now.

To offset this, First National Pictures, an alliance of a group of the leading theatre owners in the larger cities, was organized to distribute pictures for its own and other theatres, and to encourage independent production by eminent artists on their own account, by reason of the assured and advantageous outlet their features would have through the theatres allied with the company.

J. D. Williams, a veteran showman with a big record of previous successful theatre operation and salesmanship, originated the idea and organized the company.

First National's success was immediate. But it marked the active entrance for the first time of the exhibitor in the producing and distributing field and was the forerunner, if not the motivating cause, of the present overlapping and interrelationship of the sales and producing branches with the exhibition or theatre-owning end of the rapidly changing motion picture business.

It forced Mr. Zukor and his company, to cite a prominent example, to enter the theatre field, often as competitor with other houses to whom he sold his pictures, in order to assure himself of an outlet for his productions. It compelled Marcus Loew to buy Metro and annex Goldwyn, to protect his great theatre interests.

It may be said also to be responsible in a measure for the formation of theatre chains, with which the individual exhibitor has found it hard to compete successfully and which in a larger sense have also militated against the producer, who has been forced to accept lower prices than he should for his pictures, in many instances, because of the chain theatre's concentrated buying power.

From 1916 may be said to date the beginning of the tremendous theatre building activity, which we have seen in the industry, of which the end is by no means yet in sight. The same year marked the beginning of the competitive stress and the creation of economic conditions, which have since necessitated merger after merger and combine after combine of the largest companies.

As yet no genius has come forward with a plan which will effectually solve the costly sales problem, which is now the chief concern of all the industry. Apparently, the only solution to it will be further mergers, until practically all this branch of the industry will be under one or two big tents.

Wall Street is now said to be fully in the saddle in the industry and the big financial interests which make it up are invariably insistent on the highest efficiency and economy of operation. How successful their efforts will be remains to be seen from the angle of showmanship and in maintaining and increasing the public's patronage of the motion picture.

Well-informed people predict that before the end of the year there will come a merger compared to which all previous ones have been insignificant. Whether it comes to pass or not, is important to the film business only in the measure of its success in attracting and continuing to attract the patronage of the American public.

Unlimited capital can build great theatres. It can bring about many economies, doubtless, in the selling and distributing of motion pictures. But money alone cannot necessarily produce motion pictures which will consistently bring the public into those theatres.

Institutionalizing the theatre will not do it alone, nor will the fine presentations we see today do it indefinitely. In the final analysis, the picture, itself, is always going to be the attraction or the dud. Poor pictures, if continued indefinitely, will drive the public to other amusements.

Right now our theatres are away ahead of the pictures, which they are showing week in, week out, with some rare exceptions. Production is the real problem, now as always, in the motion picture business and it always will be.

Future mergers will have little to do with the progress of this industry, however big they may be, provided they cannot solve this problem. The old box office holds the answer all the time.

What the next ten years will hold for this industry, who can guess?

The great Roxy Theatre, just opened, if successful, as it now seems certain of being, surely augurs many radical changes in present systems of theatre construction and operation, as well as in sales methods and production standards.

The "sound picture," with its proven possibilities, as exemplified by Warner Brothers' Vitaphone and the Fox-Case Movietone, seems to indicate that we are at the threshold of a brand new amusement industry. The natural color and third dimension picture have already demonstrated their practical possibilities. The television or radio-movie seems to be just around the corner.

Out of the "peep-box" and "store show" has come in twenty years a billion dollar industry. And we are still only at its beginning.

Pictures In Science

By Willard B. Cook
S. M. P. E.

FROM its ability to record motion, it is obvious that the motion picture can be made to illustrate, analyze, and subsequently to study any phenomenon which cannot be as thoroughly illustrated by the still picture. Most of us are more familiar with the use of the motion picture in the applied sciences rather than in the field of pure science. In the limited space of this brief article only the most casual reference can be made to some of the more prominent uses in both fields.

In biology, the motion picture has played an important part in the study of the development of the embryo, particularly of the egg. It has also been used with great success to study the circulation of the blood and to observe the life and action of some of the largest of the microbes.

In botany, the motion picture has been used with very popular results in studying the growth of plants, through the use of an intermittent stop motion camera, making single exposures at considerable intervals, so that a period of growth covering days or even weeks is reproduced in a period of a few minutes, thus showing the entire life of a plant from the sprouting of the seed to its death due to age, in the space of a single reel of less than 1,000 feet.

In industrial chemistry, many interesting motion picture have been made by different manufacturers for the purpose of describing chemical processes as used by them. In these, the use of animated drawing has met with signal success, as it permits of much clearer analysis than is possible in the limits of straight cinematography.

For several years the motion picture has been used in a medical way, one of the best illustrations being the operation of the electro-cardiograph for recording and studying the heart action in people subject to trouble in that organ.

In modern surgery, motion pictures of operations are beginning to assume a great deal of importance, as it has been found that very excellent records of the technique are obtainable at much closer range than is possible for the average student at the clinic. These clinical motion pictures can be run over and over again at normal or slower speeds, or even with occasional stops, to study every detail or technique shown in the operation. It seems altogether probable that this method of teaching surgery will surpass all others in the comparatively near future. By the use of the motion picture, the operation of the expert can be rapidly communicated to thousands of others, with all the perfection of its originator's technique.

It has been used widely in engineering to analyze the development and changes observed in construction of all kinds. Also in destruction due to sudden strains, shocks, vibrations.

In electricity, it has been used in co-operation with animated drawings to make clear the complicated scientific reactions, such as the functioning of the electron in radiotron tubes.

An interesting application of the high speed camera has been in the aviation service, where it was first used to observe the flight of pigeons in order to assist in the design of aeroplane wings and also of aeroplane propellers. More recently, high speed pictures have been made of airplanes crashing against concrete walls, in order to determine that point on the engine where flames first start after the crash. These records were made in order to improve on engine design to reduce the explosion hazard. The high speed camera has also been used in gunnery to trace the trajectory of projectiles and to study the recoil of the guns due to the explosion.

Among the most interesting and best known of the recent scientific applications of the motion picture, has been through the investigations of DeForest and Hoxie in the recording of sound by means of light density on the photographic emulsion and its reproduction later through suitable amplifiers, in complete synchronization with a simultaneously recorded picture image upon the same film.

Space forbids further individual mention of the applications of the motion picture as an aid to science, but it seems altogether probable that the rapid expansion in the use of the new 16 m/m narrow width film, with its very great economy as compared with the standard size film, will remendously increase the use of motion pictures by individuals in every branch of pure and applied science.

Exploitation

Its Beginning and Its Advance

By Epes W. Sargent

TWENTY years ago, when MOVING PICTURE WORLD made its initial sixteen page bow, the exploitation of motion pictures to the public was pretty close to being at its worst. Many intelligent observers of that day credit the theatre exploitation with being responsible for the first outcry for censored pictures. It is hardly fair to make so extreme a statement, but it actually is a fact that the manner in which pictures were advertised was more responsible for the move than the pictures themselves. The first publicity for pictures was started in 1895 and it grew steadily worse until 1909. This was the single phase of the pictures that did not grow steadily better.

The earliest shows were the state rights exhibition of the Raff and Gammon licencees. The initial efforts consisted largely of painted banners across store fronts, and throwaways. And about all they had to offer was "Edison's Latest Invention" and movement. Sometimes the bills offered the vaudeville stars in the pictures, but more often they merely sold pictures of motion.

Probably the first real exploitation stunt was worked by William Holpin, who was manager of Papinta, a serpentine dancer. Holpin had a concession on the midway of the Cotton States Exposition in Atlanta, and was interested in a showing of the Armat machine. He seems to have had charge of the showmanship of the attraction, and it was up to him to do something. Somehow the people were not flocking into the picture pavilion. It cost a quarter, and in those days a quarter was pretty nearly as large as the dollar of today.

Pictures that moved sounded fishy, even if Edison's name was tacked on. The fairgoer was not going to sink a whole quarter on any magic lantern show. They knew that pictures could move. Every traveling stereopticon show had a ship that sailed over painted seas, and most of them had the old McAllister slide of a snoring sleeper into whose capacious mouth a succession of rats ran. Pictures could move, but they were not worth a quarter.

Holpin had a sign painted assuring the readers that the device was something new. He made the sporting proposition that they go in free. If the pictures did move, they handed out their quarters on their way out. It was the first application of the pay-as-you-leave idea to the pictures. It was last reported in use about three years ago.

Apart from this, the banner-handbill campaign was almost standard. In the larger towns the handbills were omitted. In a short time the multiplication of projectors partly eliminated the use of the Edison from the advertising, and once the novelty exhibition phase was passed, the store show went into retirement for a couple of years.

Jean Leroy, who is a walking encyclopedia of cinematic facts, says that there existed a store show on Chatham Square, in New York City, from the earliest days, known as The Chatham, which was presently followed by the opening of two others, but for a time these were the only store shows in New York. Mostly the pictures had passed over to the vaudeville houses.

Out in California, however, the Biograph theatre came into being. It did not matter what type of machine was used. It was a Biograph theatre. We do not now have reference to the Talley enterprise in Los Angeles, but to actual theatres up and down the Pacific coast where pictures and perhaps a little cheap vaudeville formed the program of a "sit down" show.

Railroad fares were costly and the "Coast Defenders," as the purely Western acts were called, largely hung around San Francisco. The Biograph theatres were able to supply a form of cheap amusement in the small towns where a full vaudeville bill was impractical.

Meanwhile Hale's Tours had come out of Kansas City. This really was an adaptation of a summer park device. In the original form an old street car was mounted on a roller base. When a crowd had been assembled, the door was closed, the motor started and as the car bumped up and down a panorama was shown back of the windows on either side. The effect was so realistic that more than one child fled from the car fearful that he would be carried too far from home.

Captain Hale (he got his title in the Kansas City Fire Department), had toured the country with Hale's Fire Fighters and Fighting the Flames; exhibitions by his highly trained men. He was looking for something new and found it in the pictures.

Securing a location, he would build up what seemed to be the rear of a Pullman car. You purchased a ticket, entered the car and took your place on one of the wooden benches. When the car filled there was a deal of whistling and puff-puffing as the vibrator mechanism was turned on. Suddenly the far end of the car seemed to open up and you apparently whizzed through the open country. In this device the only films used were those taken from a flat car in front of the engine. This was a favorite shot in those days, for the railroads were glad to get the free advertising.

Sidestepping the story for a moment it might be mentioned that several years later the Canadian Pacific sought to interest the Keith Circuit in a proposition. The railroad was to supply a sleeper, diner, laboratory car, a flat car and an engine without cost. These were to be at the command of the Keith cameraman with a free run over the entire line. All the railroad asked in return for three months' use was that the road be mentioned on all the titles.

But let's climb aboard the Hale car again.

A. M. Botsford, Advertising Manager,
Publix Theatres

The show lasted only a few minutes; perhaps three or four, and then the passengers were ejected to make room for new fares.

This probably was the first lobby display ever made for the pictures. It was the first ballyhoo, as well, for the tooting and puffing that launched one carload on its way served as the sound attractor for the next lot of tourists.

Precisely the same style of lobby was used on "Excuse Me" in many instances. It has been used on many other railroad plays.

Close on the heels of the Tours came the store show. At first only banners were used, but it was soon found that a mechanical piano helped to attract the crowd, and these were put in, being stopped only for the illustrated songs.

About the first authentic record of an exploitation stunt came around 1911 or 1912. This was the cutout, and it was limited to a cutout of Charlie Chaplin. Someone discovered that a Turkish cigarette, given a fair start, would smoulder until it burned away. And the further interesting discovery was made that if you chewed the tip a little, you could stick it onto the cutout and apparently Chaplin would enjoy the smoke.

The first perambulator other than a truck with an A board was also connected with Chaplin. An exhibitor fitted an old buggy with shafts in the rear and a steering wheel to control the front wheels. A Chaplin impersonator sat at the wheel, and the machine was christened the Autogobile. After it had grown stale in the home town the exhibitor offered to pass it along to anyone who would pay the freight.

and each temporary owner would be recorded in the pages of the exploitation department of MOVING PICTURE WORLD, that other applications might be made. Two or three years ago an effort was made to locate the old contraption and Joe Hewitt, of Robison, Ill., recalled he had last seen it somewhere in his section, for he and Steve Farrar, of Harrisburg, were among the last to use it.

Exploitation was rather sporadic in those days. Most exhibitors thought that a house program or a small newspaper ad was about enough. They could not afford to do more, but here and there a real exploiter could be found.

One of these was J. W. Llewellyn, of West Point, Ga. Llewellyn was the originator of the "one-piece coat and suit hanger." He used to do a lot of lobby work in those days, long before lobbies became a science. For one railroad picture he built tracks across the sidewalk, got a large semaphore from the railroad and used pretty nearly everything but an engine.

He built up a splendid business; so good indeed, that it proved his Waterloo. One of the local politicians wanted the theatre for a relative. He had the city council boost the license fee to a prohibitive price, and when Llewellyn quit took over the house and had the license reduced.

Another fine exploiter in those days was Frank Montgomery. He had been a showman in the Mississippi Valley for years, but somehow he drifted over to Florida and decided to build in Jacksonville. In those days Mabel Paige was the dramatic idol of the orange growers. She played Florida, Georgia and Alabama for years, and in local esteem no second-rate actress from New York was regarded as fit to be placed in comparison.

Montgomery's first bow to Florida was an enormous ad in the daily paper in which he expressed his appreciation of Miss Paige's work. He agreed with Florida that she was a star of the first magnitude, and complimented them upon the good judgment they displayed in flocking to her standard. Quite casually he added that he felt that a town that could give Mabel Paige her proper rating was competent to enjoy the silent drama, so he was going to open a picture theatre.

Jacksonville repaid the compliment. If Montgomery could appreciate their local idol, he was a good judge. Consequently he would have good shows.

Montgomery opened his first house in the Summer, and to stress the efficacy of his cooling system offered to provide a darkey to fan any patron who complained of the heat. Two or three jokers actually did complain, and Montgomery made good.

He later invented the idea of the treat. He announced that he had a show so good that he wanted everyone in town to see it. Anyone who could not afford admission merely told the doorman that he was Mr. Montgomery's guest, and entered without payment.

He also was the first to use commercial space. He invariably contracted for the run of the paper, at about half the theatrical rate, and made his spaces so large that they could not be overlooked. Half and full pages were frequently used in a day when five or six inches as a liberal limit the country over, where newspaper space was used at all.

Unless we are mistaken Montgomery also was the first man to stage a popularity voting contest with an automobile as first prize. He ran the contest for something like three months. In connection with this he devised the advance booklet sale. If you wanted more votes you bought ticket books, good any time within the next six months, and he sold hundreds of these.

Before he got through Montgomery had run a single house into four in Jacksonville and one in Atlanta. But each house meant more capital and his own holdings were eventually attenuated to the point where he lost control. He was like Barnum—more of an advertiser than a showman, and he lacked a James A. Bailey.

He came to New York, but his schemes were far too small town. One idea, expounded while he was still in Jacksonville, was to hire an open carriage and drive "to the mill district," where at the noon hour he would distribute one dollar bills, with the remark that it was with the compliments of Frank Montgomery, who was about to open a new theatre.

"I'll have the New York papers ringing with my name," he said in conclusion.

His listener only laughed. "What you would get," he said, "would be a three-line item telling that a person giving his name as Frank Montgomery was arrested for obstructing traffic by giving away dollar bills and was taken to Bellevue Psychopathic Ward for observation."

He never gave out his dollar bills, but he did try to get an opening in New York, compromised on a job in New Haven, but shortly went back to Memphis, where he presently died. He was a splendid small town man, but he could not tackle the cities.

Another natural born advertiser, who also was a showman, was Ralph R. Ruffner, who died last December. "Ruff," who had been a railroad man, went into the theatre business in Vancouver, Washington. He first won attention through giving a free matinee to the inmates of an asylum for deaf mutes. They enjoyed the show so much that the following day he sent each one a season pass.

This and some similar stunts attracted the attention of Jensen and Von Herberg, and he was with them many years in Seattle and Portland. During the war he ran the American theatre in Butte, and following the Armistice he made an effort to get one of the sirens that were installed on the Atlantic seaboard as warnings. The fire house was half a block up the side street, on a hill, and it was his idea to mount the siren on the roof of the theatre and blow it as a warning when the engines dashed into the business street.

It was at the same house that he first used the fire department to give an exhibition of life saving in connection with a fire picture. Several other managers used the same idea, but he seems to have been the first.

In San Francisco he invented the clock lobby, in which he filled his lobby with a couple of hundred Big Bens, all timed to go off at close intervals. This was used on King Vidor's "Better Times" and was a sensation. Even more startling was his use of an airplane, with wings demounted, in front of his house. In "demonstrating" the machine the propellers nearly bowled the passers-by into the gutter.

For a few months he was connected with First National's home office writing press books, but he was too much a westerner to be happy here and soon went back to Jensen and Von Herberg and presently took over the Capitol theatre, Vancouver, B. C., for the Canadian Paramount interests. He was still at the Capitol when he died.

In Vancouver he could not work many of the trick stunts he was so fertile in devising, for the temper of the town was too conservative, but he did achieve "trick time" as a synonym for Daylight Saving, and now and then the old humor would creep into his advertisements, one of his best being a large space for "Grandma's Boy." This showed Lloyd standing in the foreground with a cottage background. In the smoke from the chimney he explained "Grandma's inside frying doughnuts."

For consistently good work another Jensen and Von Herberg manager has few equals. This is J. W. Sayre. An old newspaper man, he has a genius for unique layouts, and for several years he produced a house organ for the united Seattle houses that had a fine news stand sale at five cents a copy. It was more of a fan weekly than a house organ and brilliantly edited. He is now booker for the circuit, which was taken over by the organization headed by Harry C. Arthur, Jr.

Hay and Nicholas, of Fairbault, Minn., were among the early originators. They did some splendid work in the old days, but have figured only occasionally. Another old time management was the Hardwicke Brothers, of Clovis, N. M., who originated, or at least developed the personally guaranteed show. When they gave a personal guarantee, you got your money back if you felt your confidence had been misplaced.

Steve Farrar and Joe Hewitt, already mentioned, were among the old time stars, and no record of the early days would be complete without reference to George A. Bleich, of Owensboro, Ky.

Bleich was the first man to admit that he occasionally had a poor show. He would write a chatty advertisement in which he would honestly admit that some shows were not as good as others. Once when a bad egg crept in, he took space for an apology, explaining that he had not seen the picture in advance, and promising that it would not happen again. However his star stunt was the advertisement he wrote on Caruso in "My Cousin." "They say this is not very good," he admitted, "but you've heard him on the phonograph. Now come and see what he looks like." On that basis he sold the atrocity without any comeback.

J. M. Blanchard, of Sunbury, Pa., was a hustler back in those days. He still flourishes, but he does not report as often as he used to. He has won such a civic position in the town that he does not have to hustle as he did back in 1910-1912 to sell his seats.

Another old time Jensen and Von Herberg man to come to mind is A. C. Raleigh, who got into the hall of fame by being the first woman sign painter. Raleigh's marquee was so low that he did not dare work from its roof, so he had himself lowered from the roof of the building. His bloomer suit was made from an old box drape and he hired a wig. The "lady" sign painter, thus launched, has been a clean-up every now and then right down to date. Raleigh is now managing the Coliseum, Seattle.

One other name looms large for those times. This is James C. Quinn, now in Los Angeles. He was managing a house in El Paso that was off the main street, and Jimquin induced the merchants to erect their own "White Way" for the half block from the corner to his house. He also is the inventor of the "Park your cares at the—"

These men all flourished before what might be termed the exploitation era, which came in with "The Miracle Man" about 1915. Paramount felt that this picture should command better than usual prices, and to give the managers a chance to get the breaks on an advanced rental, put out a staff of dramatic press agents, many of whom had had picture experience with "Cabiria," "Quo Vadis" and other roadshow films of those early days.

One man was assigned to each exchange, and he was loaned to managers who booked the picture. This was the first effort to make a drive on publicity for other than a road showing, and in many towns the idea was brand new. "The Miracle Man" made money for both Paramount and its renters, and the idea was so well appreciated that Sidney Kent decided to make it a permanency, putting Claud Saunders in charge.

Saunders reorganized the already scattered staff, and began a campaign of education that included managers, editors, merchants and others. He did not confine his efforts solely to Paramount pictures, and often his men would give hints on other pictures while they were putting over their own. The basic idea was that if the manager was taught how to exploit, he would prosper, and if he prospered, Paramount would get its share in better rentals and good will.

Saunders located many of the stars of the business including Eli M. Orowitz, now a radio announcer and consulting exploiter; Oscar Kantner, now head of the department; Leon J. Bamberger, his present assistant; Harry Swift, Max Doolittle, Russell Moon and a score of others. Saunders first assistant was John Rosenfield, now of the Dallas News, who coined the word "exploiter," and later Walter F. Eberhardt, now of First National and president of the N. A. M. P. A.

—It All Depends*

Swift was a specialist in window grabbing, but the habit grew on him so that he would dress a window, have it photographed, replace the original dressing, pay the storekeeper and photographer and go on his way without remembering to tell the exhibitor what he had done.

Presently the exhibitor would see in the trade papers that he had had a wonderful window. When Swift got back with Paramount again, he became more conservative.

It was a Paramounter who first used the mystery stunt in which a suit of clothes and a farewell message on a bridge or a river bank would eventually be hooked-up to a Paramount title. One Paramounter, who was the cause of a Chief of Police personally dragging a river all one hot Iowa day (and it's hot in Iowa in the Summertime), has not been back in that state since, for the Chief is still watching.

One of the most fertile of the Paramounters was Fred V. Greene, Jr., until recently with the Schine Circuit, in Central New York. Fred was in France for a time. His best bet was the development of the birthday remembrance idea, but he has many other original stunts to his credit.

For a time the exploitation men went in heavily for lobbies and this was developed to a point where it became almost an obsession. In many towns unless the Saturday feature carried an ornate lobby the rural patrons would stay away in the belief that the picture could not be much good. The craze reached the point where even the drama shows had to dress the lobby to compete.

Some of these lobbies were beautiful things, the entire front being built in to suggest a castle, a prison, a coal mine, and in the case of Gloria Swanson's "Her Gilded Cage" a huge birdcage. More than once the structure has been built clear out to the curb line.

Many of these structures were dangerous in that they clogged the exits. No fire ever originated in a house so dressed, but the hazzard was heavy and most cities now have a law or a fire regulation against any impeding structure.

Another form of lobby display was the animated exhibit. Automobile dramas and racing plays were advertised by cars or horses on an endless belt, concealed by a ground row and often backed by a panorama. In some of these displays the cars or horses were on separate bands, each differently geared, so that the position of the contestants was changed.

The bannered trolley car was a product of this period, either masked in with a 24-sheet, bannered below the windows with star cutouts pasted against the glass, or even with an actual impersonator.

All of the other big production companies followed Paramount in the establishment of an exploitation service, but none of them ever achieved the organization first collected by Saunders. Today there are exploitation men in many exchanges, with Universal doing the most and best work, but the exploitation man has joined the Indian as a vanishing race. He has served his turn and today any exhibitor has only to copy the stunts he has been taught, improving them with each repetition.

The present home office trend is more toward a supply of novelty accessory and national hook-ups. The individual manager looks after his own stunts.

In the Publix organization the exploitation man has been replaced by a home office organization in which A. M. Bottsford looks after the general newspaper publicity and Lem L. Stewart attends to the exploitation with the assistance of George E. Planck, E. R. Roberts and Cliff Lewis, all of whom have served their terms as theatre managers.

Mr. Stewart, himself, was publicity man for the old Triangle Films, and went south when Lynch, head of Triangle, formed the Southern Enterprises. He is not only a genius at planning exploitation, but he can convey his enthusiasm to the managers who receive his "booking letters," and the Publix leads the line in consistent exploitation.

Stewart is probably the best informed man on exploitation and advertising in the business, and about the only one who derives his knowledge both from actual experience and the study of authorities. It is this background of practise and theory that enables him to obtain such striking results.

Of course no story on exploitation would be complete without mention of Harry Reichenbach. He was one of the pioneers in the pictures and the first man to stretch a picture banner across Broadway. He engineered the famous "T. R. Zann" stunt, in which the Belleclaire Hotel reported to the police that one of its guests had a live lion in his room, bringing it in under cover of a piano box. The reporters fell and fell hard, just in time to help put over "Tarzan of the Apes." Harry is popularly supposed to have "drowned" a Japanese princess in one of the lakes in Central Park, but he told the District Attorney that he didn't, so we may as well take his word for it, since he probably won't do it again. He knows all the ropes and made not a few of them.

Some of the modern day hustlers are as good as any that the producers ever sent out. Take Edgar Hart, of the Colonial theatre, Portsmouth, N. H., for example. Edgar did some of his best work in El Paso before he landed in New Hampshire by way of San Diego. Washington is reputed to have thrown a silver dollar across the Patomac, at Mount Vernon, but Edgar can make a dollar go further than that. He uses brains rather than money and he can cook up a wonderful stunt for $1.98 and pack the house at an outlay of $3.50.

Another star is John J. Scanlon, of Torrington, Conn., who can paint his own lobbies, or did until they put in a new marble front. Now he can't daub the shiny stone, so he has to work on other things. One of his best stunts is getting some local mer-

IN their history, motion pictures, as we know them, trace their origin to the photographic art, dating from 1802, although scientific treatises on, and allusions to, "the persistence of vision" and kindred thoughts ante-date photographic processes by many centuries.

China, Japan and Siam had their shadow-plays several thousand years ago, when, with the sun by day and fires by night the skilled pantomimists threw their shadows on a translucent silk curtain. Complete "stories" were told in these shadowplays, including the beheading of the villain and "the clinch" (or kiss) at the fadeout.

The first record by ancient writers, is, perhaps, that of Titus Lucretius Carus, about 65 B.C., in his "De Rerum Natura." The poet and philosopher wrote:

"Do not thou moreover wonder that the images appear to move,
"And appear in one order and time their legs and arms to use;
"For one disappears, and instead appears another
"Arranged in another way. And now appears each gesture to alter,
"For you must understand that this takes place in the quickest time."

From the copy of "Ptolemy's Optics," in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, England (but two copies of this work are known), we find that a disc, partly colored, will appear wholly colored, when rapidly revolved. He refers, here, to the persistence of vision.

Alhazan, the Arabian philosopher, mentions (1100 A.D.) the matter of persistence of vision in his works.

Leonardo da Vinci, Italian artist and philosopher of the Renaissance, also mentions (1472) the persistence of vision. The "camera obscura" was first recorded when da Vinci in 1482, brought it to the attention of the scientists of that day.

Battista Porta, a hundred years later, exhibited the "camera obscura," having used a room in his house with a small aperture in a window shutter. In the years that followed this simple method of picture visualization was brought to a high degree of perfection, the device having been in use as recently as 1870.

Nollet (1765), in "Lecons Physique," says: "When an object moves very rapidly before our eyes, we often attribute to it, size and shape, which it does not possess "(Visual deception)."

Residents of Paris, France, in 1798, were amazed by the eerie presentations, with a lantern, by Robertson, the Conjuror, and his "Phantoscope," with which he projected skeletons, ghosts, demons and other fantastical figures.

The art of photography, it has been observed, is based upon chemical processes, in which studies Scheele, the Swedish chemist, was engrossed (1772) when he disclosed the action of the sun's rays on pure chloride of silver. Ritter, following Scheele (1801), made an exhaustive study of the sun's rays on various chemical salts.

Dr. Wollaston continued along this general line of research, but no attempt was made to trace natural objects by means of light reflected from them, until Wedgwood, the celebrated potter of Etruria (1802), and Sir Humphrey Davy, about the same time, took up the subject. Wedgwood, and Davy, produced profiles, and traces of objects, on surfaces prepared with nitrate or chloride of silver, but they did not succeed, in their first experiments, in making their pictures permanent. Various writers credit Wedgwood with "the invention of photography."

Sir David Brewster produced, in 1818, and patented the following year, the "Kaleidoscope," an optical instrument, which had an indirect bearing on motion and its attributes, as well as on the studies of Sir. J. W. F. Herschel, James Watts, and many other scientists of the early nineteenth century.

Sir David also is credited with the invention of the stereoscope, which, as in the case of the "Kaleidoscope," is in use today.

Granville Penn, a scientific writer, described the Bioscope, otherwise referred to as the Dial of Life, about this time, for many investigators obtained sudden impetus after viewing Brewster's invention.

Roget mentions optical deception in 1825 in the appearance of the spokes of a wheel, seen through vertical apertures, an illusion in which the wheel spokes appear curved, and quite often seen at this late date in motion pictures, in the passing of a wagon wheel at the rate of speed in time with the projector. This phenomenon was commented on in the Philosophical Transcript, No. 131, the same year.

Dr. Paris (1826) accomplished the effect illustrating the persistence of vision. It consists of a round card having a cage drawn on one side of the card. On the other side of the card a bird is drawn, inverted in respect to the drawing of the cage. When the card was rapidly devolved, by means of cords fastened to the center of the disc, the effect was that the bird was in the cage, a practical illustration of the persistence of vision. This was called "The Optic Wonder," or "Thaumatrope."

In the same year, Herschel, the famous astronomer and scientist, at a dinner, asked the philosopher and scientist, Charles Babbage, how he would show both sides of a shilling at once. Babbage replied by taking a shilling from his pocket and holding it to a mirror.

This did not satisfy the astronomer, who set the coin spinning on the table, at the same time pointing out that if the eye is placed on the same level with the coin both sides of the rotating shilling can be seen at once. Babbage was so struck by the experiment that the next day he described it to Dr. Fitton, a friend, who immediately made a model, based on the thaumatrope. Fitton's model, and the Paris model, show the persistence of vision, upon which all motion pictures depend for their effect. The eye retains the image of the object seen for a fraction of a second after the object has been removed.

Departing, for a moment, from the field of "motion," we find, traversing the path of "still" photography, a French investigator. Louis Jacques Maude Daguerre, whose name, forever, will be associated with the photographic process of which he was the discoverer, was favorably known to the world prior to the announcement of his discovery of the Daguerreotype, because of his efforts to improve panoramic and cycloramic paintings and the production of dioramic effects. He met with great success in both of these fields.

Daguerre experimented with his photographic process over many years. In this interval, Joseph Nicephore Niepce (1814) in Paris was engaged in experiments to determine the possibility of fixing the images obtained in the "camera obscura." It was not until 1827, Devignes' Zoetrope, 1860; looked upon as a forerunner of motion pictures.

when Niepce, in England then, discussed his discovery in letters to his son Isidore.

Daguerre (1824) began his researches at the point where Wedgwood left the process. But Daguerre quickly dropped the nitrate and chloride of silver experiments and went on, using silvered plates of copper, and glass, to receive his sensitive coatings.

M. Vincent Chevalier, in 1829, brought Daguerre and Niepce together, when they entered a partnership to pursue their studies together. But Niepce died (1833), and his son continued the partnership (1837) with Daguerre. In January, 1839, the Daguerreotype pictures were first shown to the scientific and artistic public in Paris. The French Government bought the process.

It is established that both Niepce and Daguerre used iodine in their process, but the latter, alone, is said to have employed it with any degree of success. The discovery of the use of mercurial vapor to produce the positive image, clearly belongs to Daguerre. He died, July 10, 1851, in Paris.

Prof. Draper, of New York City, is credited with applying the Daguerre process to the taking of portraits from life, shortly after the basic principles were disclosed in the United States.

Coincident with the experiments of Daguerre and Niepce, in Paris, H. F. Talbot (Fox-Talbot), in London (1834), discovered the principles of photography on paper, and also made experiments on metal plates. Fox-Talbot knew nothing of the French experiments, or the experimenters. But he desisted (1838) from his studies in plates of iodized silver, and devoted himself exclusively to his "photogenic drawing paper." A photograph taken on paper (1839) remains to this day a little gem of perfection.

After noting the experiments of Wedgwood, Davy, Niepce, Fox-Talbot, Draper, etc., in "still" photography, we turn again to "motion," and find Farraday (1831) in England, writing on a peculiar class of optical deception similar to Roget, and Stampher (1834), in Austria, furnishing a description of the "Stroboscope," suggestive of band, or strip, pictures.

Snell described an instrument (1835) for exhibiting an optical deception (described first by Roget, 1825); he also mentions the Stroboscope; also the Phantoscope, or Kaleidorama.

Miller, a scientist, employed a disc appliance (1846) to illustrate wave motion, the waves, or any object, being viewed through successive stages, momentarily, through slots in the appliance, by means of a mirror. This instrument was called the Kaleidorama.

Plateau, of Ghent, presented (1849) his Phenakistoscope, a device for illustrating persistence of vision in relation to a series of pictures of an object in motion. His first design, drawn under his instruction after he had been stricken with blindness, was a series of pictures showing the "devil blowing up a fire."

Franz Uchatius invented (1851-59) an instrument, later manufactured by the optical house of Fritsch, in Vienna, and shown in the Vienna

The Cosmorama, from an old advertisement. This was an early form of picture entertainment.

Muybridge's studio in California, where the first experiments of this inventor were conducted

Academy of Science (1853), which is interesting, because it appears to be the first suggestion of projection through more than one optical system. In the Ucharitus system the lime-light (or calcium light) was revolved behind the stationary series diagrama, with separate lenses for each diagram. This produced in effect a picture in motion on a wall (or screen).

Du Boscq, a Frenchman, employed, in 1852, a method of presenting lantern slides in series, (presumably drawn) which were shown to the public in a peep-box equipped with an eye-piece. No details of this novel apparatus are obtainable today.

The Physiological Station, designed and used by Dr. E. J. Marey in his early experiments in step-photography.

A form of entertainment popular for many years was that afforded by the Dioramas and the Cosmoramas, penny peep-boxes, carried about the streets in London, and shown at the country fairs. The Dioramas go back to about 1790, maintaining their popularity for more than forty years, although the humble little peep-boxes did not actually pass out of use until as late as 1875, when the sporadic reappearance of the Diorama ceased to be noted.

These peep-boxes contained paintings, drawings, etc., copies, in some instances of famous canvasses hung in the great art galleries. They were classified as among the "outside attractions" at the fairs, and the owner generally had some trifling form of "added attraction," a dog that could do tricks, etc., for an extra penny. The peep-boxes had "light openings" at the time; were equipped with two, four and more apertures for "viewing" and a double convex lens brought out the best in the pictures.

The larger or moving, Dioramas, included great paintings, such as the "Irish Diorama," a painting on canvas (or muslin), sometimes two hundred feet long, and about six feet high, for showing on a stage with a lecture. The canvas was "reeled" by a boy from one large "spool" to another, being held stationary on a signal from the lecturer, while the latter proceeded to describe the beauties of the Lakes of Killarney, or some charming spot in Erin's lovely isle.

The Cosmoramas operated with, perhaps, less popularity than the Dioramas, although there was not a great deal of difference in their general make-up.

Beale, of Greenwich, England, devised (1854, approximately) a method whereby a face could be shown in motion by means of sixteen pictures intermittently illuminated by flashes of light. It consisted of a painting, a head and bust, of a human being, on a screen. The face, however, was replaced by a hole, behind which could be brought into view the sixteen views of a face in various stages of expression, by the means of a disc. On the circumference of the disc faces were painted. A 16-hole shutter admitted a flash of light to illuminate the painting for the instant the face on the disc appeared in its proper position, the light being cut off for a moment during the change of expression on the painted disc. This gave the illusion that the features of the painting were apparently in life motion.

Beale also was the inventor of the "Dancing Skeleton," a disc being used in front of a lantern condenser. This disc was formed of thin sheet metal, in which the figures in various attitudes of motion were cut, stencil fashion, on the margin of the disc. The various stenciled images of the skeleton being projected on the screen, interrupted by a shutter, gave the impression of the skeleton doing a dance. This arrangement was called "The Choreutoscope," and was in use in 1866.

Devignes produced the "Zoetrope," a well known device and a popular toy, in 1860. It is still being sold today.

Coleman Sellers, of Philadelphia, disclosed and patented an apparatus called the Kine-matascope, in 1861. To briefly describe this invention, let us refer back to Sir David Brewster, who, in 1819, perfected the stereoscope. This appliance is a picture holder, with an eyepiece containing two lenses, through which a person views two photographs of the same subject side by side, and they appear as one to the observer. Sellers' invention consisted of placing the stereoscope in a peep-box, and for convenience linked his pictures together in an endless band. Sellers must be given credit for the actual disclosure of an endless band of pictures viewed through an eye-piece.

Dumont, in his patent specification of June 8, 1861, says:

"Nowadays, photographers are enabled to reproduce on surfaces of great sensibility to the light what they term instantaneous images: they photograph a moving object, such as a running horse, etc., but they have never thought of obtaining but a single image of the same object, and didn't even wish to reproduce several successive ones, or the successive phases produced by motion."

This is the first suggestion as to the possibility of photographs to be taken in series."

One of the early examples of chronophotography is credited to Gedderson, who, in 1862 flashed the image of an electric spark across a sensitized plate by means of a lens and a revolving mirror. In this way he succeeded in securing photographs.

Ducos du Hauron, in his French patent (1864), describes "an apparatus for the photographic reproduction of any scene whatever, with all the changes which it has undergone during a specified time." This is the first printed mention in a patent relating to chronophotographic reproduction of a moving scene.

Edwards suggested, in 1867, taking successive separate pictures on one plate.

In the same year, Hubert Lincoln, of Providence, R. I., developed a device similar to that perfected by Devignes, a slotted cylinder and drawings in series on a strip, or paper, band.

The Brothers Hyatt are credited by Hopwood with the invention of celluloid in 1869. It was used only in "solid" form for nearly twenty years, when Goodwin, Blair, and others, experimented with celluloid and succeeded in obtaining "thin ribbons" of film, as it is known today.

A. B. Brown, in 1869, patented an optical lantern (U. S. Pat. No. 93,594), employing a Maltese cross action, a series of drawings on a glass disc, with a winged shutter as an obscurator during the picture changes. This device is of prime interest, because it was a projector showing motion pictures, and employed intermittent motion, a shutter, and a light (illuminant), three of the elements in use today in all motion picture projectors.

Huyl, of Philadelphia, devised (1870), a projection apparatus employing a disc, using a series of posed photographic slides, and projected them on a screen. On February 5, that year, he gave a public exhibition at the Academy of Music, in Philadelphia, with his device, which he called the Phasmatrope.

Dr. E. J. Marcy, in Paris, France, disclosed in 1870 a method of series of momentary exposures on a photographic negative plate by means of one lens.

Eadweard J. Muybridge began (1872) his experiments in photographing successive views of an object as it passed before a series of cameras.

Cornu, in 1873, presented the French Academy of Sciences with four photographs, taken on the same plate, of the transit of Venus across the sun's disk.

A sad commentary on the rewards of genius must be made at this point. William Dietrichsen, formerly chief chemical man for E. and H. T. Anthony Company, photographic supply dealers, invented a dry plate formula, and also an emulsion for photo-paper, in 1873-1874. During his active life, Dietrichsen also invented an ammonia process for making ice; also a breech-loading shot-gun, acquired by a Bridgeport, Conn., manufacturer of firearms, and, among other inventions, a railway safety-gate. But his experiments in step-photography, coupled with his sensitized paper, of 1873-1874, constitute his outstanding contribution to the cinematographic art. Dietrichsen was with the Anthony Company from 1862 to 1868, and later entered the photographic field, remaining until his death in 1888. He was taken ill, on the streets in New York City; removed to Bellevue Hospital for treatment, and died in that institution. His body, unclaimed, was buried in Potter's Field.

Janssen, in 1874, invented a photographic revolver, using glass plate negatives.

Wordsworth Donisthorpe, in London, England disclosed (1876) an apparatus called the "Kinensigraph." In this, he combined the phonograph, producing talking pictures, using photographs, or a series of images on a band, or strip (as suggested by Dumont in 1861).

Jean A. LeRoy, in New York City, projected, in 1876, a posed series of lantern slides, operated mechanically in connection with the lantern. This gave the illusion of motion upon the wall (or screen). First shown, late August, 1876.

Reynaud's Theatre Optique, 1883.

Among those who devoted their time to experiments on fixed plates, about this period, were Colonel Sebert and Ross, whose "wheel of life" was a novelty.

Reynaud, in Paris, France, on November 13, 1877, produced the Praxinoscope, a viewing device consisting of a glass with a painted proscenium of a stage, the opening of the stage being clear; a drum of mirrors reflecting drawings on a strip, or painted pictures in series, reflected in the mirror when viewed through the openings when in motion, gave the impression of subjects in animation.

Patents issued to Eadweard J. Muybridge, in the United States, in 1879, were numbered 212,864, and 212,865, for a method and improvements for photographing objects in motion; also, in 1883, U. S. Patent No. 279,878, for changing, or "moving" objects.

Dr. Marey, in 1882, introduced the photographic gun, similar to Janssen's revolver.

Tissander brought out the projecting Praxinoscope, in 1882, similar to the Reynaud device, but using light to project the pictures, not "peep-sight."

J. B. Moscrop obtained, in 1882, U. S. Patent, No. 253,745. This is not a motion picture device, but it bears on the general subject because of the fact that it discloses a tape, or band, with perforations on the edge of the band; an intermittent advancing means, feed and take-up sprockets, elements found today in motion picture projectors. This patent was cited in litigation regarding perforation of motion picture film.

Reynaud produced his Theatre Optique in 1883. In this theatre he used an improved apparatus (begun in 1877), by means of which he showed a series of pictures on a band, or strip. With a lantern slide in connection he produced motion pictures apparently on a stage seen on a screen by the audience. This was a form of amusement regularly shown in Paris during the greater part of 1883, and is the first motion picture theatre, of record, in the world.

Muybridge, in 1883, disclosed an apparatus and method for presenting the attitude of animals in motion. This was the result of more than eleven years of experimental work in the analysis of motion, or step-photography. Muybridge used glass plates to make his series pictures from various points of view.

Rev. Hannibal Goodwin, in 1887, disclosed a process for making a sensitized film, on which he applied for a patent. The patent (No. 610,861), was granted in 1898. Goodwin is credited with having solved "the greatest problem in the evolution of motion pictures." His film is now in general use.

LePrince, in 1888, took out British patent No. 423, on October 10, following his United States patent, No. 376,247, on January 10, that year, for "a method and apparatus for producing Animated Pictures."

Dr. Marey produced excellent examples of step-photography, in 1886, that is, a series of pictures taken from one point of vision, with one lens. These "motion pictures" was shown at the Paris Exposition in 1889. Dr. Marey showed a street scene in Paris, including a man riding a bicycle in the Champs Elysees. Dr. Marey explained his method to Thomas A. Edison, at the exposition in Paris, in 1889. Marey, continuing his experiments, perfected, in 1888, a photo-chronograph apparatus, using band form pictures, a view apparatus with a clockwork spring motor to operate the mechanism employing a feed reel. He also used a form of cam to intermittantly stop the band by gripping (or pressure) at proper intervals, together with a take-up reel, governed so as to take up the proper amount of the picture strip after it was disclosed in a sight opening.

Levinson, in 1888, disclosed a projection apparatus, employing glass slides in series of twelve in one second. On June 13, 1888, he demonstrated before the Brooklyn Academy of Photography, that a continuous negative or positive in series could be made on a roll of sensitized material.

John Carbutt, of the Keystone Dry Plate and Film Company, of Philadelphia, produced, in 1888, a sensitized celluloid used later by Dickson for his experiments at the Edison laboratories.

Adams disclosed a crude form of a device for a lantern (British patent, No. 16,785; November 19, 1888). The film was gripped between rollers and a brake-block and the feed advanced by a spring roller. This is interesting, from the fact that it is one form of a device to show motion pictures by projection. Adams used no perforation on the film band.

PROVISIONAL SPECIFICATION.
Improved Apparatus for Taking Photographs in Rapid Series.
We, WILLIAM FRIESE-GREENE, Photographer, of 92, Piccadilly, in the County of London, and MORTIMER EVANS, Civil Engineer, of Savile Club, Piccadilly, aforesaid, do hereby declare the nature of this invention to be as follows—

Friese-Greene's preamble to his English patent papers, 1889.

William Friese-Greene on June 21, 1889, disclosed a practical camera to produce step-photographs, or series, on unperforated film. In May, of that year, Friese-Greene made a negative of a scene on the Strand (or Esplanade), at Brighton, England, where his laboratory was located. He used a paper negative, 2½ inches wide by 1½ inches deep. This was the wide film, used later by others. Another instance of Friese-Green's activities was the photographing of a scene at Hyde Park Corner, London, in early October, 1889. This was projected, by the inventor, at the Photographic Convention held in the Town Hall, Chester, the following year.

Friese-Greene, upon whom the highest tribunal in the United States conferred the honor of "Father of the Motion Picture" in relation to step-photography, had earlier (1885) shown an apparatus for taking and producing animated movement by merely turning a handle of his machine, employing glass plates.

In 1887 he progressed to a point where he exhibited some pictures taken on glass, in his window, in Piccadilly, London, causing quite a stir. These pictures were animated. The police asked Friese-Greene to desist, owing to the crowds, and he stopped. He used celluloid film in 1889, the celluloid replacing his paper bands used earlier in that year. Many other patents were issued to this inventor, and his co-worker, Mortimer Evans.

Anschutz, of Lissa, disclosed the Tachyscope in 1889. This was commonly called "The Electrical Wonder."

Mortimer Evans, of London, co-worker with Wm. Friese-Greene, perfected in 1890, a camera for taking ten pictures a second.

Marey, in 1890, disclosed his first film apparatus with a mechanical compressor. This was a friction method of advancing the film for inspection.

Londe, in 1890, gave a summary and description of "La Chronophotographie."

Thomas A. Edison disclosed a film with one row of perforations in 1890. No general use was made of this film by Mr. Edison, so far as the records show.

Friese-Greene in 1890 obtained a patent on a double projector, using two films, and referred to as the di-optic projector, showing on the sheet what the eye misses during blinking.

Varley obtained a British patent on a camera, in 1890. The film was steadied by the action of two spring pawls which gripped it against two rollers. The revolution of a cam, periodically thrown forward against the film was sufficient to draw an exact picture-length down. The came also operated a double shutter, by he means of levers.

Edison filed application for patents, on August 24, 1891, for his Kinetoscope, and for his Kinetograph Camera. The patent on the Kinetoscope issued to him as of date of March 14, 1893 (No. 493,426). The patent on the camera issued as of date of August 31, 1897 (No. 589,168).

In June, 1891, Edison disclosed the facts relating to his Kinetograph. This was a peep-sight, viewing apparatus. "The Kinetograph reproducer," says a writer of the day, "now in use at Edison's laboratory, Lewellyn Park, Orange, N. J., is regarded only as the basis for still further development. Photographs are taken first from a living person in active motion—dancing, gesticulating, bowing, taking off his hat, grimacing, or flinging his arms about. This is done with a camera regulated by electricity, having a mechanism and other details of preparation specially devised for the purpose. At the time of the present writing it is impossible to give any illustration of the recording apparatus.

"But it may be said here that photographic impressions are received through it on a thin gelatine band which takes 46 impressions in a second. The band, or strip, runs along with prodigious rapidity behind the lens. Taking 46 pictures in a second, it would take in one minute 2,760, and in one hour 165,600. With the pictures an inch wide, and spaces of an inch between, it must travel $7\frac{2}{3}$ feet every second. . . . A point of the utmost importance is this: Only one forty-sixth of a second can be allowed for the whole process of taking a photograph and for also moving the band along a certain distance, so that it will be ready for the next impression. . . . To give it such exposure to obtain a distinct image, yet carry it forward quickly enough to receive strip with ease the required number of negative images, each one of them being half an inch in diameter. . . ."

So much for this detailed description of the taking of the picture on the gelatine band. As to the reproducer, or peep-box, we read:

"The continuous strip containing these photo-impressions is, it will be understood, merely a negative. It can be used in the reproducer,* and a good telling effect can be got from it. But the intention is always to print from the negative a positive strip. The positive strip, then, on being put into the 'reproducing' box, or cabinet, is deftly borne along very fast under a very small aperture, in which there is a disc of slightly magnifying glass.

"A miniature incandescent lamp placed below the translucent band illuminates the figures on it, making them very vivid, and so, as they fly past, while we are gazing through the disc, they mingle on the retina of the eye, and we see the little man wave his arm without hitch or pause as naturally and as flexibly as though he were made of nerve and muscle."

The gelatine band, or positive, was fed from one reel to another, under the sighting aperture, with a revolving shutter having four openings. The shutter was synchronized to put each opening directly over the image, so that a person looking into the box would see the images pass in succession as they mingle.

While on this subject, it will be of interest to note that William Kennedy Laurie Dickson, the English mechanical engineer, was associated with Edison in the latter's laboratories, and developed the devices, including the photographic microscopic images (1886-1887) on a cylinder in connection with the phonograph. His next development was the "peep-box" for Edison, known throughout the world as the Kinetoscope. Dickson remained with Edison for a number of years after the Kinetoscope was in use. After quitting the United States, Dickson went to Paris, where he was associated with Dr. Marey in the College de France. Mr. Dickson now resides in Boulogne, France.

Twenty years ago, the London correspondent of a French scientific publication interviewed Dickson.

This most important and enlightening contribution to the literature of the motion picture art, translated from the French, with Mr. Dickson's rather freehand sketches, follows:

"The events which have taken place at present in the cinematographic world of the United States have brought forward the eminent personality of Edison.

"It is known that the wizard of applied electricity has just received from the U. S. Patent Office the confirmation of his rights to the industrial ownership of the kinetoscope.

The mechanism of the shutter of the original Edison Kinetoscope

That marks the end of lengthy law suits brought by him against different manufacturers, and the final adjudication of his rights.

"But can the kinetoscope, the invention of which no one denies, be considered as the only type of the moving picture machines in exploitation?

"The American courts have also had to take into consideration another model, known as the Biograph, which Edison claimed also as one of his inventions. But it was found that this patent was absolutely original.

"This official recognition of the two forms of machines compels us to take notice of the man who was associated with the experiments that made possible the manufacture of the Kinetoscope and the Biograph. This was the inventor, W. K. L. Dickson, who, for eighteen years, was Edison's collaborator, and one of those whom the illustrious savant held in highest esteem. We have thought it, therefore, fitting to visit Mr. Dickson in his laboratory, in London at this time.

Mechanism of the early Biograph camera

"We met Mr. Dickson in his laboratory, in the Strand, and he consented to tell us about his first years of collaboration with Edison. Dickson had undertaken electrical, mechanical, optical, and photographic enterprises on his own, and in the service of several firms, and could point with pride to his achievements when he returned to his labor as a fertile inventor. It is not surprising that Mr. Dickson speaks of Edison with admiration.

"Let us in a few words recall the milestones of Dickson and Edison in the investigation of the motion picture.

"In 1880 we find them both occupied in problems relating to electric light. In 1882, at the age of 28 years, Mr. Dickson was general director of the electric plant in the great factory in New York, and undertook the responsibility of laying the underground telephone wires of that city. In 1886, Edison asked his collaborator to help him in his private laboratory in the perfection of an important system for the electrical separation of minerals.

"It was while working together, during that year, that Edison said to Dickson: 'Find me an apparatus, somewhat like the zoetrope, which may reproduce a great number of photographs and images in combination with my phonograph.'

"Edison did not refer to the matter again for quite some time. We continued, therefore, working," Mr. Dickson went on, in the solution of problems relating to the magnetic separation of minerals, night and day.

“It was in 1887 when we brought to light the first appliance of the kind suggested by Edison. I cannot give you the complete details of this apparatus, which was then in its rudimentary stage. It is enough to state that the photographs were taken on glass cylinders, which had previously been emulsionized and provided with a motion in time with that of the phonograph cylinder record. We used by turns, Carbutt film, and strips of paper or oilcloth. It is useless to tell you that the results were not brilliant, and that we had to condemn our tests many times.

"It was at that moment that Mr. Eastman intervened, at our request, to furnish the sensitized celluloid strips, or bands, suitable for instantaneous photography. After further investigations, Mr. Eastman showed me a sample, which I joyfully brought from the Rochester plant. It was a strip of film, of which we expected marvels. It was true that we found this film still inferior, but it had qualities that gave us hopes for the future.

“Our work began again, and this time we concentrated in the mechanism of ‘stop and go,’ and then in a plan to perfect them.

"We used, at first, non-perforated film, with a serrated edge, and a cog wheel geared itself in the serrations. Later, we found it necessary to make a perforation in the film, first tried on one side, and then on both sides."

"While talking, Mr. Dickson drew several sketches which illustrated the hesitating beginning of his experiments.

“But investigations, undertaken by me, resulted, in 1888, in the creation of an apparatus which combined a photographic camera and a phonographic recorder. This machine was called later, the Phonokinetograph.’

"This was fully described in a book written

Dickson has here sketched his first tests in his efforts to achieve a form of perforation on the edge of his film band. The thick film of Carbutt was used, with a gear wheel to advance the film. Then follows the watch movement (Geneva, star and cam) inter-gearred, after which experiment Dickson shows he tried a single line of perforation. This did not work out satisfactorily, and Dickson tried the double line of perforation.

by Dickson in collaboration with his sister, Antonia, and which was offered to Edison as a farewell from Mr. Dickson.

"At this time Mr. Dickson left Edison's laboratory to become the creator and manager of the Portable Electric Company, abandoning all the investigations he had undertaken in regard to animated photography.

"However, he spoke of the latter to his friends, and one of them, H. N. Marvin, asked him to produce an original machine for animated images different from the Kinetoscope. It was then that Mr. Dickson built, in collaboration with Mr. Marvin and Herman Haines' flickerless projector, equipped for two film records to alternately occupy the screen.

Casler, the apparatus known later as the Mutoscope, using the images taken with the Biograph camera, made by the same group of collaborators, and which the American courts have just declared to be original and independent of the Edison patents.

"A firm was established to commercialize it, the directors of which were E. B. Koopman, Mr. Marvin, Mr. Casler, and Mr. Dickson.

"Edison, poorly advised by his lawyers, planned to bring suit against the Biograph. He could not expect to win, because it was evident that their model was original, and had nothing to do with his patents. The proof lies in the terms of the decision of the court, which established for all time a very definite distinction between the Kinetoscope and the Biograph. Let us add that the apparatus of Messrs. Dickson and Casler has undergone improvements."

Demeny, in 1892, disclosed his Phonoscope, a combination of a series of lantern slides, lantern projector and record. In other words, voice and picture combined. The talking picture screened.

roller feed; intermittent clutch; friction roller take-up, in ratio eight to one. To illustrate: the feed roller advanced eight pictures to one revolution constant, while intermittent clutch roller made eight revolutions to one of the feed roller. The take-up roller had the same speed as the feed roller, using an upper and lower loop.

Demeny, in October, 1893, disclosed the Biographe, in which the film was fed from one reel to another, being steadied by a pressure frame on the aperture plate. The take-up, however, was mounted eccentrically. This, on its downward path (or pull) gave an intermittent advance to the film, and rolled up the film previously pulled down through the pressure plate and aperture. The amount of film rolled up on the take-up reel, therefore, increased during the working of the apparatus, and varied the amount of film pulled down at each revolution. This caused a constant misframing of the picture, and the apparatus, with its main feature of the intermittent take-up roller, was called "the unworkable roller." It was not a successful projector.

Marey, in June, 1893, disclosed a non-reversible chronophotographic apparatus.

not unlike that disclosed by Varley in 1890.

LeRoy, in February, 1894, disclosed and used a projector employing perforated film of the type used in Kinetoscopes, and projected the pictures on a screen, using the sprocket feed, and "pitman" to advance the film intermittently and a take-up sprocket.

The LeRoy projector of February 5, 1894, was not patented, although the projector, "LeRoy's Marvelous Cinematographe," was used for road shows, from February 5, 1894, to July 6, 1897.

Riley's Kineoptoscope, developed in Bradford, England, 1895; commercialized in U. S., 1896. An attachment for the stereopticon.

Latham's Eidoloscope, which bears the date of 1894

Woodville Latham, a college professor, although not of a mechanical turn of mind, had an idea, and in 1894 he secured the services of a competent mechanic, who for a number of years was in the employ of the Edison laboratories, named Eugene Lauste. The latter successfully produced the "Eidoloscope," as well as perforators, printers, cameras, etc. The patent on the so-called "Latham loop," which appeared with his Eidoloscope, was not sustained in patent litigation. Many other earlier inventors used the "loop." This "loop" (or "slack") indicates part of the film, being fed through the projector, flowing free at the top of the mechanism, after passing from the "feed" roller, down past the illumination, to prevent "breaking."

First picture taken with the Eidoloscope camera (1894)

Thomas Armat and C. F. Jenkins, joint inventors of record, filed an application (Serial No. 560,793) on August 28, 1895, on a projector, called the Phantoscope. A patent issued later. Sometime thereafter in the same year, Armat purchased Jenkins' interest, and entered into an agreement with T. A. Edison, under which the latter produced what is known as "the Edison Vitascope." Three patents were issued to Jenkins, at other times, including one for a "peep machine," with an interrupted illumination, using perforated film. The Cinematograph was developed in May,

1895, by the Lumiere Brothers, Auguste and Louis, in Lyons, France, and used in Keith's Union Square Theatre, June 29, 1896. The "Charge of the Dragoons" was the picture first time shown by the Cinematograph. It was also used for one month in the Eden Musee, opening day and date with the Union Square. Legal entanglements removed this projector from the Eden Musee for a brief period, and after adjudication, it resumed its

The Biograph projector, and Biograph pictures followed the Cinematograph in Keith's. This company was able to produce "local" shots quickly, and one of the most popular of the early pictures was "Dead Man's Curve," a bit of Broadway, just outside the theatre.

C. F. Jenkins, in 1895, disclosed the photo-chronographic camera, called the Phantoscope camera. This employed a continuous moving film, a disc with sixteen lenses, working in time with a picture length. When in optical union, the exposure was made. Interest centers in the similarity of this device with that of Uchatius' arrangement (1853). No comparison is recorded as to efficiency.

T. H. Blair, inventor of a sensitized celluloid film stock, patented his projector, the Vivontoscope, in England and the United States, 1895-1898. The sale to the Eastman Kodak Company of the various companies founded by Blair, coupled with an agreement that the latter remain out of all business connected with photography for a term of years, prevented the exploitation of this projector at that time.

Gray showed a projector, June 4, 1895, using light at right angle to film. A beam of light was thrown through film intermittently by means of a revolving mirror. The film was advanced intermittently by means of a claw movement.

Riley Brothers, of Bradford, England, late in 1895, developed the Kineoptoscope. This projector, using a claw movement, was an attachment to be placed in front of the stereopticon, was marketed in the United States in 1896, and was stopped, by court order, as an alleged infringement on existing patents.

Eberhardt Schneider, in July, 1894, when employed by the Krupps Works, Essen, Germany, conceived and proceeded to construct a projector. This was finished in the United States, late in the following year, and was used by him in 1896 when he was employed as an operator in the Eden Musee. This projector was called the Wonderoscope, and was first used in a regular theatre in the Empire, Brooklyn, 1896. It was the basis of his later, commercial projector, the German-American Cinematograph. Schneider produced, during a period of approximately twenty-three years (1896-1919), fifty inventions, thirty-eight of which were covered by patents, and at his death, many patents were pending, some of which issued following his demise. Schneider was the first motion picture projectionist in the Eden Musee. This famous establishment was under the management and direction of Rich G. Hollaman, during its whole career. The latter was an outstanding patron of the best in motion pictures, in the early days, making many trips to Europe to purchase subjects for his program. He stood squarely with the inventors, in the early days, and often aided them materially.

R. W. Paul, in London, in 1895-6, perfected his Theatrograph projector, which was used extensively in a number of large music halls and theatres in the English capital. Paul also produced many interesting film subjects, for slot machines as well as for projectors. One of these subjects, "Queen Victoria's Jubilee" (1896.) was shown in Carnegie Hall, February 28, 1927, after thirty-one years.

James H. White, in the Edison laboratories, disclosed and used, in 1896, magazine boxes for "daylight loading" of motion picture cameras.

A projector, called the "Kinetograph," was patented on October 13, 1896, by Newman and Guardia, that contained several unusual features. First, it did not employ a shutter. Second, the period of rest of the film was 90% and the intermittent advance of the film was but 10%, thereby doing away with the shutter. This high rate of advance of the film resulted in a flickerless picture, but the strain of the film was terrific. Another patent issued to these inventors, on further improvements, one year later.

Amet's Magniscope, a claw movement projector, acquired considerable popularity during 1896-1897.

E. J. Rector's Veriscope (1897), a projector using special wide film, owes its renown to the fact that the projector was used as a camera to photograph the Fitzsimmons-Corbett fight, in Carson City, Nev., March 17, 1897. In August of that year the Veriscope was used as a projector at the Academy of Music in New York City to project the Carson City fight. There were approximately twenty of these projectors built and used to show this fight throughout the United States, and elsewhere.

Herman Casler, of Canastota, N. Y., invented the Mutograph camera, which made the pictures for the Biograph projector. He experimented for several years, making his devices public in 1896-1897, and the Mutoscope, a coin operated peep-box, is now in use in penny-arcades throughout the world.

In 1896, Unger and Krug invented a projector which was later acquired by the J. B. Colt Company, and marketed in 1897 as the Colt Criterioscope. This was a splendid projector, sturdily built and capable of producing an almost flickerless picture. When fire destroyed the Colt factory, in New York City, several years later, it was found that all the jigs, dies and patterns had been destroyed. The cost of replacing these requisites would have been enormous, and business in those days did not warrant the Colt Company continuing the manufacture of this projector.

The International Film Company, of New York City, one of the first manufacturers and distributors of film for "peep box" and projecting machines late in 1895, developed the Projectograph, made by Edmond Kuhn, closely following the lines of the Armat Vitascope in operation but not in structure. The sale of this projector was extensive during hundred projectors were made and sold, the first bringing $1,000, to a South American buyer, and the last machine was disposed of at $100. The Spanish-American war disrupted the business, and owing to the scarcity of money, the projector was taken off the market.

Early in 1897 a projector was developed in the Edison works, which became nationally known as Edison's Projection Kinetoscope. This projector was an efficient instrument and remained in use for many years, and until it lost its appeal under the influx of more modern projectors.

Elias B. ("Farmer") Dunn, widely known as "the weather man," official U. S. Forecaster for the U. S. Government, in New York City, became famous through his use of the Excellograph, experiments on which were begun in 1894 and completed in the latter part of the Micagraph, a number of which were marketed. Cannock brought his projector to a high standard of efficiency, which in later years developed into the Simplex.

Thus we find cameras and projectors constantly refined during the onward march of the years; raw film stock passing through various stages of refinement from the early paper and gelatine band processes to the sensitized celluloid film, and in the field of projection we see pictures, first put into the viewing boxes, then taken out and put on the screen.

The origin of the lens, the eye of the camera, is lost in obscurity. In the Assyrian Department of the British Museum, London, a lens, discovered on the site of ancient Ninevah, of the period of about 1,000 years

The Mutoscope-Biograph machine shop.

B. C., is on view. Archaeologists do not attempt to classify this particular lens, as to its use. It is a known fact that the Chinese used round lenses of ground glass in the earliest ages, for sight or reading, and as a burning glass. It is a fact that Nero, the Roman Emperor, 37-68 A. D., used a lens ground from an emerald as an eye-glass. Proceeding from this period, we find astronomers using lenses to examine infinite space. The first use of the lens for photographic purposes was by Joseph Nicephore Niepce, who, in 1831, used a lens taken from his grandfather's telescope. The camera was made from a cigar box.

It is not, perhaps, unreasonable to suggest that the lens was developed by the priests for use in their mysteries. It is known that the Egyptians and Greeks utilized the concave mirror to project pictures on the screen formed by smoke from the altars, the first hint of the "magic lantern."

The pioneers who experimented in the field of the camera included Muybridge (on the multiple principle), LePrince, Marey, Friese-Greene, Edison and Dickson, Kuhn, Schneider, Casler and others.

Goodwin, Blair and Carbutt, and Allen and Rowell, were among the early developers of sensitized raw film stock, and later, the Eastman Kodak Company, the DuPont Company, Agfa, Gaevaert, came into the field.

It was inevitable, that the pioneers who developed the camera would be among the first to search about for some means of "viewing" that which they had photographed on plates, paper bands, gelatine bands or sensitized celluloid film as the years wrought this evolution. The first "viewing" was done in boxes, or cabinets, until Demeny, LeRoy, Armat, Latham, Kuhn, Casler, following the earlier experiments of Muybridge, Marey and others, took the pictures out of the box and put them on the screen.

Muybridge, it will be observed on looking back over the changes in those years, had no thought to the commercial aspects of his studies. In 1881, in Paris, he discussed the whole subject of step-photography with Dr. Marey, whose work was along purely scientific lines, and they chatted, as Dr. Marey later wrote, regarding the possibility of turning the pictures, in a viewing apparatus, to public use, with some financial returns. But neither of these men cared to pause in their labors to capitalize any phase of the subject.

An early Mutoscope Comedy, 1897-98.

On February 27, 1888, Muybridge, in an interview with Edison, urged a combination of the phonograph with the Zoopraxiscope, explaining how pictures might be made for the machine. In 1889, Edison, in London en route to the Paris Exposition, visited the laboratory of Friese-Greene, later paying Dr. Marey, in Paris, a visit. Edison, on his return to the United States, became more deeply interested in the commercial possibilities of pictures than before, and he diverted Dickson to experiments that resulted in the Kinetograph, and to the later development of the Kinetoscopes.

Edison, after perfecting the Kinetoscope, disliked the notion that pictures could be projected on a screen, and inveighed against at every opportunity. He said he could see "the end of the Kinetoscope" with the development of a projector.

James H. White, famous Edison cameraman and producer, who beginning in 1894, took many of the earliest Kinetoscope pictures, had "dug up" Armat in Washington, D. C., in 1895, and brought the inventor together in a meeting with Norman T. Raff and Frank R. Gammon, agents and distributors in the United States for Kinetoscopes and for Kinetoscope films. The latter believed the Armat projector solved the projection problem to their 1897. His projector was rather generally used in parts of the United States and Europe for several years. About twenty of these projectors were built, and used by "Farmer" Dunn in exhibitions controlled by him.

In 1899, Francis B. Cannock, a skilled mechanic formerly employed by the Vitagraph Company, was employed by Rich. G. Hollaman, of the Eden Musee, as chief projectionist. During Cannock's employment he developed, in his spare time, a projector which became nationally known as the Edengraph, financed by Mr. Hollaman. Cannock remained nine years as chief projectionist in the Eden Musee, with Michael Berkowitz as his assistant. The latter also developed a projector, satisfaction, and entered into an agreement with Armat to manufacture his projector, calling it the Vitascope. The Armat projector was delivered to Raff and Gammon, in their offices in the Postal Telegraph Building, No. 253 Broadway, in December, 1895, and installed.

Edison, at first protesting against the waste of his valuable time looking at the device, finally, after several days, consented to give it his attention. The projector had been set up in a room. Holes made in a wall permitted the pictures (Kinetoscope films!) to be shown on a screen on the wall in the adjoining room, where Edison sat! Messrs. Raff, Gammon and White sat with him.

Edison then admitted that "it could be done," and a ten-year contract was entered into with Raff and Gammon. However, in 1897, Edison decided to produce the Projecting Kinetoscope, and the Vitascope, based on the Armat projector, died a lingering death. The Biograph projector followed.

Due credit must be given to Edison, who, with the aid of his financial and business connections, and an extensive advertising campaign, was able to put motion pictures before the world as a commercial proposition.

GEORGE EASTMAN

The motion picture is greatly indebted to Mr. Eastman, who, through the medium of his great research laboratories in Rochester, N. Y., has developed the production of raw film stock to the highest standard, and remains, after more than forty years, a leader in photographic supplies. Mr. Eastman has contributed greatly, by his energetic efforts, in placing motion pictures on a higher plane, from the photo-chemical standpoint. His laboratories are never closed to those who wish for betterment and progress in the industry. He is one of the patrons of the art of motion pictures; has endowed The Kodak City with one of the most beautiful edifices devoted to the projection of pictures, and has made it possible for future generations to acquire a training in every line of the cinema art.

Frank R. Gammon (left) and Norman T. Raff (right) constituted the firm of Raff and Gammon, famous in the pioneer days as energetic and capable business men. They were the distributors in the United States of Edison's Kinetoscopes and films. In 1895 they acquired the rights of distribution of the Vitascope, the first commercial projector. They retired in 1897. For many years prior to the demise of these far-seeing pioneers, they occupied a high plane in American business and financial circles, where they acquired a reputation for sterling worth and honesty. They were among the founders of the industry as we know it today.

A HISTORY OF MOTION PICTURE ADVERTISING

By P. A. Parsons

Advertising Manager of Pathe

IN the days when newspapers and the best magazines welcomed patent medicine advertising, the "Before and After" style of copy was highly popular with the Adsmiths of the time.

At the top of a remedy ad would be placed the likeness of a cadaverous individual obviously about to breathe his last. Flanking him to the right would be the cut of another but vastly different person. Smiling, cheeks filled out, head erect, shoulders squared, could this Hercules of Health be one and the same as the famine victim to the left? Even so. An individualistic moustache, goatee or burnside, carefully planted on both countenances, made the identification complete. These wonders had, of course, been wrought by a few bottles of the sarsaparilla or malt whiskey, or what not.

To one who goes back through the bound volumes of MOVING PICTURE WORLD, motion picture advertising of the early days seems just as anaemic and lifeless as the "horrible example" of those ancient patent medicine advertisements. Our modern advertising furnishes contrast not only in quality but in quantity.

When the motion picture first started to take hold a condition was created whereby control of essential patents brought about a practical monopoly, vested in a few concerns. Advertising is stifled in such an atmosphere. If the men who are your outlet have to take just what you are willing to sell them, incentive for advertising is almost wholly lacking.

The first number of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD was dated March 9, 1907. It is without cover and printed on a cheap stock. The only full page advertisement is that of Miles Bros. Renting Service, type set and without art. There are half page ads of Biograph and Power's Cameragraph, the latter illustrated with a cut of a very primitive looking projector. There are ten other advertisements, varying from two or three inches single column to two or three inches double. There are only four film advertisements. What others there are, are devoted to slides and projectors.

Skimming through those early pages of the WORLD, we find Edison advertising in December, 1907, "the latest feature subject, Parsifal, 1,975 feet in length," at the "special price" of $335.75. A large percentage of the films offered were for outright sale.

Typical of this early advertising is an ad of Essanay's on "Where Is My Hair?" The text of the advertisement is worthy of repetition, illustrating as it does the amount of water that has run under the bridge during the last twenty years, both in production and advertising. "This new subject is too funny for words. Imagine the humor that can be derived from a crabbed old man who is entirely bald, and lays his precious wig out on a window sill for an airing, only to have it stolen by another bald headed man. Such was the case, and every man who had the misfortune to have a wealth of hair had to undergo the painful experience of having it severely pulled. While 'baldy' was out scouring for his lost treasure, everyone who came in his path got it, and got it good, until finally a copper who chanced to have his head sticking around a corner gets a yank which starts him 'hot-foot' after the hair-puller, and behold, a fellow who chances to be wearing a wig comes his way, the wig is snatched off, and 'baldy' laughs with delight, thinking he has recovered his hair. The poor fellow who is left bald-headed is grabbed by the cop, as minus his hair he resembles the one who did pull the officer's locks." We are told that the length of this far-off predecessor of the brilliant Harold Lloyds of today was 400 feet, and that the price was 12 cents per foot.

Early advertisers seemed to consider a synopsis of the story the main thing to advertise. The names of the stars and directors meant nothing, for they were never mentioned.

For several years after 1907 motion picture advertising was primitive indeed. As one studies it during the days of its infancy, the conclusion is inevitable that it was decidedly inferior to advertising outside the business.

This is not strange, for the first experienced man to be hired by any film company to handle press work was Epes W. Sargent, who was engaged by J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph, in the Summer of 1909 to get out five or six publicity items each week, which were sent to the two trade papers. Every second week he wrote the semi-monthly Bulletin, which supplemented the trade paper advertising. This, however, was only a part time task, consuming about two hours a week and for which Sargent received $10 a week. He was with Vitagraph about eight weeks when he resigned to go to the Lubin Company, and was succeeded by Sam S. Spedon, formerly editor of "Talent," who was the first man to be hired by any film company to give his entire attention to advertising and publicity.

Another thing, too, was responsible for a certain timorous quality in the advertising. The business had as yet created no standards. It was feeling its way, creating precedents, not following them. Its groping is the better understood when one remembers that it was thought by almost all in the business to be the fad of a moment, from which every possible dollar should be extracted as quickly as possible with the least possible expenditure.

During this period the advertising of the film concerns was written by almost anyone in the home offices who could be gotten to write it. It was a by-product, looked upon as somewhat of a nuisance. Hopp Hadley, still in the business, recalls that in those days the scenario editor was usually picked upon to write the copy. In 1910 he was hired by Harry Aitken as Scenario Editor of Majestic Pictures, with an office in their studio on 21st street, New York, near 11th Avenue. During the brief interludes in the writing of stories for the big single reel features he performed as Advertising Manager without title as such. The manager of the company would come into his office, a trade paper representative at his heels, and say "I've taken an eighth of a page in the WORLD. Get up some kind of an ad." The solicitors went to the managers as the only recognized source of advertising revenue. Hopp goes on to say that after the manager had left, the trade paper man would beg him to write some publicity. In those days it was so difficult to fill the editorial pages that the demand for house publicity exceeded the supply.

Nineteen hundred and ten closed what may be termed the Formative Period of Motion Picture Advertising and was the beginning of

"Mabel's Lovers"

Mabel arrives at the bathing room and her maids enter. Dismayed, it takes her longer the attempt to get into the room, and when determined that before she can get through, it is necessary to get her trunk out of the room, she is obliged to wait the maid's order. When the key is turned, she enters, and when she is alone, she goes to the trunk and takes out a package. Mabel was going to get some assistance in her bathing suit, finding the package was for her, she is surprised to find it is a package for her maid who has been found out.

"AT IT AGAIN"

When Mabel goes to the bathroom, she finds her maids waiting for her. She is surprised to find that they are waiting for her to get into the bathtub. She is then shown a series of scenes where she is being attended to by her maids, and she is finally shown in the bathtub, where she is being attended to by her maids. The film is a comedy, and it is a very funny film. It is a very good film, and it is a very interesting film. It is a very good film, and it is a very interesting film. Bait

ONCE upon a time a man went fishing. The man's name was Bill.
Bill didn't know anything about fishing, but his intentions were excellent. He studied the advertisements of the fishing tackle makers. Then he purchased an equipment of the finest rod, reel, line, hooks and sinker. Taking these with him, Bill put out in a brand new skiff to the fishing grounds. But when everything was ready for the first cast, Bill found that he had entirely overlooked a most essential item, BAIT. Bait had not been mentioned in the fishing tackle ads. Bill knew nothing at all about Bait. But his confidence in his equipment was such that he went right ahead fishing with bare hooks. With a patience born of ignorance Bill kept at his work until the day was done, and then started to reel up to go home. There was something heavy on his line. It proved to be an old leather satchel. It was filled with paper money—slimy and soft, but still negotiable.

Bill's story soon spread throughout the country—people everywhere legan reading the fishing tackle ads and investing their money in good equipments and taking their time from regular business to go fishing for money with bare hooks. Needless to say, there were no more money bags caught, and many a man who had been well to do became well done and ended his days in a county poor house. But the lesson was valuable. Thousands of other fishermen discovered their folly in time. They set aside their equipments for a while and studied BAIT. Then they experimented a little, and found that, while an occasional fish could be tempted with cheap, dead bait, the big and frequent catches could be made only with LIVE, FRESH, SELECTED BAIT. And thereafter these men waved prosperous, and were known as successful fishermen.

The Moving Picture game is like fishing on shore.

Bill is the Exhibitor. The tackle and boat are the equipment and line, theatre. The good Bait is the good picture. Occasionally there is a Bill who catches money with bad pictures. He uses bare hooks. There are hundreds of other exhibitors who have heard of Bill's blind luck. They have read the fishing tackle advertisements of the manufacturers and purchased the finest equipment, only to find that the public will not bite. These men should study the Bait Question Now. They should learn the positive truth, that no matter how fine the theatre or how happy the location, it is the Picture that draws and holds the crowds. The exhibitors who learn this lesson will wax prosperous. They will be known as SUCCESSFUL exhibitors. Here's the answer to the Bait Question—

A SELECTION of the finest pictures in the world, made by the ten manufacturers whose films have long been acknowledged as incomparably su-

a period of rapid branching out, of heightened activity in advertising—a period which lasted for three years and saw the organization of advertising and publicity departments which, if crude, at least represented a long step in the right direction. We may call this period the Transitional Period, for it was the link between the dark ages of the business and the Renaissance which began in 1913.

During this period H. C. Hoagland came into the business as Advertising Manager of Pathe Freres, as Pathe was then called. Hoagland was a clever man with true advertising instinct and a gift for saying a thing in terse phrases. Though his title was Advertising Manager, like most of the tribe of those days he had to do a little of everything. He hated to write publicity—a part of every advertising man's duties in those days, and had a strong leaning toward sales and production, which resulted in the fall of 1913 of his being made Assistant General Manager. It was his promotion which resulted in the writer's coming into the Pathe organization at that time. When the United States entered the war in 1917 Hoagland went abroad for the Committee on Public Information and did not return. After a time spent with an Italian film company he became General Manager of Stoll of London, a position he occupied I understand up to about a year ago. In this period Joe Farnham also entered the business as an advertising man. Farnham is now on the Coast associated with production. Joe Brandt, now President of Columbia Pictures became advertising manager of Universal somewhere along the close of the period, succeeding R. H. Cochrane who had been doing the advertising for Imp, one of the Laemmle companies. It is only proper to recognize here Mr. Cochrane's splendid talents as an advertising man. He brought to his position a wide experience in agency advertising, a brilliant mind, and a gift for writing strong sales copy that has never been surpassed in the business. I think I am right in saying that of the earlier advertising men in the business he was the best qualified for his position by reason of training, instinct and talent. During the years when he personally wrote the advertising for the Laemmle interests, his copy shone like a beam from a lighthouse, illuminating the dark wastes of pages where the average was mediocre, to say the least. The Universal of today owes much to that early advertising of "Bob" Cochrane. Others who came into pictures as advertising men during this period were Lee Dougherty of Biograph, Frank Bannon of Edison, Hugh D'Arcy of Lubin, Phil Lang of Kalem, Chester Beecroft of the General Film, Bert Ennis as assistant to Spedon at Vitagraph, and Hopp Hadley of Reliance. Another was Don Meaney of Essanay. Hugh D'Arcy of Lubin was celebrated not so much as an advertising man as he was as a poet, and his latter fame rested upon one poem, "The Face on the Floor," highly popular with vaudevillians of a bygone generation. D'Arcy died not long ago. With the coming of these men advertising stepped forward. It could not develop as it might have owing to the fact that every advertising manager was also expected to write publicity as part of his duties, a diversion of effort that benumbed originality and made proper concentration impossible. But ideas and practices emerged from chaos and advertising could be recognized as such. Beecroft was one of the outstanding figures of this period. He knew how to write, he had ideas, and as long as he was advertising manager of General Film they were well served. One of his ads under the heading of "Bait" was much commented upon, appearing in the issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD of November 1, 1913. It is too long to quote here.

As long as the General Film Co. ruled supreme there was little encouragement for advance in the quality of film advertising. The tendency of monopoly is to stifle initiative through lack of incentive. The various companies making up the General—Pathe, Vitagraph, Selig, Essanay, Kalem, Lubin, Kleine, Biograph, Edison and Melies, took about the same amount of advertising in the trade papers each week, and such advertising as there was does not strike one as competitive. It was not until the "independents" came into the field, full-armed for battle, Universal, Famous, Fox and Mutual, and the General started to crumble, that motion picture trade paper advertising became competitive and blossomed out. The period which was to follow, that from 1913 to 1923, showed the widest expansion in advertising, not only in quantity but in quality. It accompanied, and to a large extent resulted from, a wide open market and a fight for supremacy. Its evident recent decline is undoubtedly due to the removal of the condition which gave it its stimulus.

During the Transitional Period an advertising man was apt to be evolved by conditions rather than by the usual advertising experience. Hopp Hadley tells how he got his start in pictures back in 1898. He was then a freshman in New York University. Anxious to earn some money during the summer vacation, with another man he picked up a foreign picture called "The Passion Play," and another called "Fighting in the Philippines." This latter production was 500 feet long and depicted some twenty colored men in scanty clothing and armed with spears, clambering over a stone wall. Hopp says none of these men were killed but the producers should have been. With a two pole tent he and his associate toured through Pennsylvania and Ohio, a week to a town. Hopp was the advertising man. With a can of black paint and some large sheets of wrapping paper he made some crude three sheets which were hung up in front of the tent. The slogan used in this pioneer film advertising was "The characters actually move on the screen." Hopp took in the dimes at the door, played a violin between reels, sang "The Palms" and "Oh Holy Night" to give proper atmosphere to "The Passion Play," and piled Pelion on Ossa by the means of gorgeously tinted slides showing angels and cherubs. On the conclusion of this primitive road show he sought well-earned repose in a hammock strung between two side poles. The performance was frequently varied by the exhibition of a strip of film with a brief lecture on what made the characters move in the photographs. It is not strange that on his graduation from college he went into the show business.

Bert Ennis is another active figure in today's motion picture business who dates back to 1910. He came from a piano act in vaudeville, where he was teamed with the late Harry Ennis. The two were also in the music publishing business in New York's original "tin-pan alley" down on 28th street, between Broadway and 6th Avenue. He had the show business in his blood and saw in the crude motion pictures of the day a coming rival to the show business as then known. In 1910 he joined Vitagraph at their old studios in Flatbush, in Sam Spedon's department. At that time Vitagraph was one of the most powerful of the General Film group, and was still under the active management of the late "Pop" Rock, J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith. On the same publicity staff was Ray Gallagher now of the Motion Picture News. Ennis provided the first music cue sheets for pictures, running them in the house organ, the Vitagraph Bulletin. He recalls that Spedon sponsored what was probably the first propaganda film, "How Vitagraph Films Are Made," a reel showing Maurice Costello, John Bunny, Flora Finch, Earl Williams, Ralph Ince, Norma Talmadge, Lillian Walker, Anita Stewart and others in action, shots of the studio, tank for the "water stuff," printing room, projection room, publicity department, executive offices, etc. Charlie Fuller, one of the industry's first personal representatives in sales matters, took this film on the road, and showed it at conventions, sales gatherings, etc. Spedon also inaugurated personal appearances of stars, going to the dingy houses of the period, giving an introductory talk, and introducing Costello, Bunny, Finch, et. al., who drew down $5 or $10 a night for the effort.

Bert recalls the House Organs of the day, published by all the leading film companies, and which were considered valuable advertising media. About the only survivor, to the best of my knowledge, is the Universal Weekly, so ably edited by Paul Gulick since 1914.

Advertising men of today in looking over the advertising of this time will be struck by the almost absolute lack of emphasis upon star names and those of directors. Hadley relates that when he became advertising and publicity manager of Reliance that company had just taken over D. W. Griffith and most of the galaxy of stars which had made Biograph famous. The Biograph had never allowed the names of its players and directors to be used in advertising and publicity. The theory was that if they became famous it would be necessary to pay larger salaries or else lose them to competitors. Reliance lifted the lid of secrecy that had hidden these people. With their faces known to millions their names were practically unknown. The public was hungry for all the interesting facts. Newspapers and magazines were phoning in all day long begging for stories. It was not a question of how or where to place the publicity but how to satisfy the demand.

Bert Ennis had a similar experience. In 1912-1913 he went with Kessell and Baumann of the N. Y. Motion Picture Co., originators of the famous Keystone, Broncho, Kay Bee and Domino brands. Under the Keystone banner were gathered stars who were destined to write their history large in motion pictures; Charlie Chaplin, Mack Sennett, Mabel Normand, Ben Turpin, Charlie Murray, Roscoe Arbuckle and Ford Sterling. There is magic in these names today, fourteen years later. Under the other brands were Thomas H. Ince, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton, Louise Glaum and William S. Hart. It is hard to realize that with such remarkable personalities to publicize, Ennis was the recipient of written rebukes from both Ince and Sennett because he played up the players rather than the brands. Both Ince and Sennett came to realize the value of star publicity and rode to fame with the aid of the same weapon which they had once turned aside.

The trade paper field of those days differed greatly from that of today. Of those which sprang into being between 1910 and 1913 and challenged the WORLD, none are left today. "Motography," published by the late Ed Mcck, was absorbed by "The Exhibitors Herald." No one thinks of the "Nickoledeon" any more. "The Exhibitor's Times" is likewise gone. Alfred Saunders "Moving Picture News" was the lineal ancestor of the present "Motion Picture News." The "Film Index," published by the Patents Co. because of the need of a trade paper, was the first of all and became merged into the WORLD in 1911. It was started by W. T. Rock, of Vitagraph and J. A. Berst, then General Manager of Pathe Freres, and was afterward taken over by the Patents Co. Mr. Berst is now Manager of Pathex, Inc., a Pathe corporation.

Outside the straight trade papers were several magazines which at one time received a lot of film advertising. The "Clipper" was one, and for a time had all the leading film companies on its books. But being a vaudeville and show paper, and not much in sympathy with the motion picture infant which was growing at such a tremendous pace, it didn't play the game in the matter of co-operation and publishing news of the industry, and eventually lost all its picture accounts. It has since been absorbed by "Variety." The "Clipper" was still getting film advertising at the time I came into the business in 1913, and some of my early copy was placed in it. The "Billboard" was another paper that for a while got a lot of picture advertising. That paper lost its big chance so far as pictures were concerned through frequent changes in the personnel of its local office. After Wen Milligan left, having created a record for tenure of service as advertising manager of the motion picture section, a different representative solicited advertising almost every week. It didn't take many weeks of this to cause a complete fade-out of film company advertising. The "Dramatic Mirror," of which Bob Welsh was once Editor, is another that has passed.

In the autumn of 1913 there was a ferment in the industry. The rapid changes, expansion of some companies and fading of others, the entrance into the field of many new companies eager to establish a foothold, and prepared to gain it with aggressiveness, new methods, new ideas and a new personnel, mark the beginning of the Third or Expansion Period. This lasted from 1913 to 1923. Those ten years were the true boom years of advertising in the industry, and it is improbable that their like will ever be seen again. The General Film was fading fast. The field was wide open. Old line companies that had the will to live had to change their methods to survive, not merely in sales and distribution, but in advertising. The trade papers swelled to unheard of proportions. From single and double page advertising the larger companies leaped to four, six, eight, twelve and even sixteen pages in single issues, and this on current, not season's product.

Selecting one year, 1919, as typical of this era of expansion, I picked at random one number in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, that dated May 24, and analyzed the advertising. This particular number carried the first announcement of United Artists, a four page insert. Hodkinson had seven pages of which four were in insert form. Metro had four; Triangle Distributing Corporation 1; Spoor-Thompson Laboratories 1; Universal eleven, of which four were insert; Famous 6; Arrow 1; Goldwyn 6; Johnny Dooley Films 1; Vitagraph 2; Capellani Productions 1; Select 4; Selznick a four page insert; Robertson-Cole 3, of which two were insert; Pathe a 2 page insert; (the Pathe schedule was light that week. Our average was 4-6) Film Clearing House an eight page insert; First National 5; Fox 2; Sawyer-Lubin 1; World Pictures 1; Continental Pictures 1; Tower Films 1; Inter-Ocean 2; Export & Import Films 1; Apollo Trading Corporation 1; E. S. Manheimer 1. This made a total of 83 pages of picture advertising alone, to say nothing of a number of pages of accessory advertising. Nineteen of these corporations are now defunct, or have been merged.

At the start of this period we find Bert Ennis advertising manager of "Eclair;" Joe Brandt, who had been private secretary of Carl Laemmle, was now advertising manager of Universal. Brandt had been an advertising man before he joined Laemmle, having been for four or five years connected with the Ben Hampton advertising agency, where he had organized a new department, and also having been the advertising manager of the "Dramatic Mirror," now defunct. Brandt functioned ably in his new position for about four years, when he was promoted to the position of general manager of Universal. He was with Universal until 1921. Phil Mindil was advertising manager of Mutual; Ben Schulberg of Famous Players; Len McChesney of Edison; Julian Solomon of Morosco-Bosworth; Joe Farnham of Lubin; Don Meaney of Essanay; Chester Beecroft of General Film; Fred Warren of Fox; Bert Adler of Thanouser; Sam Spedon of Vitagraph; Elmer McGovern of Kessell and Baumann, and the writer of Pathe Freres. There were a number of other advertising managers of this period whose names escape me.

Up to the time I went with Pathe in 1913, it was the practice in the business to have the posters made from "stills," which were selected and captioned in the advertising department, and then handed on to the lithographer to work up into posters. The litho-

WHY I INVITE YOU TO JOIN THE UNIVERSAL

(No. 519 Straight from the Shoulder Talks by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation.)

IT MAY NOT BE IN GOOD TASTE FOR ME TO PRINT THE FOLLOWING extract from a personal letter written to me by an exhibitor, but I'll take a chance on being criticised for it. He wrote:

"I BELIEVE IN YOU AND TRUST YOU WITH THE SAME CONFIDENCE that I would feel if I had been personal friends all our lives. You are the only man who has ever really had the interest of the small exhibitor at heart enough to give him a second thought and devise a way to benefit him. Your Complete Service Contract is certainly having an influence on other producers."

I CANNOT RECEIVE A LETTER CONTAINING THAT SORT OF SENTIMENT without being profoundly impressed—and with my own virtues or imperfections, but with my responsibility to all exhibitors, large and small.

SUCH A FRANK EXPRESSION FROM AN EXHIBITOR NOT ONLY SENDS my spirits soaring into the clouds, but it gives me renewed determination to make good.

THERE IS ONE MORE SENTENCE IN THIS EXHIBITOR'S LETTER WHICH I want you to see. He says:—"I have been running Universal pictures EXCLUSIVELY for four years."

THERE ARE THREE LESSONS YOU CAN DRAW FROM THIS:

FIRST, IN DEALING WITH UNIVERSAL YOU ARE DEALING WITH A concern which always has and always will lean over backward in an effort to play the game and right every wrong wherever possible.

SECOND, THE UNIVERSAL COMPLETE SERVICE CONTRACT IS SOMETHING you should look upon if you are not completely familiar with it now. We were the first to introduce such a plan. Attempts have been made to imitate it, but without any success so far.

THIRD, YOU CAN LIVE ON UNIVERSAL PICTURES EXCLUSIVELY AND really like it. Our files are full of letters from exhibitors who have used Universal ever since the company was formed. Many of them have used it almost exclusively to the exclusion of all other pictures. Our business relationship with these exhibitors, and theirs with us, has been one of the happiest experiences in my life—and I believe in their lives, too.

UNIVERSAL IS BASED ON RIGHT PRINCIPLES AND IS THEREFORE bound to be a source of strength. Universal's financial strength is great, but its moral strength is even greater. We have never indulged in trade tricks for an immediate gain, but have always built for the future and for all time!

THAT IS THE KIND OF AN INSTITUTION I NOW INVITE YOU TO associate with, either through one of our Complete Service Contracts or otherwise.

The most characteristic advertising in the industry,—Carl Laemmle's "Straight From the Shoulder Talks." This is the 519th, and "still going strong."

THE GROWTH OF A GREAT ORGANIZATION

THE METRO Goldwyn-Mayer company with only eighteen months of merged existence has done wonders.

The talk of the industry is exactly right.

How did they do it?

When you come right down to it, the answer is:

Good product.

Eighteen months ago Metro and Goldwyn and Louis B. Mayer merged their vast resources into one big company.

What mighty producing power is represented there!

WE SET out to fill a crying need. Exhibitors needed a dependable source of picture supply.

A company that could be relied on to give you the best picture work in and week-end box-office product week in and week out.

Isn't that the important thing in your business?

—To keep the crowd coming until it becomes a habit.

—To assure them of good entertainment whenever they come. That's the need we set out to fill. And we've succeeded.

EXHIBITORS HAVE made money with our pictures.

Our releases, one after another, have each written a new page in box-office history.

—Here's a company — exhibitors said, — that doesn't hand you a big one followed by a lot of flops.

Steady profits week after week.

Bravely.

Good product is the explanation of the amazing growth of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer within its short period of eighteen months.

Behind the product are showmen.

Marcel L'Her, one of the world's greatest showmen, is sponsor for the business career of the organization.

He visioned a producing source that exhibitor could rely on for the stuff they unhesitatingly know is box-office.

graphers were supposed to have their artists work over these stills and put in a dramatic touch, but they never did, at least for us. In consequence the posters were lifeless. Advertising men of today have frequent occasion to complain about the quality of stills, viewed from the standpoint of their own particular needs, but they are perfection compared to those which we early laborers in the advertising field had to contend with. Kicks from the "front office" over the paper, multiplied. I took several afternoons off and went over to New York (at that time our offices were at 1 Congress street, Jersey City, on the top of the Palisades) hunting for an artist who could do poster sketches. By a lucky chance the late George W. Peters was located and hired. Peters was a master. He would sit with me in the projection room and we would agree upon the situations best adapted to one, three and six sheet posters. He wouldn't bother with stills. I would get for him some film cuttings, showing the scenes selected, and he would refresh his memory at his drawing board, with the microscope. His sketches were so good that I conceived the idea of using them in my trade paper advertising. The October 11th issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD of 1913, shows our ad on "The House of Fear," and so far as a rather careful search shows, this was the first instance of an ad in the trade papers "laid out" in modern style, with art instead of reproductions of still pictures. At that time it was the custom to use stills entirely for illustration. All the large companies came to feel the need for Art Departments, which began to be organized about 1915. The Pathe art department was practically started in 1913 with one man, Manuel Regalado, who I hired to act as retoucher, special photographer, hand letterer and layout man. Regalado was with Pathe up to last summer, when he went to Spain to study. Today we have a large department, with Harry Lewis as director, which does our poster, trade paper, and all other forms of art work. Trade paper advertising stumbled until the artist was called in. Then it ran.

Nineteen hundred fourteen saw the start of general advertising in the business. Pathe had produced "The Perils of Pauline," the first of the many serials with the Pathe trademark. A hook-up had been arranged with the Hearst papers through Eddie McManus, who had been with the "Ladies' World," and by means of that medium had been in touch with the film business. He had put on a successful circulation building stunt called "What Happened to Mary," with a tie up to a series of Edison pictures in which Mary Fuller had starred. Pathe put on a huge national advertising campaign in the Hearst newspapers. The story of the picture was serialized by Hearst writers and was run daily in the various papers. "The Perils of Pauline" in consequence became so well known that it passed into a figure of speech. A very popular song called "Poor Pauline" was voluntarily composed by a music publishing house, and could be heard in almost any vaudeville theatre. This serial with its huge publicity made Pearl White, before unknown, a big money star, and gave an impetus to Pathe serials which still lasts.

Kleine followed with "Gloria's Romance," a "polite" serial starring Billie Burke. Burnett-Kuhn of Chicago, an advertising agency, handled the advertising which was on a mammoth scale. "Gloria's Romance" got off to a big start, but failed to live up to early expectations. It was too tame.

Thanhouser, too, at this time put out "The Million Dollar Mystery," which was released through Mutual. This serial was also nationally advertised and did a great business. Mutual followed with "Our Mutual Girl," by George Randolph Chester, which was advertised in the "Saturday Evening Post," probably the first motion picture to be so advertised. Hopp Hadley, who was with Mutual at the time, tells of the difficulty which he and Bert Adler had in giving the agency men the picture viewpoint. Weekly conferences were held with the agency at which the advertising managers of the various Mutual producing companies pointed out how and why advertising pictures differed materially with the advertising of soaps and toothpastes.

Paramount began its general magazine advertising in 1916, and its newspaper advertising a year later. Their policy in general advertising has been more consistent than that of any other picture company. Their straight-to-the-public advertising has been continued year after year, and without doubt has been of material aid in bringing them to the position they now occupy.

During this period, also, enterprising exhibitors began to use the newspapers to advertise their shows. Epes W. Sargent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is beyond all doubt the man who has had more to do with making exhibitors realize the necessity for advertising, and how to go about it, than any in the business. For a long time his voice was that of one in the wilderness and his page the only constructive force. About 1916 S. Barrett McCormick became manager of Robert Lieber's Circle Theatre in Indianapolis, and it was not long before the trade realized that the Circle had a man who knew his onions. McCormick's striking newspaper copy, his presentations and his other innovations came to be watched and copied. I well remember the weight which I attached to a letter from McCormick praising a Pathe picture. He made exhibition history for about four years, and by the time he left there were many exhibitors who were making liberal use of printer's ink. For some time, however, Indianapolis and Seattle were the bright spots of the whole country from an advertising standpoint. Seattle was the first city to have solid pages devoted to picture theatre advertising.

Because of the multiplication of duties of the advertising manager, in most instances the advertising department of the distributor became divorced from publicity and exploitation. While all three are publicity in the abstract the methods pursued to attain the desired end are so different that specialization is desirable.

There has been a difference of opinion among advertising men as to who was the first in the business to make use of a colored insert in the trade papers. I have heard my friends Arthur James and Nat Rothstein claim the honor, and have felt all the time that to Pathe went the credit. To settle the question I have made a search of the back files of the trade papers thinking thereby to establish our own claim and to slay all other claimants with the truth. But candor compels the confession that to none of us goes the palm. Gaumont came out with a 2 page three colored insert on Nov. 29th, 1913 on the "Fall of Constantinople." Pathe and Universal may lay claim to be the second, for Pathe broke with a four page two color insert on "The Perils of Pauline" in March, 1914, at the same time with Universal's four page color insert on "Samson." Who the hero was who made the daring innovation for Gaumont is not known by me. His insert suffered from either bad plates or poor printing, for it was pretty lifeless. At any event it took us four months to venture along the trail which he had blazed.

For mass, brilliancy, daring effects, and diversity of treatment the trade paper advertising during the eleven years of this period has doubtless never been equalled in any business. The various distributors got the best men they could and demanded the best they could give. Advertising was mostly concentrated upon the individual pictures. It was in the years immediately following the world war that it reached its height, and it was continually being stimulated by the competition of new companies seeking to establish a foothold in the field. Mr. Zukor, with his keen insight, had seen away back in 1912 the box office value of distinguished names, and the policy which he had then adopted was now followed by all. Trade paper advertising sought to build up that box office draw. Advertising pages were a Babel in which each separate advertisement sought to make more noise than its fellows.

Along toward the end of the period, in 1920-1921, we find the following: Fred Baer, Advertising Manager of Kineto; Jerome Beatty Advertising and Publicity Director of Famous Players-Lasky; A. M. Botsford Advertising Manager of Famous Players-Lasky; Paul B. Dana, Advertising Manager of Arrow; Howard Dietz, holding the same position with the then unmerged Goldwyn; Al Feinman with Inter-Ocean; J. Irving Greene, with Associated Exhibitors; Louis F. Guimond, with Realart; Paul Lazarus, with United Artists; Jack Meador, with the old Metro; Edward S. Moffatt, with Universal; Vivian Moses, with Fox; Maj. J. W. O'Mahoney, with Educational; P. A. Parsons, with Pathe; Nat Rothstein, with Equity Pictures; Silas Seadler, now assistant to Howard Dietz, with Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corp.; Randall White, with Selznick; and C. L. Yearsley, with First National. Though only six years ago, of the above list only Dietz, Moses and the writer are today holding the same positions. Only when one checks up the list is it possible to realize the corporation mortality in this business, and the shifting of its personnel.

The founding of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in 1916 was the natural outgrowth of this boom period of the business. There was need for common voice with the authority of a powerful homogeneous organization behind it. Economies could be effected by a group where the individual was almost powerless. We find, therefore, that in its early days the A. M. P. A. was quite as much a business organization as social, active in promoting the common good, seeking to eliminate wastes, and militant in fighting for cleanliness in all motion picture advertising. There can be no question but what the A. M. P. A. has been a potent factor in dignifying the advertising profession in pictures.

The advertising manager of these days little realizes the diversity and the extent of the duties of most of the advertising men of those days before the rapid expansion of business and multiplication of interests made specialization necessary. For instance, up to about 1917 I as the Pathe advertising manager not only wrote and placed all trade paper and general advertising copy, but wrote all the publicity, edited the House Organ for a while, and for some time wrote all the campaign books. This was done with but one assistant.

With the growth of the Producer-Distributor-Exhibitor chains, the business has now entered upon another period, which we may call the Modern. The trend has been reflected upon the advertising. Though the new policy was becoming apparent as early as six or seven years ago, it was not until about 1924 that its fullest weight was felt. Advertising of today seems to go back to the institution idea that dominated it during the days of the General Film. It seeks to assure the exhibitor of security and profits if he plays all of a distributor's product. The laws of evolution apply just as much to the film business as to mankind in general, and our advertising pictures that evolution.

Advertising has made development of the picture business possible. To the many brilliant and hard-working advertising men who have been so potent a factor in creating the huge structure of the business as we know it today, has been at least one thing in common,—they loved their work and they loved the business. Because of that they have never spared themselves.

For what they have done, they have too frequently received little credit.

What The Companies Have Done

EDUCATIONAL

R. E. Pritchard, Advertising and Publicity Manager, 1919-1921.

Maj. J. W. O'Mahoney, the same, 1921-Jan. 1, 1923. O'Mahoney is now General Manager of the Tao Tea Co.

Gordon S. White, 1923—.

The backbone of Educational's advertising has always been in the trade papers.

The policy has been one of consistent, steady advertising, rather than big splashes followed by lapses. Except for annual announcements Educational has made but little use of colored inserts.

General advertising began with the season of 1921-1922, and has been consistent ever since. At the beginning the Saturday Evening Post and the Ladies' Home Journal were the magazines used. Recently Educational advertising has also gone into the fan magazines. The present campaign embraces twenty-five full page advertisements, supplemented by a number of pages on Christie comedies placed by the producers.

Educational was probably the first company to consistently advertise short product through the national magazines.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY

First trade paper advertisement appeared in Moving Picture World December 21, 1912. It was a single page, plain type-set statement headed, "A Happy New Year Is Assured." It goes on to say, "We face 1913 with courage and confidence. We have planned yesterday for tomorrow!" This simple statement contained a truth which the great growth of the Famous organization during the fourteen years has amply substantiated. The advertisement announces Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth"; James K. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda"; James O'Neill in "Monte Christo"; Minnie Maddern Fiske in "selections from her repertoire"; Viola Allen in several of her successes; Mrs. Leslie Carter in "one of her noted dramatic impersonations"; Henry E. Dixey in "Seven Ages"; Weber and Fields in "A Trip Around the World"; Lillian Langtry in "one of her dramatic plays"; William Faversham and Julie Opp in "Julius Caesar"; and "The Clansman," Thomas B. Dixon's "greatest success." Thus early did Adolph Zukor embark upon a policy of famous players in famous plays that has changed the entire course of the business, and has been largely responsible for its great development. The advertisement closes with the following: "For booking and territorial rights and a successful year, communicate with Famous Players Film Co., Times Building, New York City. Adolph Zukor, President; Daniel Frohman, Managing Director." This was probably the first "annual announcement."

First general and magazine advertising also 1916. This is continued.

Dietz has given to the M-G-M advertising a distinct individuality.

PATHE

First trade paper advertising in Film Index, predecessor of Moving Picture World, before 1907. Became regular in the World from the start in March, 1907.

First newspaper advertising on "The Perils of Pauline" in early 1914. For a number of years averaged approximately $100,000.00 per year in newspaper advertising only.

First magazine advertising in Saturday Evening Post in 1916. Now using fan magazines only. Pathe was the motion picture pioneer in the use of farm papers and used a large list for three years.

From the very first Pathe has been one of the heaviest trade paper advertisers in the business, and in 1926 stood second in total number of trade paper advertising pages used.

First Advertising Manager H. C. Hoagland, 1910-Oct. 1, 1913.

Second Advertising Manager P. A. Parsons, Oct. 1, 1913.

PRODUCERS DISTRIBUTING CORP'N.

First trade paper advertisement under name of P. D. C. in Moving Picture World June 28th, 1924.

First general advertising in 1925 with innovation of announcing the yearly program with full page advertisements in the newspapers of more than 40 key cities throughout the country.

P. D. C. represents a reorganization of the W. W. Hodkinson Corp'n. Fred Warren, Gerald Mygatt, Foster Gilroy and Geo. B. Gallup, Jr., were Advertising Managers in succession of the last mentioned company. Gallup resigned to go with First National in September, 1923. afterwards was with Fox and now is in the advertising department of United Artists. First Hodkinson trade paper ad was in 1918.

George W. Harvey has been Advertising Manager of P. D. C. since its inception.

A notable advertising achievement of this company was the simultaneous showing in 30 theatres in New York, and 55 theatres in Chicago of "Down to the Sea in Ships," tied in with full page newspaper ads.

UNITED ARTISTS

First trade paper ad in May, 1919.

As to general advertising individual producers have used newspaper and magazine advertising. For instance Douglas Fairbanks had a $75,000.00 campaign on "Robin Hood" in the Saturday Evening Post, Ladies Home Journal, Literary Digest and Life; D. W. Griffith had two double page spreads on "The Love Flower" and Griffith pictures in general in the Post; and Mary Pickford and Fairbanks used general magazines on "The Black Pirate" and "Sparrows."

Paul Lazarus, Advertising and Publicity Manager May, 1919, and held position for several years until he was promoted into the Sales Department.

Followed by Charles E. Moyer, acting as Advertising Manager.

Victor M. Shapiro became Advertising and Publicity Manager March 1, 1926, and is present incumbent.

UNIVERSAL

An early and energetic advertiser, due to fact that when in 1906 Carl Laemmle opened his theatre in Chicago. R. H. Cochrane who was associated with him, was a skilled advertising man and had handled his advertising in the Continental Clothing Store of Oshkosh, a Laemmle enterprise.

The Laemmle Exchanges were established in October, 1906, and at once Mr. Laemmle began to advertise in the Billboard and Dramatic Mirror, the recognized theatrical papers of the time which antedated any motion picture trade paper.

First trade paper advertisement in April 12, 1909. This announced that Mr. Laemmle was leaving the Patents Co. to pursue his independent way. This was a two-page ad in the Moving Picture World.

General advertising; Universal has always been a national advertiser. Of the early campaigns was one on Universal City, at about the time of its establishment, and another boosted the first national beauty contest. At present Universal advertising is carried in the Saturday Evening Post, Boys' Life, American Boy, the Photoplay Magazine and a number of farm journals. Newspaper advertising is confined to the theatres of the Universal chain.

Universal is notable for the "Straight From the Shoulder Talks," over 520 of which have been published, and which are models of terse, telling sales talk.

The first Advertising Manager was Robert H. Cochrane, of whom more elsewhere in this article.

The second, and present incumbent, is Mr. Cochrane's brother, P. D. Cochrane. Of him it may be said that, like his brother, he is a first-class advertising man with a first-class advertising background. The men mentioned below have functioned as Advertising Managers under either R. H. Cochrane or P. D. Cochrane.

Joe Brandt; see elsewhere.

Nat Rothstein, 1914-1920. Rothstein began with Universal's Supply Department, but soon was directed to establish an Advertising Department. Rothstein sent to Chicago for another advertising man, Raymond Cavanagh, who has been with Universal off and on ever since.

Edward S. Moffat, 1920-1922; had been assistant in the department for two years, and was promoted when Rothstein resigned to go with Equity. Moffat had been an agency man, author and newspaper correspondent.

George Brown, 1922-1926. (I have no data on Brown's past experience).

Robert E. Welsh, May, 1926.

WARNER BROS.

Though Warner Bros. have been active in the business since the early days, I have no data as to their advertising history prior to the present regime.

First big trade paper campaign in 1919 with "My Four Years in Germany."

First general newspaper campaign in 1923, with double page spreads in all the Hearst papers on the acquisition of the David Belasco plays. At beginning of season of 1925 they again conducted an extensive newspaper campaign in 110 large city newspapers, using full pages, and in 1,100 smaller newspapers with 14 in. ads.

Barran Lewis, who assumed duties in November, 1926, was succeeded by A. P. Waxman in February, 1927.

RICHARD WEIL: Advertising Manager Rayart, former Advertising Manager Arrow; formerly in advertising department of Hodkinson.

C. L. YEARSLEY: Advertising and Publicity Manager Union Theatres, a chain of 42 houses, and Australasian Films Ltd., 1912-1917, having gone there from theatrical work on Pacific Coast; during that time handled six complete programs weekly. While there turned the American serial, "Gloria's Romance," into six five reel features, put a big newspaper campaign behind them, played day and date in the two best houses in the key cities, and cleaned up. Came back to United States to become Advertising and Publicity Manager for First National in 1917, at the time of that company's formation, and held the position until 1923. By applying intensive exploitation methods materially assisted in getting 3,500 bookings in 90 days for "Pershing's Crusaders," a U. S. war feature, where 2,500 bookings within a year was what was hoped for. At time of agitation of an exhibitors' organization against First National planned the famous Chicago "Get-Together" meeting of First National's sub franchise holders, which resulted in vote of confidence in the company. As part of First National's service to exhibitors originated newspaper style and size of press books. Began First National's general magazine advertising campaign. Since his resignation from First National has been engaged in scenario writing, production, and as producer's representative. Past President of the A. M. P. A.

THE Motion Picture Industry has changed in many ways in the past twenty years, but no change has been greater than the financial one, both in method and control. In the old days the making of one and two reel pictures did not require a great amount of capital. As the industry gradually shifted from the comparatively inexpensive one reel to the costly five reel, considerably more money was needed, both from the standpoint of organization and production costs. In making these films production was increased rapidly. These costs soon ran far ahead of the income received from pictures previously produced. In order to get money for these increased costs the companies commenced going to the banks.

There were, however, still a large number of "Angels" anxious to put their money into "pictures," a word which became synonymous with money. The old line companies needed no assistance other than they could obtain from the banks, and declined all offers of capital. But the men who had been selling oil wells and mythical railroads were only too glad to oblige, and they reaped a rich profit selling shares in producing companies without outlet for their product. Thousands were sunk into these wildcat schemes until the public, badly bitten, refused to have anything to do with the picture business. Generally the money of the investors were eaten up in the salaries of the executives during the formative period, but where they actually did get into the production stage the first picture generally spelled the end of that company. Usually it also meant the start of another company with the same promoters, but a brand new name. There was one case where a producer owed money under six different company names.

When the old line companies went to the banks for loans, the bankers started to investigate the securities for these loans. They found a spendthrift system of production that was both wasteful and unproductive. They began to dictate to the companies as a condition of the next loan, and one of the first visible results of this was the Paramount shutdown of several years ago.

It had been the custom to make a picture, and, if it did not appear to be promising, to put it "on the shelf," in the trade parlance; in other words, to withhold it from release. Paramount had its shelves loaded down, and the banks insisted that production cease until at least the more promising of these pictures were disposed of. This done, and some money brought in, refinancing started. This was the situation: The banks saw only a product costing $30,000 idle on the shelf, dead stock. The releasing organization saw that by shelving a picture costing $30,000 and putting into circulation a picture costing $40,000 which might bring in more than $70,000, the net gain in brand value might offset the loss of the $30,000 miscarriage. Naturally the banks could not get the showman angle—and the banks had the money. The hand that held the money, held the whip. This condition prevailed in all production plants, and was more noticeable in Paramount only because Paramount made more pictures and consequently had more dead stock on the shelf.

From then on the bankers became more and more connected with the picture business. The change came slowly, with the larger companies being the only ones in which the bankers would take any interest. Pictures continued to be considered speculative and those bankers who entered the business in the early days had many conditions to contend with and change before they were in a position to safely offer picture stocks to the public. While the larger companies were growing and improving their methods, a large number of small independent concerns were doing their best to make pictures at a profit. It was not so easy for these firms to go to the banks for funds, as they had little on which to secure their loans. Conditions of production, distribution and financing became more and more difficult and receiverships and bankruptcies became common. The leaders in these companies either joined the larger companies or after several unsuccessful attempts under different company names left the industry entirely.

This continual financial struggle to obtain working funds naturally lead to combinations, agreements and mergers.

The first merger was, of course, the Motion Picture Patents Company, formed by pooling the interests of Edison and Biograph (who had been fighting each other and everyone else), with a sufficient number of the most prominent of their adversaries to form a program of three single reels each week-day. It was anticipated that this would suffice to supply all houses.

Finding that the exchanges handling the "licensed" product were not wholly in sympathy with the collection of the $2 license fee from each house per week, the Patents Company formed the General Film Company to take over all exchanges, paying for the same in stock. Those that did not come in were simply refused service. It was beautifully simple—and vastly profitable for a time.

Laemmle formed the next merger with the combination of some of the "independents" who were the producers not in the M. P. P. C. This was known as the Motion Pictures Sales Co. Later this split into the Universal and the Mutual.

When the General Film failed to function effectively, Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay formed the V.-L.-S.-E., which, perhaps, was not a merger, but rather a releasing combination, the old General Film having failed to function, though it was still kept in existence by the other companies.

When Kalem quit, the negative was taken over by Vitagraph, but this was not a merger, but a sellout.

Along about 1912-13 there came a number of house mergers, each unimportant, since but few houses in a limited territory were involved. But these baby mergers were important in that later on these houses were in some sections re-merged into larger house circuits, primarily to obtain better booking concessions.

These might be termed the home-made mergers, in that they were handled chiefly from within and not by the banking interests; local bankers sometimes supplying the funds, but not participating in the profits or directing the organizations.

To offset this, Paramount organized a sort of loose merger with house chains such as Black in the New England States and the Lynch organization down in the South Atlantic division. Other circuits, noting the profits made and the advantages gained, followed Paramount's example, though on a more limited scale. The formation of Publix blew the lid off the house merger under cover. Publix welded its scattered and disjointed units into a single comprehensive whole. Most of the other big releasing organizations hurried to follow suit.

The formation of the present merger idea was when Associated Exhibitors, which had been releasing through Pathe, but which had withdrawn to go independent, was now returned to the fold and merged.

Meanwhile Keith-Albee, through E. F. Albee and J. J. Murdock, had become interested in P. D. C., which had lately taken over Cecil De Mille. It was now proposed to merge P. D. C. and Pathe (including Associated Exhibitors). The deal hung fire. Meanwhile Stanley and West Coast combined to obtain control of First National, and, as matters now stand, Pathe, P. D. C., Keith-Albee, Stanley, West Coast, First National and the recently merged Keith-Albee and the Orpheum, controlling houses west of the Mississippi, are about to be combined into "one big union."

There is no doubt that the picture companies today are more soundly organized and financed than ever before in the history of the business. Production costs, although far from perfect, are considerably better. Uniform financial statements have been adopted and the books of most companies are audited at regular intervals by well-known firms of certified public accountants. The companies can still be criticized, however, on the frequency with which financial statements are made public. The bonds and stocks of many companies have been offered to the public and the holders of these securities are entitled to have an opportunity to check up on the progress of the companies. Many industrial concerns issue statements quarterly. The picture business can hardly be considered so stable that a yearly check-up would be sufficient.

Five years ago there were practically no stocks or bonds of film companies actively traded in on the exchanges of the country. During the past two years, company after company has floated securities. These issues have become numerous enough to form an impressive list.

Bond issues have been placed on the market during the past two years by some of the largest and most reliable underwriting houses. Pathe Exchange, through Merrill, Lynch & Co., floated an issue of bonds amounting to $1,033,500. Loew's, Inc., placed $14,925,000 of 6 per cent. debentures through Dillon, Reed and the National City Co.

Paramount Broadway Corp. sold $10,000,000 5½ per cent. bonds to the public through Kuhn, Loeb; Hallgarten; and Marshall, Field, Gore Ward and Co.

Among the stock issues that have been floated are the following:

Universal Pictures Co., common stock, $540,000.

Universal Pictures Co., rst pfd. stock, $3,000,000.

Warner Bros. Pictures, Class "A" common, $2,550,000.

Universal Chain Theatres, first pfd. stock, $4,000,000.

Roxy Theatre Corp., Class "A" common, $5,000,000.

The Organized Exhibitor

By Merritt Crawford

THE exact date of the formation of the first exhibitor organization is uncertain. It was some time in the Summer or early Spring of 1908 and the place of its origin, as might be guessed, was New York.

The underlying causes for the exhibitors banding themselves together for the purposes of offense and defence was not to oppose the practices of the big producing and distributing companies, who had not yet then organized, themselves—the Motion Picture Patents Co. was not formed until the following year—but to meet the stress of the drastic laws and ordinances which were being imposed upon the film theatres.

Agitation of all sorts was then going on in nearly every city aimed at the exhibition of the moving picture and severe regulations were being imposed on the new amusement, which made it increasingly difficult to operate a theatre. These included about everything from laws making it a misdemeanor to show pictures which even referred to crime or in which an actor indulged in mute profanity, to statutes governing the ventilation of theatres and fire regulations, often of the most absurd and extreme type.

All the world—except the movie-goer—was hostile to the exhibitor. The newspapers, the clergy and civic societies were ever ready to lend their aid in the denunciation of this new form of entertainment, and New York, having both the largest number of film theatres as well as reformers, was naturally the center of all this propaganda.

In 1908 so numerous and pernicious had these activities become, that it was apparent if they were carried much further it would soon be impossible for any exhibitor to continue in business. Against this massed opposition no single exhibitor could make head.

Organization alone might hope to meet it successfully, but organization was a word that meant nothing then in exhibitor vocabularies. Most of the film men in that day were not even showmen and had come too recently from other fields of livelihood to realize their common interests as motion picture theatre owners.

Fortunately, there were a few who saw further ahead than the rank and file and one of these was Marcus Loew. Even at that time his theatre holdings, as compared to others, were considerable and his keen, showman's mind had sensed the fact that the "movies" were something more than a mere transient device to catch the public's pennies, which would pass out of popular favor at the first new "craze" that came along.

So it happened, that sometime in the Spring of 1908, when the municipal authorities were considering a series of regulatory measures that meant practically the closing down of all the "movie" theatres, that Marcus Loew issued the first call to the exhibitors of New York to get together for their common good.

A meeting was held in Sam Byser's tiny theatre in East 175th Street, the Bronx, at which Marcus Loew acted as chairman. Some seventeen exhibitors attended; not a great showing considering the importance of the issues involved, but perhaps illustrative of the limited class consciousness of the exhibitor mind of the period, and the New York Exhibitors League was formed and a charter secured.

Marcus Loew, although the motivating spirit of the gathering and its most influential member, declined to accept office and Sam Trigger, a prominent exhibitor, was elected president and Sam Byser, secretary. Who the other officers were, if there were any, has not come down to us, but Sam Trigger, one of the most picturesque and active figures of the early days of the industry, a former prize fighter and an adroit politician, who more than made up for any lack the newly formed organization might have had, by his enthusiasm and fighting spirit.

The New York exhibitor organization grew rapidly and its success in protecting exhibitor interests was such, that other states quickly followed its lead. Illinois, with William F. Sweeney, Joe Choynski and Joe Hopp, all fighting showmen of the old school, as its leaders, formed a state organization. Ohio, with M. A. Neff and Sam Bullock, Indiana with Frank J. Rembusch, New Jersey, California, Oklahoma, Texas and half a dozen others speedily did likewise.

The seed planted by Marcus Loew, sprouted by Sam Trigger and cultivated by various state organizations all over the country began to bear fruit. The exhibitor commenced to have a class consciousness and developed a penchant for politics, which has continued down even to this day.

Records of the activities of the various state exhibitor organizations of those days are extremely difficult to obtain. They exist now, if at all, in the fading memories of some of the oldtimers, who experienced them.

But they are colorful, full of explosive, internal politics and, viewed from this distance, packed with much comedy.

Nevertheless, they served their purpose and on the whole were tremendously useful in advancing exhibitor interests during the industry's period of extreme adolescence, when all branches of it were chaotic and unformed.

The first national organization came into being in Cleveland, Ohio, on August 3, 1911. It was chartered as The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America and M. A. Neff, president of the Ohio showmen, and the strongest leader, which the exhibitor bodies had yet developed, was elected its first president. Ten states were represented at this convention and the membership of the various delegations was not very large, but at least it formed a nucleus for future building.

C. M. Christenson of Cleveland, Ohio, was elected secretary of the national body and J. J. Rieder of Jackson, Mich., treasurer. The vice presidents were as many in number as there were states represented: one vice-president from each state.

The following year (1912) the convention was held in Chicago and M. A. Neff was re-elected president, as were the other officers to their respective posts. Louis F. Blumenthal, national vice president for New Jersey, and George H. Wiley, national vice president for Missouri, were elected as members of the Executive Committee in addition to the officers already named.

Thirty-three states were represented at this convention, largely because of the tireless activities of President Neff, who at his own expense traveled all over the country in behalf of exhibitor organization and was also almost certain to be found in any state where legislation, adverse to the exhibitor, was being prepared. Exhibitors organization owes him a great debt.

New York was the scene of the 1913 convention, which was held during the week beginning July 7, in the Grand Central Palace.

At the same time and place was held the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art, at which all the leading film and accessory companies had exhibits for which they paid substantial rentals, an arrangement entirely satisfactory to the New York exhibitor organization, who sponsored the exposition, but not entirely so to some of the others, who didn't participate in the profits.

Politics were red hot from the start. Considerable opposition to Neff, who had been president for two years developed. Illustrative of the intense partisanship prevalent at the time, may be mentioned the case of J. L. Phillips, an exhibitor from Fort Worth, Texas, who came to the convention in full cowboy regalia, with his six-guns strapped on him.

Phillips was an enthusiastic supporter of Neff and learning that the New York and Illinois delegations were opposed to Neff's re-election, he met the situation in his own Texas way.

Looking menacingly at Sam Trigger, national vice president and head of the New York exhibitors and Bill Sweeney, who held the same position in relation to Illinois, he said with a sweep of his arm that took in the whole room, "Neff is good enough for Texas and he better be good enough for you or some of you—all will get some of this here." And he patted his guns expressively.

Lee A. Ochs, later twice president of the league, who had then just joined the New York organization and was attending his first exhibitor convention, said later that he was looking for somewhere to "dig in" about this time, and was much relieved when nothing developed.

Sam Trigger, adroit politician, however, squared himself with Phillips, by nominating him for the presidency against Neff and then when the Texas delegation voted solid for Neff, instead of their own man, raised a cry of "double cross" and bolted the convention. Joe Choynski of Chicago led the Illinois delegates off the floor first, by pre-arrangement, while Fred J. Herrington and two of the Pennsylvania delegation of nine also withdrew.

How Will Hays Regulates the Movies And Carries On The Ideals of Those Who Make Them

THE "CZAR"

FIVE years have passed since a group of producers and distributors of motion pictures persuaded Will H. Hays to leave the cabinet of President Harding where he was serving as Postmaster General, in order to become president of a newly formed organization, the like of which the world had never seen.

His job was, briefly, to put into practice the ideals and purposes of the makers of motion pictures, namely "to establish and maintain the highest possible moral and artistic standards of motion picture production, and to develop the educational as well as the general usefulness of motion pictures." It was a unique undertaking because for the first time an art was organizing itself to fulfill its highest purposes and reap its maximum rewards.

Terry Ramsaye, historian of the screen, in a figurative estimation of what those years have meant to the industry since Mr. Hays accepted his responsibility, reports that the motion picture industry has come "well out of its infancy," and that "the Hays office is teaching it how to wear long pants."

During the five years, to be more explicit, the public's regard for the motion picture as an art—as a commercial art perhaps but still as an art—and as a profession, too, has increased enormously; the motion picture has entered almost every field of human endeavor; it has become teacher and preacher, as well as entertainer; business order has succeeded chaos; extravagance has been succeeded by sound economic practices; working conditions in the studios have been put upon a level of excellence; and in short, five years of progress and development in business management, artistic usefulness, and social value have been utilized.

Not long ago, the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America made the important announcement that Mr. Hays had accepted a contract to continue to serve as president of the association for ten years from 1926.

What, specifically, has been accomplished by the industry through the cooperative efforts possible through a central association such as the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America? Only the briefest account is here possible. The good will engendered, the increased sense of responsibility, the added prestige defy reduction to words. However, surface examination discloses that two Greater Movie Seasons have been successfully held; definite results have been obtained in production of pedagogic, medical, and religious motion pictures; a movement has been started for the preservation by the United States Government in the new Archives Building of all films of value to posterity; a department of Industrial Relations and Public Relations has been opened in Hollywood; the industry has become in the words of the American Arbitration Society, "pre-eminently the outstanding example of successful use of arbitration in settling trade disputes;" leading American universities have been encouraged in planning for motion picture study courses; close co-operation has been maintained with national and international groups, numbering millions of members, through which support for the best pictures has been fostered; working conditions in and around the studios have been placed on the highest level; contact has been made and held with government officials here and abroad in the interest of better understanding; and the motion picture industry in all its phases has found itself, steadied itself, and conducted itself under sensible, businesslike, and responsible methods.

To be even more exact, August, 1926, saw the second annual Greater Movie Season conducted throughout the country. More than 5,000 theatres and 57 newspapers participated, while 700,000 persons entered the essay contest incident to its accomplishment—which means that several million persons in every state were actively engaged at the same time in writing on the absorbing subject: "Why I Like the Movies."

In November, 1926, the department of Industrial Relations was opened in Hollywood, with Jason S. Joy, as director. Colonel Joy had been director of the Department of Public Relations in the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, which duties are now assumed by Carl E. Milliken, former governor of Maine.

Several companies, working with important educational groups, have actively started production of teaching films for the classrooms, as suggested by Mr. Hays shortly after he became president of the association. A Religious Motion Picture Foundation, established by the Harmon Foundation in cooperation with the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, has made, and is continuing to make, special religious pictures for church use. The American College of Surgeons, with a committee composed of nationally known doctors and with Mr. Hays as honorary chairman, is planning the early production of medical pictures for clinical and school use.

The Free Casting Bureau in Hollywood, through which extras are now employed, made 259,259 placements in its first year of operation, that is a daily average of 710, at a saving to the employees who formerly paid fees to agencies in exchange for their places.

The purpose of the association in the matter of contributing to the work of minimizing the activities of the promoters of fraudulent securities, fake scenario and acting schools, have been twofold; first, to protect the public and keep the enthusiasm of many thousands of the industry's wellwishers undiminished by embittering disappointment through unintelligent investment of their funds in motion picture enterprises; and, second, to prepare the way for the successful distribution of motion picture securities when issued by responsible concerns.

The unanimous editorial approval of this service of the association to the public; the gradual entrance of prominent underwriting houses into the field of motion picture finances; and the ready acceptance of worthy motion picture stock issues by the investing public, are all proof of the sound economics of the association's activities along these lines. This educational work has always been conducted by the association in cooperation with such nonpartisan bodies as the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, the Better Business Bureaus in 42 cities, the American Bankers' Association, the Investment Bankers' Association, the Financial Advertisers' Association, and the National Association of Credit Men.

Films have been placed on trans-Atlantic steamers bringing immigrants to this country as a part of the Americanization work through films; more than 600,000 feet of film were recently given to the leper colonies by members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America; several hundred institutions such as prisons, schools, homes

Theatres Old and New

By Colin S. Collins

TWICE since we hung up the 1927 calendars police in the New York theatre district, loosely known as "Broadway," have had to shut off traffic because the crowd attracted by the opening of a new motion picture theatre was so large that the press around the doors would have been so great the ticket holders could not have obtained an entrance had not the curious, pressing to see the picture stars arrive, been held at a reasonable distance from the lobby. Sixty to eighty men were required, under the direction of a Sergeant.

Twenty-five years ago the first New York policeman sauntered up to the first New York picture theatre, and inquired: "Say, youse fellers got a license to run this dump?"

Twenty-five years makes a lot of difference. It is stated that the Roxy theatre cost $10,000,000, and the Paramount around $6,000,000, not counting the $10,000,000 office building that serves the latter in part as an entrance.

With sixteen million dollars a quarter of a century ago you could have bought all the picture theatres between the Gulf of Mexico and the Arctic Ocean and probably have had enough to buy in the film companies to control the picture production. There would have been more than a few millions change, at that, unless you count in the real estate values, and few owned their buildings. They just hired a vacant store, hired some chairs, hired a piano and bought some black cloth to darken the windows with. Generally they bought an "outfit."

An outfit was a projector, a sheet, a roll of tickets, about 300 feet of film and a book of instructions that told you how to run the machine and how to run the show. These cost around $250 to $350. If you went broke you often could sell the outfit for as much to someone else, or the company you bought it from might give you fifty per cent of the price. Sometimes a single projector lasted long enough to put half a dozen would-be exhibitors out of business.

And at that it took a lot of doing to put a man out of business in those days, for there was magic in the very name of pictures. They were "pictures" in those days, for "movie" was not invented until around 1909; about the time Essanay paid a prize for "photoplay."

The theatres started out West and were generally a combination of very cheap vaudeville and pictures, given in what had been vaudeville "dumps" or "honkatons."

Most of the very early picture theatres in New York were down around Chatham Square, where the lower end of the Bowery runs into Park Row, where you can turn in one direction and hear nothing but Chinese, in another to hear the Yiddish jargon, with Greek in between and Italian a few blocks over in "the Bend," as the crook of Mulberry street is called. This was an ideal location for a form of amusement calling for no language. It still is no uncommon thing to drop into one of the successors to these houses and see a small Chinese boy translating the titles aloud in Chinese to three or four gravely smiling merchants, who speak only enough English to get three prices from the rubber-neck visitors from uptown.

Lubin's Palace and Victoria theatres on Market street, Philadelphia, were among the earliest of the better class of houses. The Victoria was straight pictures and the Palace ran a few vaudeville acts. Lubin also was one of the first to introduce the stamped metal fronts for old stores. For $1,500 or $2,000 you could get a very sightly looking front that ran well above the first story. These were for the semi-permanent places. The cheaper fit-ups used lithographs to mask in the front, once they got to the stage of a built in box office. Some of the old timers may still be found over on the East side, along Grand street, but most of them have given place to other or better enterprises.

The first Broadway theatre to come into Longacre, now the theatrical centre, was on the east side of the square between 43rd and 44th streets. A few years before the site, then occupied by a livery stable, had been offered for a foolishly small sum. It was well under $30,000, for Oscar Hammerstein only lately, in 1896, had dared to cross the deadline of 42nd street. Eight or ten years before the Broadway theatre, now occupied by Moss, was supposed to be dangerously far uptown at 41st street.

One of the first of the really modern theatres in that section was the Mastbaum house on Seventh avenue, below 42nd street. It was a favorite with the men who wanted to spend half an hour or an hour.

The first real theatre was the Strand, built for S. L. Rothafel. He had made something important out of the Regent theatre, just north of Central Park, and he was brought downtown to see how he would click on Broadway. He clicked.

Roxy's second house was the first Paramount house, the Rialto, standing on the site of the old Hammerstein's Victoria. Many persons believe this to be the old Victoria itself, but this is not a fact.

Oscar Hammerstein was in a hurry when he built the Victoria, after having been ousted from his Olympia, now the New York and Criterion theatres. The Criterion was known as the Lyric in those days.

The New York Life Insurance Company had foreclosed the mortgage, and Hammerstein had vowed that he would have a new house before the flag he had nailed to the staff of Olympia had blown to rags.

As a result he built on the solid rock without taking the trouble to dig a cellar save in one corner for the heating plant. It was a two gallery house and Hammerstein lived in the space under the rear seats of the top gallery. When Paramount took over the place it was found cheaper to build anew than to renovate the old structure.

The Rialto was followed in due time by the Rivoli and the Capitol and still later by the Colonial and Picadilly, now Warner's.

Vitagraph was the first to establish a run house, taking the Criterion. It was largely an advertising gesture.

One of the old time houses to still do business is the Savoy, on 34th street, not far from the site of the old Manhattan theatre, later Koster and Bial's, where the pictures were first shown in a theatre in New York.

This originally was the Schley, a companion to the Dewey theatre, which latter house occupied a part of the present site of Fox's Academy of Music. Both houses had been built by Timothy D. Sullivan and George Krause. As one of the political bosses of New York, Sullivan was superior to the fire laws, and the houses were built of stamped metal over joists.

Under the law which requires that there shall be fire alleys on both sides of all houses with a capacity of more than 300 seats, most of the theatres were under that capacity. Some of them were provided with one exit hall where a hall existed in the original building, and patrons were urged to leave by the hall-way instead of fighting through the standees.

In these days there was no thought of ventilation. When the air grew too oppressive, it would be deodorized by a hand sprayer such as is used for the garden. You could get this spray by the gallon in a variety of odors, but whether it was heliotrope, verbena or geranium, it did not seem to help the air much.

By 1908 the undertaker had gotten his chairs back and these had been replaced by cheap tip-up chairs with veneer seats and backs. Generally there was a pianist, though often merely an automatic piano. Only a few houses had three piece orchestras, generally piano, violin and drums. Keith's Union Square theatre, which showed the entire licensed output as first runs, used this combination. The pianist and violinist used to race each other when they felt in a playful mood. One would start playing a little faster than the other, and keep on quickening until fingers gave out on one or the other. It did not matter much what was on the screen, and the heroine could die to the tune of "Turkey in the Straw" played four times the usual speed for all the orchestra cared.

Around 1910 there was one house East of Central Park where the drummer used to portion out his traps to the neighborhood boys. One youngster worked the can of shot that was supposed to be the automobile, another had the horn, a third the steamboat whistle, and so on. Often fifteen or twenty effects would be out on loan and the boys would watch the drummer to know just when to toot or shake. If a prankish kid played out of time, he lost his effect and was permanently out of the orchestra. This seemed to have a terrific fascination for the boys and the practice had to be stopped because so many mothers could not get the boys home for dinner and study.

Up to 1908 the chairs were mostly of the folding variety or kitchen chairs. Then the veneers came in and lasted until around 1910, when the spring seat with pantasote or fabric cover came in, at first very slowly.

The facade of the Roxy Theatre, which has the greatest seating capacity of any motion picture theatre in the world.

With few exceptions the decorative house was not in existence before 1910 and until 1915 there were few orchestras of more than three pieces. No attempts were made at decoration until the indirect lighting system was perfected.

Up to that time it was supposed that the darker the house, the better the picture. Along those lines of reasoning, projection should have been wonderfully good in those days—but it wasn't. The "One minute, please" was a stock fixture in every projection booth; and they were "booths" in those days, with barely room for the single machine and the operator. The projector had a stereopticon attachment, the lamp house sliding over on rods, and this was used for announcement slides, the picture slides and as a spotlight on those rare occasions when a spotlight was needed.

There were no luxuries and few comforts. Many theatres were not provided with toilet rooms even for the help, and when they were these generally were down in the basement and insanitary in the extreme.

With the building of regular houses more attention was given these details and Rothafel demonstrated that there was a cash value to luxury.

This found its fullest expression in the Capitol, which was hailed on its opening as probably the ultimate word in gorgeousness. The Capitol still is able to hold its own with its newer rivals, but it now has rivals not only in New York but practically everywhere. Out in Los Angeles Sid Grauman has reared some wonderful structures. He was sufficiently proud of one house to name it the Million Dollar, but in view of his Egyptian and other more modern houses he probably is a bit ashamed of that modest figure.

The Saengers have a house in New Orleans that will bear comparison with the best of them; there are wonderful theatres in Chicago, there are a number in San Francisco, starting with the Granada, and the Circle theatre in Indianapolis and the Stillman in Cleveland are still holding their own well.

The Saenger house in New Orleans and the Paramount in New York are rich in art treasures. The actual value of the original paintings in the Paramount would have built a score of theatres in the early days, but it is probable that they will have paid for themselves within a year in the money they draw from people who come to see the paintings rather than the pictures. The Saenger house runs more to fine copies of the old masters.

The entire keynote of today's building is comfort and luxury; comfort as represented by easy seats and luxury in the matter of sumptuous decoration and erection.

And with it all there is just one theatre in America where a six foot man can find room for his knees. This is the little Cameo in the Bush Terminal Building. There is room for ten more rows of seats, but since that would have put the house over the 300 classification, it was cheaper to space the rows generously than to build the fire alleys that would have been required.

The limit in size, the limit in costliness seems to have been reached, but has it? We were saying that five years ago. We probably shall be saying it ten years from now. Roxy has achieved the organ with three consoles, why not the three-screen circus? If you don't like the drama on screen, turn to screen one for the comedy or to number three for the news reels and scenics.

Don't laugh. You don't know.

A great financial change has come over the industry. Will it build soundly and constructively, or will the ease with which money is being obtained by the sale of securities to the public, be the cause of increased ego and pomposity, which is a deadly attitude in finance?

Medical "Movies" Have Arrived

By J. F. Montague, M.D., F.A.C.S.

Bellevue Hospital Medical College Clinic,
New York City

[Note: Surgical operations in motion pictures date back to about 1905 when a series of eight or ten brief films showing the Caesarian Operation, trepaning, the removal of tumors, etc., were imported from France. These pictures were full length and decidedly sketchy: interesting as novelties rather than as student material. About 1909 an effort was made by Siegmund Lubin to make studies of the Jefferson Hospital, Philadelphia. At the first experiment the cameraman fainted at the incision, and the experiment was abandoned. The Lubin Company did, however, make a series of studies of the characteristic gaits of victims of locomotor ataxia in its various stages of progress which were hailed as a triumph at that time.

The intelligent development of technical studies in close-up were later started, and no more brilliant results have been obtained than the films made by Dr. Montague, the author of this article.

Dr. Montague, who is a specialist in rectal diseases, is an international authority, and has lectured on his subject before the Royal Society of Medicine, London, and in the leading hospitals of Great Britain, France, Belgium, Germany and Italy. He is the author of the only book on Puritus Ani, and also "The Modern treatment of Hemorrhoids," as well as of many important contributions to the leading medical publications. His exhaustive cinematographic studies form the most complete surgical picture library in existence, and he speaks with authority on this subject. As a surgeon his technique is without superior, and his film studies are without an equal.]

MEDICAL movies have arrived. The idea, of course, is long overdue and even now only the first section of the train has really arrived. Why this should be the case is hard to understand since the clearness and simplicity of the motion picture portrayal of a clinical condition stands in direct contrast to the totally inadequate view that a medical student can obtain when he attempts to observe an operation or study a case from a seat in the amphitheatre. Those of you who have been in the amphitheatre of an operating room will recall how the students and observing physicians are seated row upon row in a semi-circular manner on benches whose distance range from twenty to fifty feet from the field under observation. When you consider that such field is at best six to eight inches square and that even this is encroached upon by operating hands and instruments, you can well imagine that the actual view possible is very small indeed. Contrast this, if you will, to the fact that an operative wound photographed and thrown upon the screen shows an area six by nine feet instantly visible to everybody and so complete in its clearness and abundant in its detail that accurate observation cannot be avoided.

By means of an invention of my own, motion pictures of the interior of certain portions of the intestinal tract have recently been taken and may be studied. By this I do not mean X-ray pictures, since they are only shadows cast by opaque material in the intestine, but I mean actual pictures taken in the inside of the intestine. This has never been done heretofore, and furnishes the medical profession with a new means of observing the intestines, both in health and in disease. The dissection of an entire human body—a tedious process taking months of careful work—is shown in faithful detail in motion pictures in a little over one hour. Moreover, without the necessity of again going through the dissection, the process may be repeatedly shown until the student is entirely familiar with its detail. In this way from the seat of a comfortable chair in the lecture hall he may learn what otherwise would require months of messy work on a malodorous cadaver. Thus through the agency of motion pictures, the anatomy and physiology of the body in health, the characteristic appearance of cases of disease, and each step in the plan of its treatment may be presented.

If a student is slow to grasp, the pictures may be run twice or more times. If an interesting phase is observed the picture may be stopped and started again as soon as it has been sufficiently observed. Finally, in this series of pictures there are to be observed all the interesting intestinal and rectal cases that have come through Bellevue Hospital College Clinic in the last nine years. Where else can a nine-year clinic such as this be viewed in a little over an hour? This is all the more remarkable considering the fact that the very patients portrayed have almost all passed from view either by reason of cure, removal or demise.

So great has been my faith in the potential usefulness of the motion picture film in medical teaching that I have personally conceived and produced nearly eleven miles of motion picture film portraying most vividly every known variety of intestinal and rectal disease that can be shown in pictures. Just as in walking home from Hollywood, the first eleven miles are the hardest, so too these first eleven miles have been pioneer steps which however laborious, yet have served well to show the essential utility of motion picture film in medical teaching. Cases are shown, instruments demonstrated and every modern method of treatment is shown by means of moving pictures. Any and all surgical operations are capable of being shown by this means. Not only are actual pictures of the operation employed, but by the use of animated diagrams the most intricate procedure and operation may be shown in great detail, and in a manner whose clearness is not possible of obtainment by any other method.

At a recent meeting of the American College of Surgeons, that body of medical men went officially on record as being in favor of the idea. Immediately upon the heels of this step in what we are pleased to consider the right direction there have come many public announcements relative to the proposed productions of elaborate surgical film set to color, speech and, if I am not mistaken, music. Following swiftly upon the trail in pursuit of what commercial men have scented as prospects have come many picture producers, directors, etc., seeking to get in on the ground floor of this threatened new expansion of the cinema industry. For the sake of protecting the real intrinsic value of truth and the idea

Press Books Then and Now

By Harry Reichenbach

PRESS and campaign books from an humble origin, have become important adjuncts to motion picture productions, irrespective of the importance of the film itself.

From the crude early specimen, to the ostentatious proposition of today is a far-flung change, yet their function is the same and it is to be doubted whether any more benefits are derived from those of now than of yore.

Certain it is that a five-colored press book is of no greater value, in so far as achieving publication of its contents. Certain it is that editors cannot use color.

The first press book of which I have any knowledge, was gotten out in behalf of "The Squaw Man" for the Lasky Feature Play Company in 1913. I had been trained in the legitimate school of one night stand activities and knew the necessity of aiding and abetting the local manager to get a showing in his papers after I had left the town.

Our function then, as now, was to generate interest in our attractions for the benefit of our employer and the local theatre owner. As a rule the local manager knew absolutely nothing about publicity, its construction, its value, or how to write it. We usually left New York with a trunk full of cuts, electros, and press matter, and would write such local stuff on arrival as we needed for local purposes.

Our publicity was cut and dried and ran the gamut from biographical material to the usual stories of long run on Broadway, historical matter about the show, its producer, its author and cast, and the story of the play. Usually after planting what we could during our stay in the town, we would leave sufficient mimeographed matter with the local manager to plant after we left a town.

When I left Comstock and Gest to join Lasky, and became somewhat familiar with the film making and the necessity of exploiting them, I realized how lazily local exhibitors attacked their advertising and publicity problems.

Few advertised at all and seldom did I receive a clipping from a town that either discussed the picture I was handling from an advantageous angle, or was worth publication, let alone reading.

The first and hardest job on my hands was to convince exhibitors and newspapers that Adolph Zukor had no connection with "The Squaw Man." Mr. Zukor was by that time so firmly established as the most important maker of features that he was credited with almost every feature that reached the screen.

Then the thought occurred to me that a press book, or at least a sheaf of press material, should accompany every film for every play date and accordingly I set about developing one.

Needless to say, the Lasky Company at that time was not overburdened with cash, and Samuel Goldwyn, then executive head, while in favor of a press book, would not permit sufficient money to be spent to secure a printed affair.

Resorting to the mimeograph, I had compiled five thousand press books, consisting of twenty-four pages mimeographed on one side, double spaced and containing thirty stories about the picture, its production, etc.

Of the thirty stories, fifteen were two sticks in length, and the rest ran up to a full page, including a criticism of the picture which I suggested to the local exhibitor he prevail upon his local paper to run the day after the show.

I paid Louis DeFoe of the New York World twenty-five dollars for this critique. Mr. DeFoe, now dead, wrote it from having in mind the play, and from what I was able to tell him about the film production, as gleaned from letters Mr. DeMille had written from the coast.

We were selling our pictures on a state-right basis, and when the book was completed, I either gave it or sent it to each of our franchise holders with a letter of description as to what to use it for. I reproduce the letter herewith:

Louis B. Mayer,
Boston, Mass.,
American Feature Film Co.
Dear Louis:—

I am sending you herewith one copy and two hundred more press books on "The Squaw Man." Please see that one of them accompanies each shipment of the film and that your salesmen acquaint each exhibitor, with the importance of using the stories herein, before the picture is shown and to write his advertisements from the specimen ads shown in the book.

I think the use of these locally will help business. After you have tried them, let me know if they are of sufficient importance to send them with forthcoming Lasky pictures.

Several weeks later, Mr. Mayer wrote me as follows:

Dear Harry:—

By all means get a press book out for each picture. It's a splendid idea; a great aid to exhibitors, and if necessary, I will pay the cost of those I need in my territory."

It may seem unusual, but Mr. Mayer was the only one of eighteen franchise holders to acknowledge the books or encourage their issuance. That he was as progressive then as later years were to prove him to be, is aptly demonstrated.

For "Brewsters' Millions," the second Lasky feature, I was given wider latitude by Mr. Lasky and compiled a printed press book reproducing several stills from the picture and giving more aids to exhibitors, such as suggestions for lobby and window displays, and tie-ups, local campaigns, etc.

The second booklet brought a few more responses, and each succeeding issue grew larger.

That the press book is a fine accessory and practically indispensable to exhibitor, press agent working locally, and the picture itself is undeniable. The elaborate, ornate colored affair is no more efficient now than the mimeographed matter sent out with "The Squaw Man," though it may be better written and nicer to look at.

I do not claim credit for the first press book.

If I did what is the difference, and what would it get me? I know I did not encounter one before, I know that there were none in the two dozen state-right buyers' offices I visited while on a trip across the continent selling Lasky product.

I know that I found thousands of the first booklets unused during my second trip four months later, and I know that there were no advertisements, no stories, no review of "The Squaw Man" in ninety per cent of the towns it played, and I do know that it was generously publicized and generously reviewed in all New England towns under Louis B. Mayer's control.

If I did get the first press book out, I was not original, for press agents have carried them since the early days of road shows, and I was simply bringing to pictures one of the first of thousands of road show methods now in vogue.

For my third press book I offered Alan Dale, noted critic, two hundred dollars to write me ten stories of the picture. He wanted three hundred. There was no deal.

My fourth book contained stories by Stewart Edward White, Irvin Cobb, George Ade and others.

Ho hum, what's the difference. There are press books, and who cares where they came from. Press books are like love-making. You can't tell which is the most effective material, or how the stuff is impressing the other person.

Mr. Rowland Says:

CHANGE and progress have been synonymous in the growth of the motion picture since its early days. As I look back, many of the names of individuals as well as companies that were prominent a few years ago have passed into the realm of history. But one of the exceptions is the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, which I recall as the first trade paper I turned to for information about the film business, and which has gone on through periods of fluctuation and change as a factor in the industry.

With the principles set down by James P. Chalmers as a basic rock on which to build the publication, the Moving Picture World has signified reliability and honesty of purpose. The first duty of a trade paper, as I see it, is to supply correct information to all branches of the business, exhibitor, producer and distributor alike. The second is to give, insofar as possible, a helpful interpretation of significant happenings. I believe that the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has been true to its founder and to the industry at large in its editorial policy, always aiming to exert a constructive force in the up-building of our great industry.

I wish to extend my congratulations to all the members of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD staff on this, the twentieth anniversary of the founding of the publication.—

Why Is The Audit Bureau of Circulations

SOMEBODY with the faculty of putting a world of truth into just a few words once said:—
"Necessity is the mother of invention."

So many striking examples occur daily to remind us of the truthfulness of this saying that it has become a proverb.

The publishing and advertising worlds have had their own reminders. That stern task-mistress Necessity has caused more than one publisher to invent false circulation figures to present to his advertisers regarding his paper. And then, having gone this far, continued to feed his customers fictitious circulation claims with one hand while he took their business with the other.

Undoubtedly some publishers deliberately cheated, knowing full well what they were doing. The majority, however, falsified as a direct result of inaccurate circulation information due to careless and inefficient methods of keeping their own circulation records.

From the advertisers' standpoint the result, nevertheless, was the same. The advertiser became the goat. It is not exaggerating to say that the advertisers of this country have squandered literally hundreds of thousands of dollars upon the strength of alluring cock and bull circulation stories having absolutely no foundation in fact, but which the publishers glibly sucked out of their thumbs and camouflaged with home-made, sugar-coated, fictitious "proof."

This was the prevailing condition ten or more years ago. In those days the advertiser had no defense—no national umpire to whom he could appeal. He was pretty much at the mercy of the publishers,—and the publishers' philosophy was wrapped up in that old Latin saying:—

"Caveat Emptor" (Let the buyer beware).

Eventually the buyer did become wary. Once more Necessity mothered invention. This was in 1913. Two groups of advertising men, one in New York and the other in Chicago, simultaneously realized the confusion existing in publishers' circulation claims and methods. They saw the pressing necessity for a national circulation arbiter if advertising was ever going to be placed on the scientific, truthful basis which common business sense demanded. They felt that space-buying should be put on a high grade investment basis.

When you buy a house you demand proof of clear title, verified by a reputable title guaranty company. Careful investors do not make an investment without first having the financial condition of the company in question stated and verified by a recognized public accounting house. Even such a simple purchase as five pounds of prunes is weighed in full view before you on a standard scale by your local grocer.

Was it asking too much, then, for advertisers who were being solicited to spend millions of dollars annually to demand that publishers show verified, disinterested evidence of their circulations and other vital details such as whether it was free or paid, how obtained, how classified, percentage of renewals, premiums offered, etc.? These two groups of men thought not. And since their ideas on the subject coincided they united forces with the result that in 1914 the Audit Bureau of Circulations was created and began functioning as the national authority for truth in circulations.

Today the Audit Bureau of Circulations—commonly known as the A. B. C.—is the only recognized source of accurate circulation information in the whole country. It numbers nearly two thousand members comprised of leading publishers, advertising agencies, and national advertisers. Virtually every newspaper, magazine and trade paper of any standing today is a member of the A. B. C.

A publicity director who, in the past few years, has supervised the expenditure of many millions of dollars in advertising, has said of this organization:—

"The A. B. C. is without the slightest question the most important factor in the whole advertising world today. It has saved the advertisers literally millions of dollars. It has developed into the one great stabilizing business-like activity in a field that is still characterized by too much guessing and too little definite knowledge. Its influence is wider than any of us imagine. The Bureau has lifted advertising from a more or less discredited activity to a high and honorable plane. These are large claims, but they are justified. I believe that with the passing of years the enormous importance of the Bureau will come to be more and more recognized by the entire business world of the United States and Canada."

As in most other fields, the trade press in our own motion picture industry was characterized in earlier years by claims and counter claims—all of them home-made and unverified.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD made one of the most constructive publishing moves ever carried out in this industry when it joined the A. B. C. in 1920. Motion Picture News and Exhibitors Herald later followed its example.

Announcement was made last month, however, of the resignation of Motion Picture News from the Bureau. Examination of their history in the A. B. C. would indicate why.

Thus the motion picture industry today finds only two of its many trade papers possessing enough merit to qualify in the Bureau.

The regulations and investigations which govern publisher members of the Bureau are sufficient to keep each paper very much on its toes. Through thirteen years of auditing and rigid examination the A. B. C. has encountered and eliminated every bit of monkey business known to the publishing world. It has given publisher members a uniform system for keeping their circulation records efficiently, as well as definite rules to live up to.

Many publishers of course have had their wild circulation figures badly scorched by the Bureau's audit—especially on the first audit; they have been taught a lesson—and except in a few unfortunate cases have been big enough to later thank the A. B. C. for showing them how to run their circulation records honestly and efficiently.

It will interest many of our readers to know that paper consumption, printing bills, post-office mailing receipts, cancelled checks in payment of paper, printing and mailing are all demanded and carefully checked at each annual audit. A list of about five hundred names are selected at random from the paper's subscriber list by the auditor and written to, asking if they paid for the subscription and what their classification in the business is; i. e., theatre owner, manager, projectionist, exchange manager, etc. An equally generous number of names are selected at random from the subscriber files by the auditor, and for each name the publisher must produce the original order of the subscriber. Percentage of subscribers who renew their subscriptions at expiration, the number of subscriptions paid for by a central source—all this and more is carefully analyzed and set down in the A. B. C. Audit. Nothing of importance to the advertiser in helping him make an intelligent decision is overlooked.

Twice a year—June and December—the publisher himself must file a report known as a Six Months' Publisher's Statement. These

"The Naked Truth" Some Facts About The A. M. P. A.

Pres. A. M. P. A.
Walter Eberhardt

ANY history of the motion picture industry must, of necessity, include a history of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., or, to give it its more familiar name—the A. M. P. A. Born in the days of the war, it not only survived that hectic period but has grown steadily in strength and numbers.

At times it has been able to do useful constructive work, not only for its own members but for the industry as a whole. It has constantly been a forum for genial good fellowship and entertainment. It has sponsored several movements in the industry that have been unequalled by any other organization. Its annual Naked Truth Dinners still stand out as the industry's one big social event of the year in the east.

Last year the organization celebrated its tenth anniversary. It was founded at the Claridge by a small group of men who met at luncheon as a remnant of the advertising branch of The Motion Picture Board of Trade. Among them were Arthur James, then advertising manager for Metro, who became the first president, B. Schulberg, B. P. Fineman, John C. Flinn, Randy Lewis, Paul Gulick, P. A. Parsons, and about a dozen others.

Precedent has been established in the organization that no man, with the exception of the first president, has ever served more than one successive terms as president. No other man has ever served as president twice. After Arthur James, who served two terms, came a long, illustrious line that included, in order: P. A. Parsons, Paul Gulick, Paul Lazarus, C. L. (Bill) Yearsley, John C. Flinn, Victor Shapiro, A. M. Botsford, Glendon Allvine and Walter E. Eberhardt, the present incumbent.

Directly after the war the organization either sponsored or consummated several moves of lasting benefit. One of the most outstanding was the movement by which trade papers agreed to adopt a uniform size. At that time four weekly trade papers were being published, each having a different page size. The difference was about $4,000 a week to producers and distributors in the cost of making cuts and electros for page advertisements.

In the fall of 1920 the Near East Relief drive was initiated under the general direction of Herbert Hoover. The A. M. P. A. members undertook to do the detail work on the motion picture end of it—escorting, chaperoning and providing conveyance for the various motion picture stars and celebrities who made appearances at various theatres around New York to appeal for funds.

One of the outstanding things of this time was the organization of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers—an organization whose influence at the producing center cannot be overestimated. At that time the Wampas were regarded as a baby offspring; but their stupendous growth has fully entitled them to recognition in their own right as a separate entity. Memberships are interchangeable between the two associations.

Another affiliation is with the Bumpers in London, the British motion picture advertising men's association which was started by Horace Judge, formerly an officer of the A. M. P. A.

During Paul Lazarus' administration there was started the first of the memorable series of Naked Truth Dinners. Like its two successors, it was a stag function, held in the Crystal Ballroom of the Biltmore Hotel. It was marked for its spontaneous wit and ingenuity, bearing a close kinship to the famous Gridiron Club dinners of the National Press Club in Washington.

The growing popularity of these dinners, however, demanded expansion. During the administration of Victor Shapiro the scene of activities was changed to the grand ballroom of the Astor Hotel with its larger seating capacity. Ladies were allowed to be present for the first time. One thousand people witnessed the first of the new series of spectacular dinners where speakers were presented and included: Will Hays, Arthur Brisbane, D. W. Griffith, Mae Murray, Rupert Hughes and Dr.

A. H. Giannini, S. L. Rothapfel (Roxy) staged the entertainment as "Master of the Waves".

The following year Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld's combined Rialto-Rivoli-Criterion orchestra played at the Naked Truth Dinner.

In the administration of Glendon Allvine the A. M. P. A. members were asked to vote upon the twelve men who had done the most for the screen—subsequently designated by the trade press as the "twelve immortals". Those chosen were: Adolph Zukor, Jess Lasky, Marcus Loew, Will Hays, Richard A. Rowland, Sam Katz, Sidney Kent, William Fox, Carl Laemmle, D. W. Griffith, Joseph M. Schenck and S. L. Rothapfel.

Since then all of these "twelve immortals" with the exception of Carl Laemmle and William Fox have been a guest of honor at one of the association's weekly meetings.

In line with this precedent the association this year, voted on the twelve women who have done the most for the screen, "The Twelve Immortelles". The selection consisted of: Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge, June Mathis, Gloria Swanson, Francis Marion, Colleen Moore, Constance Talmadge, Jeanie Macpherson, Bculah Livingston, Anita Loos, Corinne Griffith and Lillian Gish.

Owing to the fact that the majority are located at the West Coast it will probably be some time before they can all be guests of honor at a weekly luncheon. To date Gloria Swanson is the only one who has been able to accept.

It is interesting to note the progress made by many AMPA members, now graduated from the advertising ranks. Among others: B. P. Fineman, Ben Schulberg and C. C. Burr are now producers, John C. Flinn is in charge of production, Arthur James is a trade paper publisher, Arthur M. Brilant has had a play produced. Hal Hall is directing a series of pictures. Ned Marin has become a sales manager. Paul Lazarus is in charge of sales. Paul Perez, Matt Taylor and Morton Blumenstock are writing titles.

The motto seems to be: If you would succeed be an A. M. P. A. member first.

Statements are then investigated and the entire year's circulation work analyzed by the Bureau and the results made known on a four page A. B. C. White Audit Report. An A. B. C. auditor usually takes at least a week and often longer to complete an audit of a publication.

When the A. B. C. Audits of several competing papers are released the advertiser has the actual low-down on that field. He has before him a fair, unbiased, honest report and analysis based upon a careful investigation made by a competent authority in which each paper is subject to the same rules and regulations.

The Audit Bureau of Circulations is nationally recognized as the only dependable stabilizing circulation factor in the whole advertising world today. Advertisers are realizing more and more that the "Be a good fellow—give me an ad" days are gone. That the time-wasting, hot-air solicitations of older days can be quickly stifled by the simple but justifiable request:—"Show me your A. B. C. Audit."

The advertiser who wants to eliminate guess work, who wants to be sure that he is receiving full value for the white space he is buying will insist upon A. B. C. Reports from the publishers who are soliciting his business. If the publisher has something worth buying he'll gladly give the advertiser this important co-operation. If the publisher does not have an up-to-date A. B. C. Statement to show, then the advertiser can depend upon it that the paper is not as good an advertising medium as the publisher would lead him to believe. If a publisher really has a paper which is a good advertising medium there is no reason under the sun why he cannot be a member of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

Only papers with FREE CIRCULATION are barred from membership in the Bureau. This ruling was decided upon by advertising men who had conclusively established that advertising in mediums of this kind was largely a waste of money. If a paper cannot in itself generate enough reader interest and desire to warrant payment of the modest sum charged for the average yearly subscription it is an unwelcome visitor and as such gets the bum's rush to the waste basket. The only opportunity the readers in any field have of giving tangible evidence of their preference for a certain paper is by paying for it voluntarily, and better yet without the lure of a premium.

Recognition of A. B. C. Statements based upon paid circulation is the advertiser's first and most important step towards placing his advertising on an investment basis. It also is his most effective means of encouraging fair and healthy circulation competition among competitive papers and discouraging BUNK.

Evolution of Presentation In Motion Pictures

By Frank Cambria

General Production Manager, Publix Theatres

MOTION pictures, which in their infancy were merely recognized as a trick novelty, were not taken seriously. If they had been taken seriously in their infancy, they would have been presented at that time in the larger theatres, but since they were lightly regarded by the theatre operators, it gave a number of enterprising gentlemen the opportunity of entering the field individually, men not connected with the theatre business, and making a permanent success of what seemed to be a positive failure.

Up to quite recently, the vaudeville theatres used them as a sort of filler-in, so to speak. As business grew, and as these small store theatres created a demand for production, the motion picture studios began to produce more important pictures, eventually growing to the point of developing stars, very much similar to the Broadway legitimate productions, known as matinee idols and favorites.

Therefore the more money spent for producing pictures, the more money it cost to run the show, and managers immediately found ready patrons willing to pay a larger price of admission for better product and a better show. Competition became quite keen. This caused some of these same enterprising gentlemen to put a platform in front of the screen, whereon they could place singers and musical acts, forcing their competitors to go one better by placing more important acts, thereby creating comment among patrons that this or that theatre gave a better show.

The next logical move was to have a drop curtain and some scenery to enhance the beauty of this platform the better to present acts. By hard pounding and pugnacious stick-to-it-iveness the industry was established; the people became interested in their favorite stars and theatres began to be built expressly for the showing of glorified pictures.

It was around 1910 that the motion picture stage setting, which was more or less of a garden nature with a screen placed in center of stage, was about the type used. The Japanese and the Italian Garden setting were both very popular. Up to this time, very little thought was given to the programming of the motion picture show. Some began to place speakers back of the screen to speak lines and give the impression of talking films. This was discontinued because it was very crude and impractical. Music began to play a part, therefore they began to augment the three and four-piece orchestra to twelve and fifteen and eventually to a symphonic number and instrumentation.

Later, opera singers and instrumentalists were engaged, and, we might term it a "purely musical program" seemed to be favored mostly by patrons of motion pictures. Much attention was being paid to the musical accompaniment to the pictures, which made the entertainment more enjoyable. Motion picture theatres generally were being built with platforms only or stages of very small proportions, never thinking that eventually a tremendous sized and important production would have to be part of a motion picture theatre program.

Up to recently this method was practised until Balaban and Katz in Chicago had foresight enough to see that the larger theatre with a larger seating capacity and a larger stage, upon which could be produced anything from grand opera to a grand musical revue, would be the only theatre to keep pace with the times.

Balaban and Katz's first large theatre, the Central Park, was built along the lines of the Rialto Theatre, the screen in the center placed upon a platform and two side platforms for musical novelties. The Riviera Theatre in Chicago was also built along the lines of the Rivoli Theatre in New York, with a similar plan, the stage being a little larger. In building the Tivoli Theatre, Chicago, a large stage was provided for. A similar method was carried on to the Chicago Theatre and then to the Uptown Theatre, with more and better equipment, until eventually the theatres were so equipped that today they stand pre-eminently in the front rank in practical stagecraft.

The Paramount Theatre was fashioned along these lines and it today stands as the last word in modern motion picture theatre construction. You can readily see the progress made in twelve or fifteen years from a makeshift three-piece orchestra with a husky-voiced song plugger, to the tremendous productions now playing the Paramount Theatre. The prologue, which at one time took first place in novelty film presentation, I daresay is today practically discontinued, because in many instances the prologue hurt the picture, being

The Story Of The News Reel

Emanuel Cohen

THERE is no field of motion picture endeavor offering greater romance than the News Reel, though few who sit in comfortable theatre seats and watch the whole world pass in review have more than a hint of this vital, ever present adventure story.

To most persons it is just an assembling of the most interesting happenings of a recent period. They give no thought to the ever-present tension, the intense competition, the amazing enterprise which brings to the screen the happenings of the globe "while it still is news."

In the early stages of the cinema much of the material was, in a sense, news pictures. The Lumiere Cinematograph in its earliest releases made much of the Geneva Exposition, then being held. The American machines did the best they could with local news happenings. There was no effort at timeliness, but the first visualization most persons had of the airplane was from the motion picture screen.

Probably the earliest attempts at news reporting on the screen are connected with the English race tracks. Racing has a greater hold upon the English imagination than in any other part of the globe, and the first speed records were established by showing the classics of the English turf in the London music halls the evening the races were run. Some of these events took place in Liverpool, and entailed the development and printing of the film while the light race trains hurried their passengers back to London.

The racegoer could "brush up," have dinner and drop around to the Alhambra or the Empire in time to see the race rerun on the screen, and he could not linger long over his dinner, at that.

Eventually the idea was expanded to cover other great events and in time led to the foundation of the Pathe News, first in London and Paris, and eventually, in 1910, in the United States. The credit should go largely, if not wholly to Charles Pathe, of Pathe Freres.

At first this pictorial reporting was confined largely to fixed events, presidential inaugurations, yacht races, ball games, parades and other foreseen occurrences, but with the appointment of Emanuel Cohen to the editorship of the Pathe News there came a change.

Cohen had what in newspaper circles is known as "a nose for news," a highly cultivated sixth sense, which enabled him to virtually smell out the coming events. He organized his staff along the lines of a newspaper organization, with emergency men, spot men, contributors and correspondents. But where the newspaper now covers through the network of news associations, he had to maintain his entire staff. There is no Associated Press in the news reel organizations. Each must maintain its own complete staff.

Salaried men are maintained in large centres, who work under direction of the home office, but who are ready to handle emergencies. In less important centres there are independent cameramen who are available on rush orders, while there are a host of other camera owners who turn in negative on speculation, just as the newspaper free lance submits material to the newspapers on approval.

This takes care of the bulk of the happenings. Sudden breaks can be covered with reasonable speed by this network of regular and special men. But in addition there are two other sources, the big foreseen events and the possible news. Several men may be told off to aid the local staff in covering a World's Series, the inauguration, the big football games and similar events. It is known these will happen. It suffices to augment the regular men so that they can be completely covered.

It is in the "possible" news that the genius of an editor is tested. Perhaps the most important development in this class was the cinematographic record of the burning of Smyrna. There was a war between Greece and Turkey in 1922. Coming after the World War, it was not a very important event, and the newspapers kept their men outside the actual zone of operations, content that they could fully report from military headquarters. But Pathe had a man in the field, and when the unexpected happened, the air, earth and water were "burned up" in an effort to get the pictures from Turkey to New York quickly.

A more recent example was the recent Florida hurricane. A cameraman, though injured by the flying debris and hampered by the terrific 120 mile wind, made his photographic records, walked miles to obtain automobile transportation to the nearest point where rail service was maintained. From Jacksonville he was transported by plane to Atlanta and there he was literally carried to a second plane, which was to take him to Washington. Forced down by a rainstorm, he again had recourse to the railroad to Washington and once more took to the airplane to New York.

Forty-eight hours after the news broke, the pictures were on the screens of New York theatres and were being rushed to all other points by airplane. The cameraman spent a long time in the hospital, but he got his negative in—first.

That is the one thought of the entire staff—to get in first, for there is plenty of competition in the field now, and even the minutes count. Pictures of the Santa Barbara earthquake were shown in Los Angeles and San Francisco the same day, as far east as Omaha the day following, and in New York the second day.

The successful cameraman in addition to being an expert photographer must be a combination of daredevil, steeplejack and human fly, and he has made important contributions to many branches of science. It was a Fox cameraman, for instance, who flew into the crater of Vesuvius during an eruption and made a photographic record without parallel. The camera goes from the equator to the poles and completely around the globe.

It is no wonder that in the seventeen years which have elapsed since the first photographic news weekly that the release has passed from the "filler" stage to the point where many patrons attend the theatre solely to witness the world in review, for it is not just a case of getting the news. The reel must be assembled with the same intelligent care that goes into the make-up of the Sunday pictorial. It must be balanced, which explains why you see so many bathing girls and puppies and baby chicks. These are the little human touches that make for variety, but the bulk of the news represents the work of hundreds of men who daily face death and mutilation to entertain and instruct nearly half the population of the United States each week. There is greater drama, finer adventure, deeper thought in any thousand foot issue of a news reel than you can find in the finest $2,000,000 product of the Hollywood studios because it's real. That's the secret of the news reel's appeal. It's real—and timely.

The Animated Cartoon

By John R. McCrory

I BELIEVE I can safely say that every reader has gone to a motion picture theatre, that was showing an animated cartoon and then afterwards wondered how those things were made to move. Now if you were asked if you had ever seen a moving picture, you would say, "Yes." And yet it is true no one ever sees a moving picture. All motion pictures, whether drawn or photographed, are a succession of still pictures, and therefore are merely an illusion. They appear to move, because one picture succeeds the other so rapidly, our eyes get the impression of movement.

The first modern movie cartoons were made some fifteen years ago, under very peculiar conditions and on a much different basis than they are made today. In fact, some of the very first films were made and photographed in the corner of an old barn in a small upstate town. The camera was supported up among the rafters and usually moved three or four inches every time the operator turned the crank. It often helped the comedy, if a couple of cows across the road, happened to be in the range of the camera, instead of the drawings.

Today, even though you do see from ten to twelve thousand small pictures in every short movie cartoon that you see in the theatre, and it is also true that thousands of drawings are made, it is no more complicated than other things which you perhaps wonder less about. For that matter, even an automobile or a telephone is made up of thousands of small parts and yet is put together in a few hours.

Even though there are ten thousand miniature pictures on the film, these are made from the

The Las Plumas
TheatreA community-owned house

A Seventy-Five Seat House That Pays

SINCE the coming of the luxury theatres, the trend has been to make them fewer and better, following a popular slogan introduced by the picture producers several years ago. But fewer and better theatres meant something. The building of a 5,000-seat house generally meant the decline of half a dozen 300-seat theatres. Even in the smaller towns this has been the general trend. The old style theatre, often a converted store or factory, has been replaced by the modern theatre, with all conveniences.

But there still are many theatres seating under 300, many with capacities under 200 and at least three with a seating capacity of 75. And one of these 75-seaters boasts two projectors, each with its highly trained projectionist, and it shows a program of Paramount, First National, Universal, F. B. O., Pathe and Educational pictures twice each week. The program always includes a feature and one short, and if the attendance is good, that means more shorts for the next showing.

The enterprise has been running for two and a half years, but really dates back twelve years, for prior to the building of the present theatre, picture shows were given in the open during Summer and in a clubhouse in the Winter months.

The theatre is located at Las Plumas, California, sixteen miles from Oroville, in the Feather River Canyon. It has a population of about 100 persons, for Las Plumas is merely the location of a large hydro-electric power plant, and the inhabitants are the employees of that company and their families.

The surrounding country is mountainous and very sparsely settled, so the residents of Las Plumas must make their own entertainment, to which end they founded the Las Plumas Social Club, using a house built by the company. Twelve years ago they began to show pictures, using an outdoor dance platform in the Summer and the club room in the Winter. There was only one projector.

About three years ago a movement was started to build a theatre. Benefits were held, subscriptions were freely made and the sum of $250 was accumulated. The company donated some old lumber and an old concrete foundation, originally intended to be used for another workman's cottage. This was on a side hill, and advantage was taken of the ground formation to obtain the proper pitch to the floor without additional building.

The main building is 20 by 40 feet, with a stage 9 by 14 feet at one end and a projection room 8 by 14 feet at the other. This projection room is additional to the forty-foot depth, for it is built as an addition to the structure and is completely separated from the auditorium by a metal wall. No million dollar theatre offers more modern construction, and there is no danger from fire.

The auditorium is of wooden construction, lined with plaster board painted a light tan. The seats are slat settees, similar to park benches, but comfortable, and the decorations are severely simple.

The stage is on the "street" end of the building and when stage plays are given there are portable dressing rooms. The patrons go to the rear of the building, where the box office is located.

This is probably the only electrically heated theatre in the world, the installation being three 440 volt home-made heaters. It was planned to put in four, but it was found that three were ample to heat the house on the coldest nights.

The house is managed by Frank L. Humble, chief operator of the power plant. Mr. Humble does all the booking, receives and ships the films, does the advertising, keeps the books, looks after the house and presides at one of the projectors. The other projectionist, and Mr. Humble writes "projectionist" rather than the archaic "operator," is D. B. Ogle, assistant superintendent of the plant. The superintendent, F. W. Cain, is the ticket seller, and adds to his duties the keeping of the customer's accounts, for the little theatre permits charge accounts and in twelve years never has lost a penny.

A Community Theatre That Runs the Biggest Road Shows and Allows Patrons to "Charge It"

The old projector was scrapped when the new house was built and two reconditioned Power machines installed. All of the projection room equipment, including a motor rewind, is home made.

Of course no salaries are paid, and the only expenses are for film rentals, carbons, replacements and similar equipment. Current for heating and lighting is supplied without cost.

Two shows a night are given on Sundays and Wednesdays, and the audiences are largely confined to the employees, though they draw some patronage from the limited population, particularly in good weather. The regular admission is thirty cents for adults, children being admitted free. On such specials as "The Covered Wagon," "The Ten Commandments" and "The Lost World" the admission is half a dollar, and it might be said in passing that most of the big specials are played.

The theatre is not run for gain, and an excess of receipts one night means a better program later on. The house is also used for home talent shows and school entertainments, and the stage is shown set for the Christmas entertainment last year.

The Las Plumas theatre is by no means the only picture theatre connected with a commercial enterprise, but it is one of the three 75-seat theatres in the United States, and is one of the few company enterprises operated entirely by the individuals. Most company theatres are supported by the enterprise, but the Las Plumas house is self-supporting and a little better. It is a labor of love with all concerned and it has two of the highest priced projectionists in the country on its staff.

Of course, Moving Picture World has been a guiding light for many years.

Reviewing Pictures

By C. S. Sewell

REVIEWERS FOR TRADE AND FAN PAPERS

REVIEWING pictures has much in common with the story of the small boy who envied the clerk in the candy store, but when he landed a job behind the counter found it was something else again.

The movie fan can take his pick of the pictures and see the ones he thinks he will like under favorable conditions at hours that suit his convenience and sit back and give himself up entirely to being entertained. The reviewer must take the pictures as they come, the good with the bad, look at many more in the course of every week than the most ardent screen devotee would desire, view them often under trying conditions at all sorts of hours, and watch them with a much greater degree of concentration, for he must take into consideration a number of different angles in formulating his judgment. Last, but by no means least, the fan can proceed to dismiss the subject from his mind when the final clinch comes, while the last fade-out marks scarcely the half-way mark with the reviewer who has still to crystallize his thoughts and set them down on paper for the benefit of his readers.

Although the reviewer can and does see many pictures at the de luxe performances in the movie palaces, the pressure of business usually makes him time his visits so as to miss the remainder of the show. The greater proportion of the product, however, he generally sees in company projection rooms without the benefit of music or any opportunity to observe the audience reaction. Due to the enterprise of the publicity men, this routine is sometimes varied and pictures are shown to the critics aboard steamships and railroad trains, in hotel ball-rooms sometimes with the accompaniment of dancing and feasting and even aboard aeroplanes, in fact, about the only place they have not tried to show a picture is in the subway.

As to the hours, we have one thing to be thankful for, that at least six hours out of the twenty-four, from 3 A. M. to 9 A. M., are still sacred. Trade showings in projection rooms are held at any time, and frequently on a few minutes notice, from the latter hour until time for the night performances to start, with the reviewer trying to catch matinees in between. Big openings are usually held at night and every now and then a special performance is put on after the night show with the picture starting around 1 A. M. and lasting until about three. Then the reviewer has nothing to do until the time comes for an early showing the next day. The trade paper reviewer can usually count on at least one picture each morning and afternoon, with another one in between almost every day, double feature showing occasionally and all of this to be fitted in between the big openings and special showings, leaving him to the essential work of catching up with the important angle of writing his reviews at odd moments. In addition there is the matter of hustling around, telephoning, etc., to secure necessary information as to the casts and screen credits, footages, release dates and stills to illustrate the reviews, all of which the same enterprising publicity men frequently seem to overlook supplying you.

A point frequently overlooked in considering reviews is the fact that criticisms in the trade press, the newspapers and fan magazines are written for different purposes and from different angles, because of the difference in the classifications of the readers. The trade paper reviewer must bear in mind that he is writing for the benefit of his exhibitor readers and to furnish information that will aid them in judging whether the pictures are suitable for their theatres and will bring the money into their box-offices. This is complicated by the fact that the picture that will break records in the big cinema palace with its cosmopolitan audience or in the theatre in an exclusive residential neighborhood will not necessarily prove a hit in the suburban house.

It is obviously impossible to make a blanket prophecy for all types of houses, and it is up to the reviewer to endeavor to strike the highest possible average, pointing out as nearly as possible the type of houses in which each picture is most apt to be successful, for it is a well-known fact in the trade that there is an audience for almost every picture, and such are the vagaries of mob psychology that it frequently happens that a picture that is enthusiastically received by one audience will fall flat with another audience of apparently similar type.

It is obvious from the foregoing that a reviewer, to be of greatest service to his readers, must frequently sink his personal reaction toward the entertainment value of a picture and be governed by what according to his judgment and experience will be the reaction of different types of audiences toward the picture. For instance, a reviewer may not like westerns and be personally bored at the constant repetition of minor variations of set formulas, but will recognize the fact that there is sufficient action and so-called sure-fire situations to make appeal to a large class of fans. Also, because he has seen so many pictures, he is apt to become blasé and welcome camera tricks and novelties, new angles of treatment, subtlety and sophistication, fine shades of characterizations, unusual artistry, in short that which is out of the ordinary, but still realize that in many instances these things will not necessarily be of wide appeal, that what the so-called intelligentsia will rave over frequently does not spell entertainment for the masses, that what the high-brows call hokum spells box-office for the average movie-goer.

It is this angle, coupled with the fact that obviously a trade magazine catering to men who must judge pictures from the standpoint of money-making must necessarily deal with the commercial possibilities of pictures rather than the artistic; that largely differentiates the criticism of the trade press from those of the fan magazines and daily newspapers.

Theatre Management

By

By John F. Barry

Director, The Publix Theatre Managers' Training School

TWENTY years ago — when the Moving Picture World issued its first number — theatre management was quite different from what it is today. Twenty years ago if anyone spoke of theatre management as a profession he would have been laughed down. Store-shows were the "theatres." Untrained men from any walk of life could borrow undertaker's chairs, a muslin sheet, rent a projector and open a store-show. The very novelty of "pictures that moved" and the fact that competition was not keen made attendance easy to get. Quick profit was possible. Management required no training.

Today the store-show has become an expensive palace. This incident symbolizes the remarkable change—recently crowds on Broadway watched two giant cranes swing into place a mighty 144 ton mass of steel, one of the roof trusses of the Paramount Theatre. Remarked one in the crowd, "Those cranes could have lifted the entire structure of one of the early store-shows and now they struggle to swing into place just one support of the modern theatre."

To erect the modern theatre many, many thousands of dollars are invested. Today competition is keen. Admission prices are higher. The manager, responsible for the successful operation of the modern theatre, cannot be the untrained, inexperienced individual who decides to "take a flyer" in theatre management. There is too much at stake. Management requires trained brains, technical training and executive personality. No longer is the only requisite a broad-brimmed hat, a flashy vest, a huge watch charm, a noisy tie and leather lungs.

Theatre management can be regarded as a profession. It is a profession, because it is based on definite principles which have been justified by long experience. It is a profession, because there has been accumulated information which properly organized can be the frame work of practical instruction. It is a profession because it can be taken up as a permanent career—permanent because retailing motion picture entertainment to the public is answering a need almost as necessary and as natural as the need for food.

Special training is required. What should the training include? The schedule of the Publix Theatre Managers Training School lists in its training—Service, Projection, Theatre and Stage Lighting, Orchestra and Organ, Selective Merchandising, Newspaper Advertising, Window Display, Cooperative Advertising, Marquee, Lobby Advertising, Relations with the Newspaper, Publicity, Program Building, Equipment Maintenance, Community Analysis, Theatre Accounting, Fire and Accident Prevention, First Aid in the Theatre, Stagecraft, Legal Problems of Theatre Operation, The Theatre Site, Cooperation with Exchanges, Training Personnel, and many others. Each subject mentioned could be broken into different divisions, each of which require training.

The type of applicants for the Publix Theatre Managers Training School makes it evident that theatre management is regarded seriously. For the three classes which have been assembled over fifteen hundred applications for admission were received. These applicants have come from every state of the nation and represent many recognized professions—lawyers, civil engineers, West Point graduates, Annapolis graduates, mining engineers, personnel managers, advertising executives, and theatre managers who felt that the importance of their work required intensive training and study. Over fifty men from the first two classes are now engaged in theatre operation in different parts of the United States, some are operating the largest theatres in these states. One is in Mexico City and one in Paris. These men realize that theatre management is serious—it is important. It is not glamorous. It is attractive primarily because it gets results for those who think and those who work harder than the average. Every day reveals new possibilities and new methods. It is the intention of these men to make theatre management a career—a career of which they can be proud because their efforts will exercise an influence for good which reaches right into every family of every community where they will work.

Theatre management is important. The very nature of the product merchandised and the many details which must be supervised requires training and a type of man power that is beyond the ordinary.

Some argue that the theatre manager is only glorified janitor with a fancy title. They imply that no more is required of him than is required of a chain store manager—he is only an automaton, he does not have to think. Not so!

The chain store manager may be only an automaton. His work may be automatic. Chain store operation can be mechanically standardized. More delivery is what the chain store requires of its manager, not salesmanship. The sale depends mainly on price. The product sold serves the same appetite everywhere. Local preferences do not vary for a standard can of beans or trade marked socks or standard cigarettes or trade marked soap. Store location, standardized window display, cut prices, and national advertising which appeals to the same appetite everywhere are factors of success.

Entertainment cannot be successfully merchandised with chain store routine and with mechanically standardized methods which make the work of the individual manager unimportant. Initiative, originality, ingenuity and real sales ability are required, besides the executive ability to direct and supervise detailed routine.

Consider merchandising. Communities differ. Preferences differ. Each community presents a unique problem. The appetite for beans or soup or cigarettes may be the same everywhere. But for entertainment—there are varied preferences. The theatre manager is in immediate contact with his community. He understands its preferences—its modes of life. He speaks its language. He lives its life. He is in touch with daily local activities and with local influences whose cooperation makes possible novel advertising campaigns.

To merchandise a program he must select those appeals which will be most effective for his particular community, and give those appeals an expression which will be locally interesting and locally understood. Moreover, he must bring to the attention of different groups different sales points of the very same program because those different points will appeal more effectively to different groups. He cannot tag the adjective "greatest" on a program and let it go at that. He must analyze his program for sales points. He must know his community better than any other retailer. His selling must be intensive. It must have local flavor. It must tie in with local conditions. This requires individual thinking.

If the manager is fortunate enough to operate a theatre for a circuit he has more time to devote to one theatre's problems, because many details are taken from his shoulders. He has the advantage of countless economies of operation. This help does not tie his hands or take away his brains. It lifts burdens so his hands are freer. It takes away worries so his brain can work faster.

Merchandising entertainment requires intensive effort. There is just a limited period of time in which to make all possible sales for a particular program. It may be one week, three days or even one day. When the program changes the possibility for revenue with that product is gone. There is nothing to leave on the shelves, nothing to store in the cellar. Other retailers—the grocer, for instance—may not sell the can of beans this week or next week. It stays on the shelves. It may be sold next month. Even a bargain sale can be resorted to. He is not fighting against time.

The theatre manager has no salesmen. Many of his prospects do not pass the lobby. His salesmen are his advertising materials and his advertising mediums skillfully selected and skillfully placed.

This problem of changing programs has suggested institutional selling. The object is to establish a preference for a particular institution irrespective of the program scheduled. This means merchandising other things besides stage and screen entertainment. Thus it is that every distinctive institutional feature of theatres are brought to the attention of the public who are made to realize that some institutions because of conveniences, exceptional service, modern equipment, ventilation and countless other details are to be preferred when entertainment is sought. That institutional selling can achieve at a time when people have been educated to shop for entertainment depends upon the skill with which institutional appeals are made locally. Here, too, we find that the local manager must understand local preferences to emphasize those institutional details which will be locally effective.

The theatre manager's work is important.

It is ridiculous to compare the relative importance of the different parts of the long chain that stretches from the author's desk through production, through distribution, and to the theatre manager. All parts are important. But—the theatre manager is in immediate contact with the public. From the public comes the revenue for the progress of the industry. More revenue will come from the public when more intensive and more effective merchandising and more improved theatre operation exists.

There have been exaggerated estimates given of national attendance at motion picture theatres. They give the impression that the maximum has been reached and that considerable increase in revenue is not likely. The fact is that there CAN be considerable increase. Many people who never attend the motion picture theatre can be made at least occasional patrons. Many, many occasional patrons can have developed in them the habit of regular theatre attendance. And there are children—the patrons of tomorrow. These great untouched sections of the public from which revenue can be brought to the industry are those in which their theatre managers are in immediate contact.

When every theatre manager can fine-comb his territory so closely that all available prospects are secured consistently then it will be a time to talk about maximum. That time is far away. Imagine the increase in national gross for any one feature photoplay if every theatre manager put behind that photoplay an intensity and effectiveness of merchandizing which was beyond the average, so that each community was fine-combed for patronage! The result in figures indicates the importance of the work that can be done by the theatre manager.

When the Moving Picture World celebrates its 40th anniversary and someone looks back over the twenty years beginning with 1926, will there be a different story? Will it then be true that the theatre manager's work is no longer important—that it requires no training and no brain work—and that entertainment can be sold by mechanical chain store methods just as other products? No! Because then entertainment could be given in a package with a colored label or in capsule form and preferences of people everywhere would be the same, and the national appetite would be so unvaried that a nickel in the slot in Biddeford, Maine, or Broadway, New York, or Okeechobee,

Florida, would give everybody the same thing wrapped up in tin foil and tissue—then the manager's duties could be limited to oiling the slot machine and putting in more capsules or more cans. Perhaps? Yes, when God standardizes human nature.

Adolph Zukor Says:

I AM happy of this opportunity of congratulating you of MOVING PICTURE WORLD who have been a motivating force in the progress of the screen. The late J. P. Chalmers, who was founder of the World, was held in the highest esteem by our industry, and his constructive policies were a guidance to all who were struggling to bring the motion picture to its present high standard.

The Twentieth Anniversary of the World is a significant event. During those twenty years the history of the motion picture has been written, and the World may well feel proud of the fact that its honored name is written within the pages of this history.

Again I congratulate you.—ADOLPH ZUKOR.

Jesse L. Lasky Says:

WHEN one has endured in his labors through a score of years he has every reason for pride in his accomplishments. You who have formulated and directed the policies of MOVING PICTURE

WORLD during the last twenty years are to be congratulated.

We all have grown to maturity together in this wonderful industry of ours. In its formative years when encouragement and counsel were vital to development the World was a constructive force.

Your twenty years have been fruitful in service and it is a pleasure for me to extend to you my sincere best wishes for your continued success.—JESSE L. LASKY.

Short Subjects

A Resume of Little Pictures and Big Laughs

BACK in 1909 a man in the business wanted to see the Edison production of "Frankenstein," so seeking its showing, he called up an exchange and learned that it should be found at a certain theatre. This was in the morning—a Saturday morning—and it was not until late in the afternoon that he was free to drop over and see the picture. Looking at the posters, he did not see the release advertised, so he asked the manager if he had it on the screen.

"Naw," was the very positive negative. "I sent it back to the exchange. Wotinell do they think I am! I got a Vitagraph that's 980 feet, an Essanay that's 974 feet and this damned Edison ran 1048 feet. And me on a Saturday with a show like that! Howinell can I make money with a show like that?"

That was nearly a full three reel show: far too long for a quick turnover on a Saturday when the idea was to get them in and out again. It was good sportsmanship in those days to cut below 950 feet now and then, even if you did get paid by the foot and were allowed to send out a full thousand. In those days a two reel comedy would not have been "the pep of the program" but an overlong feature. Give a modern audience a three reel show and the "Good night" slide and they would tear up the seats.

The times have changed, and in nothing is the change more apparent than in the program building, though even yet managers pay far too little attention to the real value of good short subjects. They no longer regard these as extending the show beyond the profitable length, but they do regard them merely as padding in far too many cases. They need more show, so they put in a short. They do not seem to realize that the comedy and the news reels appeal to some persons who do not care for the feature of the day. Far too many managers have the standing line in their advertising.

Many of them could not tell you what was in the news reel and others might not even be able to name the comedy.

Here is one point wherein there has been little progress made and it is to be hoped that the next decade will see a change. The short subject, whether it be news reel, scenic or comedy, can attract some patrons. They do attract some patrons; people who will not respond to a six or seven reel comedy. Even people who leave when they have seen the news reel.

This coming season is going to be the short subject year. Write that down in your booking book. Last season you got most of your short features from Pathe Exchange or Educational. After you knew what you would have in the way of a feature, you shopped around for a comedy. Even today it is no uncommon thing to see a small house manager shopping through the exchanges for a short. If he can get one for two dollars and another for three, he will take the two dollar comedy every time. He will not even realize that he may actually draw more than the extra dollar with a better comedy.

And even while it might not draw, because it is not properly advertised, it might at least save the show.

And don't think it can't. Only lately a two reel Harry Langdon comedy saved a show from complete collapse at a run house. The feature offered a big-money star and a near-star in his support. But Langdon came along in one of his best, and people went out to

A NEW SUN HAS RISEN!

*The NEW C-14
Spot-Flood Lamp
A BRENKERT Product*

*Truly,
The best spot lamp ever placed on the market.*

With 5,000,000 beam candlepower at its command, the NEW BRENKERT C-14 Spot-Flood Lamp assures you of ample reserve illumination to meet all conditions in any theatre.

By means of its quick-change double lens system, a flip of the wrist will give either extremely small spots, at great distances, or a brilliant flood; as brilliant, on 100 amperes, as a 150 ampere high intensity stereoptican flood!

And such spots! You never before have seen anything like them. Clear, sharply defined, round as a dollar, and sparkling with light, from which all false images have been removed so that tail flames and luminous negative tips need no longer be troublesome.

This new wonder lamp, when desired, is also equipped with a compact, snug-fitting arc control, especially designed to meet the rigorous conditions of spot lamp service so that perfect spots can be maintained throughout the entire program.

Then And Now

By F. H. Richardson

It is a far cry from the cloth-covered "booth" barely large enough to conceal one straddle-legged, tiny projector to the marble finished projection suite of the Paramount and other motion picture palaces of today. Often the before-mentioned cloth-covered enclosure was so very small that every time the machine operator moved about its walls underwent violent agitation.

There is indeed a vast difference as between the first Edison projector of 1896 and the motion picture projector of today, just as there is an almost unbelievable difference between the Roxy theatre of today and the store-room nickelodeon of yesteryear.

Early Machine Small

The projector of early days was, by comparison, a rather tiny affair. Men who have entered projection within the past few years would be amazed could they see a Power's No. 1 and a Power's latest type side by side. They might also be surprised at the results the men of those days managed to get with those little, crudely built projectors and the film we then had, though mark you well I do not mean that the results would be considered as anything less than just plain terrible by an audience of today. What I have in mind is the results obtained when we consider the conditions.

The projector sprockets, the film sprocket holes and the projector intermittent movement were all sadly lacking in accuracy, so that anything even faintly resembling a steady picture as we know it today was unknown. The screen was either plaster or cloth, usually without any border of any sort. Photography was rather sketchy and "not so good." The projection light was weak, twenty-five amperes being about the limit. In fact even as late as the year 1910 the City of New York actually limited projection amperage to twenty-five. Seems a bit absurd to us now, does it not?

About all the then "operator" knew, or was supposed to know, was how to thread the "machine," how to place carbons in the lamp according to his own individual idea what was about right, and to get and maintain some sort of a light on the screen at least most of the time; also how to make some sort (usually a pretty terrible sort it was too) of splice in film.

Warm Arguments

Of electrical knowledge he either had none at all, or only the most sketchy smattering, except for the few electricians who took up projection on the theory that it was wholly an electrical work. I can well remember some pretty warm arguments between Chicago machine operators, of whom I was one for about four years, as to whether the rheostat controlled the voltage or the amperage. Such arguments usually resulted in a draw, because neither really knew much of anything about such matters.

As to optical knowledge, the then operator had just exactly none at all. He was what might be termed a total loss optically. However, be it remarked that even lens makers did not at that time very well understand the problems of the projector optical train. No longer ago than the year 1919 the writer was declared just plain crazy by one of the foremost and best optical engineers because he insisted that the light beam diverged between the projector aperture and the projection lens. That engineer, a very able man, by the way, lived to acknowledge his error.

Optics a Mystery

All the early-day machine operator knew about such abstruse subjects as optics was that one lens would, for some deeply mysterious reason, project a picture of one size at a given distance, whereas another lens would project one of another size at the same distance. In that day it was the duty of city machine operators to go each morning to the exchange, and of the small town man to go to the express office and get the "show," returning the same either that night or the next morning.

I recall a discussion between two Chicago "operators" at an exchange one morning concerning lenses. One of them had noted the fact that the lens that projected the smaller picture was longer than the other. Eureka! The puzzle was solved! The long lens stretched the light and made it smaller. What's that! A fairy tale? No, it is NOT. I overheard exactly that explanation, with at least a dozen "operators" listening and none questioning the explanation. I was one of the dozen, but inasmuch as the "explanation" did not sound good to me, I proceeded to get busy, wrote the Bausch and Lomb Company and received an explanation, together with suggestions of books which would further enlighten me, which within twenty-four hours I owned and had my honorable nose buried in them very deeply.

The machine operator of the early days received anywhere from seven dollars clear up to the dizzy height of eighteen real simoleons per each week, usually of seven days, though the latter figure was paid only in the very best houses in the largest cities. The average for city work was, I think, about fifteen dollars a week. In the small towns and villages it was no uncommon thing for some schoolboy to take on the operation of the "mov'in pitcher machine" just for the glory of it—the chance he had to lord it over the other kids.

The universal price of admission was the nimble jitney, five cents, or "half a thin dime," as the barker put it. The show usually lasted about one hour, though the time really varied pretty widely.

Early Conditions

I am sometimes amused in the contemplation of what our officials of today would say did some one attempt projection under conditions which were the common, ordinary practice in those days. Imagine, if you can, a projector lamphouse and mechanism bolted to a wooden board called a "table," the whole set on top of and firmly attached to a galvanized iron box, called a "tank," about 18" wide by perhaps 3½' low and about the height of a dining table, beside which often squatted a more or less red hot rheostat, without any protection whatsoever.

To the top of the projector mechanism frame, attached by means of two thumbscrews which served to hold the upper magazine when, later, that adjunct had been "invented," was what we called a "reel hanger." It was really nothing but the driving element of a very simply constructed rewinder.

On this "reel hanger" was placed the reel of film, to be projected right out in the open, without any sort of protection whatever (this condition prevailed up until about 1909), with the only entrance the "theatre" had usually passing right beneath the projection room.

Threading Film

The film was threaded down through the projector mechanism, and the end thrust through a hole in the top of the aforesaid tank, into which it passed as fast as projected, accumulating in a loose heap, often to the extent of as much as 3,000 feet of film, which was about all the tank would hold. When more than one reel was run into the tank before rewinding, two or three feet of each film end was left sticking out a small door at the side of the tank, because if a film-enu ever went down into the tank, the "operator" certainly would have one merry job finding it in the mixed-up mess of film, and he must rewind all the film in the few moments intermission between shows. He cranked the projector by hand, and had no other chance for rewinding.

It really was astonishing how the rewinder would yank the film out of the seemingly inextricably tangled mass of film in a tank with scarcely a single snarl. It squirmed out of the tank line like a flattened-out snake; it was really amusing to watch it.

Projection

There were real lively times, too, occasionally, when a careless machine "operator" would permit a cigar stub or a red hot carbon butt to roll gaily into the tank through the hole in its top. What's that? Oh yes! Sure we smoked in projection rooms in those days. I have myself watched a Chicago Inspector light his cigar with a bit of film ignited at the arc of my projector with an open reel of film being projected and some thousands of feet of loose film in the tank. We did not bother much with "trifles" in those days.

Well, to get back to my tale, when that cigar stub or red hot carbon butt made connections with the pile of loose film in the tank, zowie! There were doings with a capital D, and plenty of them!

Incidentally that was where and how the silly idea that film explodes had its origin. The door on the side of the tank was fastened shut with a substantial iron latch. The opening at the top was closed by a metal slide, held normally in closed position by means of a stout coil spring. It was presumed to be kept tightly closed except when projection was in actual progress. Take note of the "presumed," please.

When projection started the machine operator was presumed to pull the slide open against the pull of the spring, and fasten it thus by means of a hook attached to a film link so placed that when a fire started in the tank (which fortune forbode) it would immediately strike the film link and sever it, whereupon the spring would yank the slide shut and all would be lovely.

The theory, conceived by some own brother to the original nut, was that the fire would thus be confined to the tank, and all would be more or less lovely, and so it might have been, too, had the nut had brains enough to connect the tank, by means of a suitable pipe, with the open air. He did not, however, and whoever thinks he can set a loose pile of some thousands of feet of film on fire enclosed in anything less than a structure of thick steel without anything happening may try it if he wants to.

The net result of the enormously rapid generation of gas by the burning film was that the tank either blew up, or its door blew off, in either of which events there was a very real, though comparatively mild explosion, with blazing film scattered around pretty promiscuously, and of course our highly intelligent newspaper reporters grabbed off the idea that the film had exploded, which it took years of effort to pry them loose from.

Oh, those were the 'appy days allright, though we didn't think so then. I doubt, however, that many men who went through them, or any substantial portion of them, fail to pretty thoroughly enjoy thinking or talking them over. Nicholas Power, "Pop" Lubin, "Pop" Rock, Baxter Morton, A. C. Roebuck, "Ed" Porter, Frank Cannock, James Chalmers, James Hoff—all either far away and out of the business, or gone on, let us hope, to a happier land. And there were the Biograph, the Essanay, the Kalem, the Lubin, the Gaumont, the Vitagraph, the Bison and a host of other film producing companies of those days, all of whom have passed away, and many are all but already forgotten. It's a great game, gentlemen, if you don't weaken or die.

But enough of the past. Out of the ruck of bygone days has arisen what we may even now term marvelous perfection, though just when the first start was made it would be hard to say. I think, however, that Frank Cannock was perhaps as nearly as anyone the man who pointed the right road.

For two or three years, as our files will show, the projection department of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD had been pointing out the necessity for heavier construction of projectors, and the awkwardness, not to say clumsiness of their spraddle-legged supporting stands, which had to be wired down to the floor to make them "stay put." Whether or no our preachments had effect on Cannock's mind I do not know, but anyhow when he built the "Edengraph" I personally took him to task for the light construction, and we had quite a wordy battle over it.

He soon discarded the Edengraph, having first, however, made and sold a very few of them, one of which was purchased by Jack Hemment, the famous race track photographer, who used it to project the first Paul Raney Arctic films before many prominent people, including President Taft.

Cannock then almost immediately started designing the Simplex, the preliminary sketches for which were (this is historic fact) many of them made on the backs of beer checks in a saloon Cannock patronized upon occasion. I mention that merely as a curious fact, still remembered by several people. Cannock himself told me of the incident, which he seemed to regard as quite amusing.

In designing the Simplex, Cannock made the lamphouse larger, the lamp measurably heavier and many of the moving parts of the projector mechanism, such as shafts, etc., much heavier than anything before used. He designed a supporting pedestal in such way that the projector optical axis could be moved in any desired direction, up down or sideways, through a limited but considerable angle, all of which marked a decided movement in advance of anything before done in projector construction.

The Simplex was brought out late in 1911 or early in 1912 and it was very sad that Frank Cannock could not live to see its final large success.

Let us now go back a few years. During 1907 and 1908 Nicholas Power did much experimenting to find an intermittent movement he thought would be better than their universally used star and cam. In the year 1909 he did find one, and in the fall of that year introduced it to the trade. It was the movement which has ever since been used in or on the Powers projector. It required years of experimenting to bring that movement to its present state of mechanical perfection, but "Nick" Power never faltered. He believed it could be made perfect, and proved his contention to be right.

Shortly before, or soon after the advent of the Simplex, I am not sure which it was, Nicholas Power decided to discard the telescopic leg supported table and adopt the Powers stand as it is today, except for refinements which have been added as the years have passed. It happened this way.

A heavy sheet metal table with heavier telescopic legs than had before been used had been built by Mr. Uhlmann, then factory superintendent, under the supervision of Mr.

Power. The writer was then inspector at the Powers factory, and one morning Mr. Power requested him to come to the fifth floor, look at the new table and make such suggestions for change or improvement he thought proper.

No such suggestions were made. Instead the writer, in no uncertain terms, condemned the whole thing, suggesting that it was about time to get away from such a foolish form of construction.

Mr. Power was considerably provoked—so much so that the writer speculated whether or no he would be incontinently "fired," but nothing of the sort happened. Next day Mr. Power showed up along about noon, with pencil sketches of the Powers projector stand as it now is, except, as I said, for several refinements since added. Mr. Power afterward told me he had worked nearly all night perfecting the idea which he had long had in nebulous form.

During the following years improvements and refinements were constantly added to all projectors, except that of Mr. Edison, who finally decided to retire from the projector manufacturing business, which had never seemed to interest him very much. Today in the Powers, the Simplex and the Motiograph De Luxe, we have the best motion picture projectors in all the world. They are strongly built, have amazing accuracy and, when properly handled, put a result upon the theatre screen of which we may all well feel proud.

In the early days, and up until as late as about 1917, the men who projected motion pictures were known merely as the "Moving Picture Machine Operator," or, for short, the "Operator."

The writer had long realized the possibilities for improvement in almost every phase of motion picture projection, and the literally crying need for greater technical knowledge on the part of the men engaged therein, but it was found to be a very slow, not to say impossible task to awake either the men or the exhibitor to the need for improvement. The men were, save for an occasional exception, indifferent, and inclined to follow the line of least resistance. The exhibitor, almost without exception, considered motion picture projection as merely a matter of "running a machine," which he had a firmly fixed idea that "any schoolboy could do" quite acceptably.

The writer, after long study of the situation, came to the conclusion that two things were absolutely essential to progress in projection matters. First of all, the foolish idea held by the exhibitor that projection was merely a mechanical operation must be gotten rid of and, second, the men must be prised loose from their "operating a machine" idea, and given a distinctive title which they might, in time, come to have some real pride in.

More than a year was spent in considering various possible names or titles. One after the other more than a dozen possibilities were discarded. After all the projection of pictures, considered in its entirety, was just one thing, viz projection, hence the men engaged therein were, in the very nature of things, motion picture projectionists, or "Projectionists."

That title was therefore fixed upon, and the fight for its adoption started. And it was a fight allright, make no mistake about that. The writer was laughed at, sneered at and sometimes even jeered at, but here and there

Illustrated Songs

By Harry S. Marion

Harry S. Marion as he was twenty-five years ago

(Editorial Note:—Harry S. Marion, who has been a member of MOVING PICTURE WORLD's circulation and advertising staffs for a number of years, is one of the original song slide men. Still young in everything but years, Mr. Marion's recollections are interesting as coming from a pioneer member of the old guard. A quarter of a century ago the editor got himself disliked by suggesting that the singers worked with slides in order that the audience might not be able to throw things with correct aim in the darkness, but Mr. Marion never was quite that bad.—E. W. S.)

THERE seems to be a popular impression today that the illustrated song and its singer were a direct development of the "store show" picture display, but as a matter of fact, the first singer to use slides with a song was the beloved Tony Pastor, back in the early sixties. Tony Pastor was what they used to call a "Lion Comique" in England, and much of his material came from abroad, for they wrote few of his type of songs over here in those days.

Tony had a song written called "Heroes of the War," in 1863, and this was illustrated with slides, most of them portraits of generals, but with some battle scenes. He got most of them from the old McAllister Company. After the war was over, Tony dropped the slides and went back to straight comedy songs, in which he had no equal in America. He revived the idea during the Spanish-American War in 1898.

No one else seemed to think much of the idea, and the illustrated song seemed to languish until around 1895, when Allen May revived them. To the best of my knowledge he was the first since Pastor to sing with slides, but it was not long before he was followed by Alonzo Hatch.

That was the day of the "concert hall" and no concert hall show was complete without its illustrated song act. The concert hall was particularly popular at the beach resorts. The usual show consisted of some ten to fifteen girls, with a pair of comedians, generally a Dutchman and an Irishman. The shows would last about an hour, and they started at one o'clock in the afternoon and ran until one the next morning. No admission fee was charged, but you were supposed to buy beer briskly, and if you were not quicker than the waiter, your half empty glass would be whisked away, and then you would have to order another to retain your seat. It was five cents a glass at the tables and twenty-five cents a bottle if you sipped it with one of the "actresses" in the boxes or the greenroom.

Generally they had an illustrated song about every third number, black curtains being drawn over the windows in the daytime. Five or six of the girls would be engaged as illustrated singers, and this rated them $5 a week above the ordinary chorus girls. They were "principals."

There were scores of these places at Coney Island, and smaller places at Bergen Beach (which was managed by that great Showman, Percy G. Williams), North Beach, South Beach, Seaside (Rockaway Beach), Bowery Beach, and other shore resorts.

In those days publishers never issued their new songs until after the beach season had closed. In those days a hit was expected to run the season through, and they would have been sung to death at the beaches before they had a chance in the touring shows.

Some of the places not large enough to support a stock company employed the singing waiters. Like the stock singers they worked twelve hours seven days a week, for which they were paid a dollar a day. And yet many of these men built comfortable homes on their earnings, for tips were small but numerous and the patrons generous in tossing coins on the stage to the waiters who sang their favorites. Not all of these men worked with slides, but they were ranked with "the profession," though lower in the scale than the actors. In the winter most of them went back to the Bowery and along Eighth Avenue, though some of them went with the cheaper road shows.

In addition to salaries the more generous managers issued six beer checks a day and the men got three cigar checks each.

Generally the machines were owned by the house and the slides were provided by the singers. Electricity was not generally used, and the old calcium or "limelight" was used for illumination. To my thinking, it was better than much of the modern projection. The introduction of the motion picture did much to provide electric installation for the lantern.

The beach resorts and city concert halls, along with the dime museums, were known as "boiler factories"; not on account of the quality of singing, but because of the long hours. All started around one o'clock and only the museums closed at eleven. It was nothing to play twenty-two shows at Huber's or other museums on a holiday. Generally the swing in a museum was nine or ten shows a day.

Among the stars Bohanan and Corey came into the business about 1898. They made a real "act" of their offering. Meyer Cohen, who was generally known as "The California Baritone," came East about 1902 as office manager for Charles K. Harris, and he sang only the Harris songs. Meyer had a very powerful voice and it was his custom to sing with his right hand cupped to his ear to hear the orchestra or pianist above his singing.

Perhaps the leaders in that day were Maxwell and Simpson. They specialized in a song written by Joe Maxwell lauding the fire department, and they had a splendid collection of fire slides. At the end of the act they would throw slides of the local Fire Chiefs on the screen, and they got many of their best bookings through the Battalion Chiefs and others. Astute managers, when the district chief came to see them about some violation, would ask Maxwell and Simpson's open time and the violation would be forgotten. The Chief liked to see his picture on the screen.

Joe was a singer while Al Simpson ran the stereopticon. He was a fine projectionist and I think the first to dissolve his slides. Al used to work from the front of the first balcony, and he always wore full evening dress. When the team split Joe framed up an act with a quartet. I believe he is in the booking business now. Al went in for slides and made some of the outstanding hits of the day. He passed on some years ago.

Maxwell and Simpson got as high as $150 a week when they worked the big time, but they often had to fill in with dates where they worked much harder for less money.

George Diamond and Al Hoon were the first to use a motion picture to illustrate their star song. This was another fire song, "The Man With the Ladder and the Hose." After Diamond died I teamed up with Al Hoon, who was the machine operator or projectionist. I remember that our first engagement, to get the act running right, was at Erb's Casino, North Beach. I did two single turns in the afternoon, when the machine could not be used, and two in the evening with the film. We used all sorts of sound effects, and the song used to get three and four encores. The film was made up of bits of fire scenes, nicely assembled. I recall one effect we used was to get one of the girls in the show to scream "Save my child!" when the fireman rushed up the ladder.

Another old time favorite was Bennett and Rich. They were, I believe, the first team to go with a burlesque show, playing bits in the first part and afterpiece and closing the show in the olio that came in between. They went with Mortimer Thies' Wine, Woman and Song, the only burlesque show to run an entire season in New York, at the old Circle theatre, at Broadway and Sixtieth street. Mark Bennett was a fine robust baritone and no mean actor, playing Oscar Hammerstein in the afterpiece, in which all of the players impersonated well known stage favorites. Al Rich was a splendid dresser, and looked the performer "on and off." The last I heard of him he was managing one of Hurtig and Seamon's shows, while Mark was in business for himself.

Others I recall were McKenzie and Robbins, Jackson and Ingraham, Jolson and Moore. Falk and Lillian and Graham and Graham. Mrs. Graham ran the lantern for this act and always rushed to the stage to take her bow with her husband.

Henry and Gallot was another team. Harry Henry had a voice that would—and did—fill the old Madison Square Garden. He used to "plug" songs at the six day bicycle races. For seven years I ran the stage for Ted Marks' Sunday Concerts at the American theatre, and Henry and Gallot closed the show every Sunday night of those seven years. George is in the Post Office Department now and Henry is also a government official in one of those jobs indirectly created by Volstead.

No mention of illustrated singers would be complete without mention of the famous Ada Jones. She was known the world over through her phonograph records, for her voice recorded unusually well, and in those days it was not easy to get good sopranos for phonograph work. She was seldom heard far from New York on account of her phonograph engagements, and was one of the best liked stars at Huber's. They liked me pretty well down there, too. I played the longest consecutive engagement on record at this house, playing an entire year. I sang "straight" one week and with slides the next, alternating throughout the year. By this time they had two companies and I did only six shows a day. Many a time I have held Buster Keaton while Joe and Myra went on to do their turn.

About this time I was manager for a circuit of theatres in Connecticut that gave Sunday shows, in Meriden, Waterbury and other towns. We always gave five one reelers and an illustrated song act. We could be sure of a cleanup if we had Ada Jones. The owner was Bill Steiner.

For a time I was with another manager who used to tour Long Island. We gave six one reelers and three songs. The company consisted of the manager, (who owned the machine and films), the operator, a singer and a pianist. We came back to New York each night, for we all had regular daytime jobs, or we could not have worked for $5, and our suppers.

Originally the song publishers were glad to give their slides to reputable performers, but with the coming of the picture shows the demand for slides was too great and the returns were too small to warrant this course, so slide exchanges came into being. For two dollars a week you were provided with a set of slides which were changed three times a week. For a little more you could get a daily change, but only such houses as Keiths gave a daily change.

Of course the better artists, who played week stands and stuck to the same trio of songs were given slides, and if they were really important they were paid to use them. Maxwell and Simpson, for example, did three songs, singing one from each of three publishers, getting about $20 a week from each, which gave them an added income of $60 a week.

Just to give you an idea of the business

I might say that I went to Savannah with De Witt C. Wheeler to pose for the song "Neath the Shade of the Old Apple Tree." We got the girl from one of the concert halls down there, cleaned up the poses and hustled back. Just 4,000 sets of slides were made for this one song, so you can judge how many singers there must have been. Most of the sets served from 30 to 100 singers; sometimes more.

There were only two classes of illustrated songs in those days, the ballad and the march song. Some of the ballads were in waltz time, but they classed as ballads if they told a story—and they had to tell a story or they could not be illustrated. Later on comic songs were illustrated from sketches and cartoons, but they never classed with the posed pictures.

Some of the songs of those days were "Captain Baby Bunting," "When You Know You're Not Forgotten, By the Girl You Can't Forget," "Fly Away Birdie to Heaven," "The Little Lost Child," "Mandy Lee," "My Dad's the Engineer," "In the Baggage Coach Ahead," "A Bird in a Gilded Cage," "Break the News to Mother," "Just as the Sun Went Down," "On the Banks of the Wabash," "My Mother Was a Lady," "My Old New Hampshire Home," "When the Harvest Days Are Over." One of the standard hits was the slide set for "The Holy City" made by Jean A. LeRoy. Jean had it all over the others because "The Holy City" did not wear out, to be replaced by a newer hit.

And don't forget the trick finish with Lincoln, Washington and the American Flag. They were sure fires then, just as they are today, and many a poor singer took the bow that really was intended for the slides. They needed the applause more than Washington and Lincoln, so they took it.

The songs were a godsend to the small picture shows. They gave variety to the program and they cost only the slide rental, since there was a stereopticon on the old projectors and the pianist usually did the singing as part of his regular job. Of course the better houses had regular stage singers, but there were not very many "better" houses in those days.

But it was not the picture show that killed the Illustrated song. It was prohibition. The Illustrated singers and the saloon went out hand in hand. Perhaps one was needed to enable you to stand the other.

Nailing The "Duper"

By

Bert Adler

THE trade papers have reformed! Let The Moving Picture World record that, on the happy occasion of its 20th birthday. For years ago, when a film producer opened his trade paper, he found not far from his own release list an announcement by one "Mr. X" of Philadelphia, which repeated the producer's pet titles.

And worse! Mr. X was selling the producer's own pet films! This regardless of the fact that said Mr. X had never purchased these films from the producer. He had no title to them whatever. He had merely "duped" them. And then boldly offered them under the market price.

The history of "duping"—making a negative from a film positive and then turning out bootleg positives from this bootleg negative—antedated Mr. X in fact. It was indulged in by some of the leading American distributors of the early days, as a necessary drive in the fierce battle of 1905-7. When you questioned Mr. X as to the ethics of his practice, he quoted you some big names in the 1905-7 film world and said:

"If it wasn't wrong for them to do it, why is it wrong for me?"

I recall that when I worked for Mr. Than-houser many years ago, he got apoplexy at least once a week—when the trade paper arrived with Mr. X's announcement of films we were announcing for release in that very issue!

Now, it was impossible that Mr. X could have copies of those films as they had only been shipped to the exchanges, who certainly weren't giving them out to Mr. X. In point of fact, Mr. X did not have possession of our new films when he made his announcement, but he knew that an exhibitor friend had 'em booked and would "loan" him the prints.

In short, he knew he would be able to supply his duped copies by the time answers to his ad came in.

It was a sorry day for the King of Dupers when the trade papers stopped his announcements. But that was as far as the clean-up

Imported Stars

TO attempt the compilation of any complete list of the foreign artists and directors who have come to America in recent years to contribute their talents to internationalizing the screen, would require more space and time than can be allotted to this article. It may be said, however, that the list of foreign stars alone is most impressive, although many of them have not yet had full opportunity to adapt themselves to American production methods or to show just what appeal their transplanted capabilities may have for American audiences.

On the other hand the outstanding success enjoyed by some foreign artists indicates that their vogue will doubtless become even greater as time goes on. In the list practically all foreign lands are represented, with Germany and the Scandinavian countries predominating, though England, France, and Italy are all well represented as well as Central European countries.

Foremost in the list of those who now have foreign stellar artists under contract are Famous Players, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and Cecil B. De Mille's Metropolitan Studios, which releases through Producers Distributing Corporation.

Heading the list at F. P.-L. is, of course, Emil Jannings, greatest of foreign screen character actors. Pola Negri is another, and Erich Von Stroheim, who qualifies both as an actor and director, may be given third place in the list. Jannings is still working on his first American picture, originally titled "The Man Who Forgot God," but which will be re-named before release. Von Stroheim is editing "The Wedding March," which he directed and in which he also plays a prominent part, while Pola Negri's latest feature is "Hotel Imperial," one of Paramount's best pictures of the current season.

Other well-known stars and artists who have joined the F. P.-L. stock are Lil Dagover, famous German actress and a most recent importation; Greta Nissen, Arlette Marchal, Vera Voronina, Einar Hanson, Lida Manetti, Agostino Borgato, Charles Darras and others. Veterans like Sidney Bracy, a native of Australia, cannot properly be included in this list, although foreign born, having played on American screens for so many years that they are generally regarded as native products, nor Anglo-American actors like Norman Trevor, Percy Marmont and Clive Brook. They are American in all but birth.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's list of celebrities from across the seas is headed by Karl Dane, Renee Adoree, Greta Garbo, and Lars Hansen.

Ramon Novarro, whose greatest role is the Prince of Hur in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's screen masterpiece, "Ben-Hur," was born in Mexico. His entire screen career has been solely in American studios, so that, except for his foreign birth, he can hardly be called a "foreign" star.

Renee Adoree, who gained international fame as the feminine lead in "The Big Parade" and who, previously, had gained wide popularity on the screens of this country, is French by birth and origin.

Greta Garbo, who joined Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in 1925 when Louis B. Mayer met her in Berlin is a typical Scandinavian, blonde and statuesque. Her birthplace is Stockholm, and since coming to America she has given some amazingly fine performances in such pictures as Ibanez's "Torrent," "The Temptress," and "Flesh and the Devil," with John Gilbert, where she rose to her greatest heights.

Karl Dane, who won his first big screen success by his characterization of Slim in "The Big Parade," and since has had many notable parts, also is a Scandinavian. His native place is Copenhagen, Denmark, where he absorbed the atmosphere of the drama in his father's theatre from his earliest years. A list of the screen successes in which he has played to eminent parts would look like a page from the telephone book.

before coming with M.-G.-M. is Lars Hanson. Mauritz Stiller, the discoverer of Greta Garbo, also discovered Hanson and both came to this country about the same time. He has played in many M.-G.-M. successes, notably "Flesh and the Devil," "The Scarlet Letter," and "The Enemy."

With Cecil B. De Mille and the Metropolitan Studios are Lya de Putti, who first won the notice of American audiences by her wonderful work in "Variety," and who will make a picture for Universal before she starts work on her De Mille contract, Jetta Goudal, Theodore Kosloff, Victor Varconi, and Rudolph and Joseph Schildkraut. Players of foreign birth, but of largely American reputation, who properly may be included in this list are Marie Prevost (Sarnia, Ontario, Can.), May Robson (Australia), and H. B. Warner (London, Eng.).

Since coming to this country Lya de Putti has been featured in D. W. Griffith's "Sorrows of Satan," Herbert Brenon's "God Gave Me Twenty Cents," and Robert H. Kane's production, "The Prince of Tempters." She is a native of Hungary.

Jetta Goudal, who has played in many De Mille productions, is a native of Versailles, France. Her latest production for the De Mille organization is "White Gold," shortly

"Beloved Rogue," just released by United Artists, also is at work on a picture on the Universal lot, but as yet definite announcements have not been made about it.

Charles Puffy, the versatile plump comedian, who has appeared in many Universal comedies and will be starred in the new series by Octavus Roy Cohen, is a Hungarian.

Samuel Goldwyn's stars, Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky, of course, are respectively of English and Hungarian extraction, but both are now so thoroughly American as hardly to be classified as foreign. Certainly United Artists does not so regard them. Willy Fritsch, the German star under contract to United Artists, who played in "The Waltz Dream," is now due to arrive almost any day to play in Joseph M. Schenck's productions. He cannot be said however, to be transplanted as yet.

Other foreign stars, who may be mentioned, who are most popular with the American public are Monty Banks of Pathe and Lupino Lane of Educational Pictures, Inc., two comedians who are way out front when audiences get a vote. Monty Banks recognizes Italy as his native land while Lupino Lane comes from England.

Sigrid Holmquist, once called the "Swedish Mary Pickford" is another foreign star, very popular with the American public, who might be named. She is at present making some special color art pictures for Tiffany.

At present Fox Films has no foreign stars under contract. Jacques Lerner, eminent French actor, however, created the principal male role in "The Monkey Talks," with Madge Bellamy.

First National have but two foreign stars at present under contract, Marie Corda, German, and Natli Barr, Russian. Both are at work on their first American picture in Hollywood.

The foregoing list is by no means complete, due to the fact that many foreign artists of stellar rank are freelancing and not regularly identified with any special one of the leading companies. At the same time it is ample to show that Hollywood is fast becoming the international as well as the world center of the motion picture art.

to be released, which, it is said, will be a sensation.

Theodore Kosloff, who played Stephan, the mute blacksmith in "The Volga Boatman," is a Russian, born in Moscow. He has been associated with pictures for six years and has built up a big following. He has an important role in Cecil B. De Mille's "The King of Kings," which will have its world premiere next month.

Rudolph and Joseph Schildkraut, father and son, are too well-known to American audiences to need much mention. Both are truly international in their art, Rudolph having been born in Constantinople, Turkey, and Joseph in Vienna, and both have been seen in many De Mille features.

Victor Varconi, although of Italian extraction, is by birth a Hungarian. Perhaps the best work he has done since being under the De Mille banner is "For Wives Only," with Marie Prevost, and in support of Jetta Goudal in "Fighting Love."

Carl Laemmle is the next big producer to have many foreign stars and artists under contract, although few of them have yet had an opportunity to show their talents to American audiences via Universal.

Ivan Moskine, starred in "Michael Strogoff," produced by Louis Nalpas and the Societe des Cineromans of France, and released here by Universal, is now making his first American picture at Universal City. Conrad Veidt who made his American debut as King Louis XI in John Barrymore's "The Edouard Raquello, Owen Train and Paul Vassel, all hail from Germany, but although on Universal contract, have not yet been assigned to any important pictures as far as any announcement has yet been made.

President Laemmle recently terminated contracts with Andre Mattoni and Charles Moretti, who during six months at Universal City did nothing and with Prince Youcca Troubetzkoy, who in the same period appeared in one picture.

From the Universal viewpoint, at least, their experiences with foreign screen talent have to date been the reverse of satisfactory. This condition, however, cannot be said to exist to the same extent in other studios where foreign stars have in most cases made a distinct impression.

JUST as the spoken drama has from time to time brought forth plays that are immortal so has the film industry which has been in existence less years than the stage has centuries, produced "Pictures That Live." With both forms of entertainment the majority enjoy a more or less brief period of existence and then become memories or are hidden away in vaults. Only occasionally does there flash across the horizon a production that gets such a hold on the public that audiences clamor for it again and again.

Standing out conspicuously in this respect are "The Birth of a Nation," "The Miracle Man" and "Over the Hill." Each of these belongs definitely in the class of "pictures that live." Produced at different times, each has not only outlived its contemporaries but is still popular, and is brought back again and again for return engagements in houses where it has already enjoyed sensational success. In the short subject field, this is also true of many of the earlier Charlie Chaplin and some of the earlier Harold Lloyd comedies.

It is a notable fact in connection with these pictures that no one can pick out in advance a picture that will live. Even the shrewdest minds of the industry's best showmen cannot fathom whether a picture will or will not survive, the mass judgment of audiences themselves is the only criterion, the public the real and only judge, and only time can bring forth the real verdict.

The best that those in the picture business can hope to do is to strive to cater to the wants of the public and hope that the lightning of immortality will strike their product, but lightning seldom strikes twice in the same place, and with pictures built along the same lines, with the same ingredients, one will sometimes live while the other falls by the wayside.

In the sense that it cannot be foretold, conspicuous success is a hit and miss proposition, and immortality in the nature of an accident, but there must always be some definite reason, something that through the working of mass psychology causes a certain picture to get an extraordinary hold on the vast majority of patrons, for nothing in nature is haphazard. If anyone could put their finger definitely on this it would mean for him fame and riches. One thing we do know, that is, that for a picture to live it must be able to get down under the spectator's skin and tremendously stir one or more of the emotions. Above all, it must be human, real and true and strike a responsive chord in the public heart.

Wonderful production values, technical perfection, superbly realistic acting, all help; they are subordinate to the big emotional appeal. This may take a variety of forms. Take the pictures we have mentioned: "The Birth of a Nation" is a story of our own country torn by civil strife out of which was born a united people. "The Miracle Man" concerns the regeneration of a gang of crooks by the overwhelming goodness and beauty of character of the patriarch they sought to exploit. "Over the Hill" is a story of a mother's trials and tribulations and a loyal son's militant championship of her cause.

In the case of the Chaplin and Lloyd comedies, another factor enters to give them long life. As in the case of features, their appeal is emotional, for laughter is as much an emotion as tears, and repetition of their comedy situations have not dimmed their appeal. It is open to argument, however, as to whether they would still be enjoying the same popularity if these stars were still making two-reelers. In a sense it is a question of supply and demand, there is still a demand for two-reel Chaplin and Lloyd comedies but no new supply is forthcoming as both have long since left the two-reel field to make features.

A seemingly minor factor which looms large in the life of a picture, is the question of style in women's clothing. The most intensely dramatic scene cannot stand up in the face of the laugh that greets dresses that were the height of style only a few years ago.

Fashions create a condition where the screen is at a disadvantage as compared with the stage when it comes to the question of immortality for films, for once a picture is finished, it must stand or fall as it is: while every performance of a stage play is really a new production into which improvements and changes to keep it up to the latest standards can continually be made.

Another factor in the continuing life of a picture is the tremendous improvement in acting, technique, lighting, photography and all along the line. This brings us to another class of pictures, of which "The Spoilers" is an example, which have been re-made so as to bring them up to date. But in such cases it is not the picture itself but the story that has survived.

It would be unfair not to call attention to the fact that there have been produced within the last two or three years a number of pictures which seem likely candidates for niches in the Hall of Fame of screen immortality, but only the public can decide and sufficient time has not elapsed for them to render their judgment. One angle of this is the fact that, while it is not necessarily the case, most of the likely candidates are big productions which have been road-showed or put on for long runs thereby considerably lengthening the time before they reach the small exhibitor and the reaction of his audience can be ascertained.

What additions will the next few years make to the list of "Pictures That Live"? Will such pictures as "The Covered Wagon" or "The Big Parade" make the grade or will they be dark horses or pictures yet unmade? It is reasonably safe to assume that these pictures will live along with "What Price Glory," "Ben Hur" and "Old Ironsides."

It is not unlikely that the Beery and Hatton service pictures of Army and Navy life will enjoy revivals not because of their timeliness, but because they will appeal to those who wear the gold star button of overseas service.

It would be difficult to catalogue the good repeaters, but "The Old Nest" and "Male or Female" are frequently re-used, and it would be surprising if "The Ten Commandments" did not come back to the screen for revival, perhaps with a new modern story, since the Biblical section is epic.

But it is probable that not one person in a hundred within the business and not one in ten thousand of the lay public would be able to name the picture with the longest lease on life.

The Pathe production of the Passion Play is still current something like twenty years after the negative was made. It is still in demand through Lent and is given an occasional showing at other times. It never gets into the newspapers or trade press, but it is still making money.

IN 1907 the manufacturer, exhibitor and projectionist labored under great difficulties because of lack of interest in, and in many instances, opposition to the exhibition of motion pictures. Those of the pioneers who really did accomplish improvements are still individually connected with the business or the results of their efforts are manifested through the operations of the now established corporations representing an enormous business transacting in artistic and magnificent structures standing as monuments to the art.

The writer remembers that, in the early days, the motion picture was looked upon as a cheap form of amusement! The best early pictures were exhibited by Smith and Blackton, also in the Eden Musee, on West 23rd street, and a few vacant stores were thrown open to the public as motion picture theatres—these provided seating capacity for from 150-300 people. They were narrow, low-studded rooms, measuring about 100' to 150' long by 20' to 25' wide and probably from 10' to 15' high. Would-be reformers were early on the job offering objections to that form of entertainment for various reasons—especially because it attracted children—and soon restrictions were put upon these little playhouses by stringent rules introduced by various city departments, and the burden of expense became so great, due to restrictions placed upon the buildings and performances, that the small admission fee of 5c, and at the most 10c, was not sufficient with the small seating capacity to pay the expenses. Therefore, the "Nickelodeon," as it was called, struggled along without sufficient means of support. Some, however, managed to meet their expenses, some quit with losses, and others who had more confidence and general business experience continued under adverse conditions and eventually made a success of the "Nickelodeon" business. There were a number of the early pioneers—owners of several "Nickelodeons"—who are today at the head of the most magnificent theatre buildings the world has ever seen. Much credit is due to those who had the nerve and the foresight to stick to the ship during those days of oppression and troubles.

The writer entered the business in 1908, bringing out certain electrical current controlling and economizing devices specially made for motion picture theatres. Daily contact with exhibitors during these troublesome times presented opportunities for utilizing engineering skill and inventive genius in overcoming projection difficulties and in planning theatre arrangements, lighting effects, ventilation, and scenic effects. The business progressed with rapid strides but there was still enough time to devote to the planning of new arrangements, devices and so forth. As a result, in 1912 the General Theatrical Corporation of New York was formed with the following officers—J. H. Hallberg, president; Dudley McAdow, vice-president; Wm. E. Conway, treasurer; E. Y. Eltonhead, secretary and assistant treasurer—for the purpose of planning, building and operating several modern picture theatres. The efforts of this corporation were of material aid in the future development of the motion picture theatre, because plans and specifications for playhouses as modern and up-to-date as any in existence today were prepared and put before powerful financial interests, and in that manner brought to their attention the possibilities of the motion picture theatre as an investment on a large scale. Many difficulties were met because investors at that time had no vision of the future for the motion picture. There was one man who did decide financially to back the first theatre to be constructed—he was Mr. Hugo Reisinger, the well-known importer, art critic and philanthropist. The writer submitted to him the plans and specifications for two magnificent theatres, to be known as the New Majestic, to be located at the northwest corner of Broadway and 96th street, New York City, and the Apollo, to be located on the southeast corner of Broadway and 81st street, New York City.

The illustrations herewith will disclose the care and good judgment exercised in planning these structures from the viewpoint of the public, the managing director and the financier. Options were secured on these properties and, in one instance, the plans called for the erection of a theatre, as illustrated, upon a lot 100' x 220' at a cost of $250,000. The total yearly expenses were determined to be $122,760—with a seating capacity of 1,800 at the modest fee of 20c, filling the theatre only once and a half per day the income would have been $197,100—making a profit of $74,340 per year. The neighborhood was fairly well canvassed and it may interest the reader to know that among about 5,000 possible investors in enterprises of this kind nearly 50 per cent. of the returns were against the establishment of a motion picture theatre in the neighborhood. Others stated they would patronize it with pleasure and give it all the support they could, and a comparatively few said they would buy stock. Unfortunately, the financial backer—Mr. Reisinger—died shortly after and in consequence the proposed enterprise, which was really the first serious carefully engineered and planned attempt at building a chain of motion picture theatres fell through. The matter was then brought to the attention of some of the larger owners of theatres, but at the time the neighborhood was not considered a profitable one. We were told that after our ground options expired others profited by our experience and prior planning, and as a result there stands today one magnificent theatre on one of the plots and three theatres and one roof garden on the other plot—it is safe to say that these leases could not be bought today for three times our option price. It was a pleasure, however, to plan and further these wonderful propositions and with it came invaluable experience. Many new methods, building arrangements and scientific projection systems were devised and proposed—among these mention should be made of one particular plan which seems to possess great advantages from many points of view and will be spoken of later in this article, because it represents, in the opinion of the writer, the future for motion picture theatre construction.

Since 1912 many magnificent houses for the presentation of motion pictures have been constructed and no one today questions the earning capacity of any kind of a theatre exhibiting motion pictures, if it is located with reasonably good judgment and put under the control of an experienced manager.

To one who has followed the practical development of the motion picture theatre it seems, however, that too much attention and prominence are given to the building structure, the decorations and accessories to the motion picture and as a matter of fact the actual presentation of the picture has taken second or third place and not much improvement has been made in the projection of the picture.

When Mr. Marvin constructed the beautiful Regent Theatre on the southwest corner of 116th street and Seventh avenue, he embodied in the design of that theatre the fundamentals required for first-class projection. The writer recalls that this theatre was taken over, sometime in 1914 or 1915, by a corporation and put under the direction of the then rising director, S. L. Rothafel. In the Regent Theatre the decorations were modest, the stage was of ample size and depth, and the projection room was located back of the last orchestra seats in order to secure horizontal, central, 100 per cent. perfect projection.

It is seldom that one encounters such a well-planned projection arrangement as that at the Regent Theatre, evidently because the architect does not appreciate the importance of having horizontal projection, but there are a few owners who insist upon placing the projection room where it should be. After all, more than 80 per cent. of the value of the performance is vested in the picture—that should receive every attention to make it as perfect as can be. It is true that in the larger theatres the orchestra plays an important part, and so do certain scenic and lighting effects, but these should be sub-ordinated and not given the prominence they receive today.

The greatest care should be exercised in planning the mechanical arrangement of the interior of the auditorium, the proscenium and the stage, and above all the decorations and the color tone should have much more consideration than is normally given. It may be of interest to designers and architects to know that serious interference with projection of the picture follows the introduction of various artistic structures, color tones and decorations, caused by the fact that these divide the attention of the patrons which should be concentrated upon the picture. Furthermore, the reflected light from the auditorium and stage fittings will seriously increase the possible interference and, in some instances, apparent flicker of the picture by reflecting intermittent light radiated by the screen back upon it, in that manner decreasing the shadow and half-tone values of the picture. This is also true when diffused light in the auditorium is permitted to strike the screen.

The writer looks upon the motion picture as a work of art, transmitting intelligence and life just as a great painting or statue does—how wrong it is to surround an artistic object with a miscellaneous display of effects, all tending to take away from the impression desired! Habit in some places make it necessary, especially in the larger cities where there is a transient public, to super-impose the various effects by adding a voluminous orchestra, side-shows, etc., to the performance, and one theatre is now trying to out-do the other in this respect.

It would surely be a grand opportunity for someone to have the financial and moral backing of one of our large theatre circuits in introducing new and modernized theatre construction, projection, interior decorations, effects, and arrangements for the purpose of presenting in artistic and "restful" form the motion picture as it should be. There is so much in the motion picture as produced today, including special effects and climaxes, many of which cost thousands of dollars to secure and some of these are overlooked by a large majority of the audience because it is preoccupied with something else going on at the same time, and that does not seem to be either economically or physically correct.

TODAY

There is entirely too great a tendency today to follow the leader and to try to outdo him at his own game—that is where many go wrong. The leader knows when to stop, and to outdo him in any particular feature of his performance, and even to copy him may not be at all right for another audience and place. It is therefore imperative that great judgment and care must be given in planning, building and operating motion picture theatre—it is not practical to make a stereotyped plan adaptable to all localities and conditions.

Many years ago the writer planned a novel, convenient, economical and efficient motion picture theatre and believes that a few were built along the same lines. The general scheme, however, has not received the attention it deserves by those who should be most interested in it. The general arrangement is as illustrated herewith—in plan and elevation, and we find a remarkably perfect projection system and seating arrangement. As the patron enters the lobby he turns to the left or right, as desired. He passes through swinging doors into a small room from which he may ascend the stairway to enter the balcony, or through a second set of swinging doors into the auditorium, entering it at the lowest point. He immediately visualizes the entire audience, due to the fact that the light from the screen is reflected by every white face, and he can thus locate a vacant seat in any part of the house. There are four aisles, each about 4' wide, running lengthwise—one on each side and two through the centre. There are also four similar aisles running crosswise—the first in front of the stage, which is immediately on the right or left side of the patron upon entering, the second runs across the entire auditorium in front of the loge seats, the third behind the loge seats and the fourth back of the rear seats. The balcony, which may run straight across or in circular or horseshoe form, may be entered, after ascending the front stairways illustrated, on either side of the building, is also provided with four aisles running lengthwise and two crosswise.

For exit purposes there are also stairways in the rear of the balcony running down to a mezzanine floor upon which is located the usual rest rooms, and from there the stairways lead down to the main floor adjoining the rear and side aisles which connect with the usual exit doors, as required by law.

This article does not permit detailed explanation.

tion, but to one who understands the reading of a plan it is evident that many novel features are possible and the system is extremely economical in that it reduces the cubic contents of the theatre to the lowest possible practical amount, besides, it provides for practically horizontal 100 per cent. efficient projection.

In this instance the screen has been selected to be about 16' high by 23' wide and is in the rear of a stage 21½' deep by about 50' wide. For the construction of a theatre of this kind a lot not less than 100' wide x 150' deep should be selected and the clearance from the street or entrance level to the inside of the roof need not be more than 44' high if balcony is used, and without balcony maybe from 25' to 30' high.

The seating capacity is approximately as follows:

Ground Floor Front—630 low price seats on level floor.

In the Centre—78 comfortable loge chairs, on elevation, separate from all other seats, provided with independent cross aisle.

Ground Floor Rear—675 first-class seats on elevating incline.

Balcony—810 seats, on step-by-step elevation.

This makes a total seating capacity of 2,193, and every seat in the house, with the possible exception of the extreme ends of the first few rows on the ground floor allows a perfect view of the picture.

The projection being horizontal there will be less strain upon the eyes of the audience, especially in the front seats, which is so evident when the projection light strikes the screen at a tangent. The chief advantages of this plan are as follows:

Extreme capacity and perfect seating per cubic foot of building.

One hundred per cent. perfect projection, with present type equipment.

Maximum efficiency of reception by the audience.

The possibility of controlling three different price seats with only TWO attendants.

Ease of locating a vacant seat.

Prevention of cold draft from the back—so annoying to occupants of the otherwise satisfactory rear seats.

At least 25 per cent. saving on fuel for heating purposes.

Liberal head room for stage drops for ordinary tableaux and scenic effects, sometimes necessary for feature productions.

Liberal room for orchestra or organ, or both, as may be desired.

Exceptional opportunity for simple, artistic, and non-interfering decorations and possible methods for general illumination without distracting from or interfering with the picture.

Absence of all annoyance to the entering patron from the blinding effect of bright light reflected by the screen before the eye has become accustomed to it.

Plenty of space for storage of scenery and scenic effects above the stage, with offices and dressing rooms, if necessary, together with provision for a few stores, if desirable, on each side of the entrance and special side exits through the front of the building to enhance the economic value of the proposition.

The foregoing, with standard equipment and general management as practised today, would constitute a most modern present-time motion picture theatre enterprise.

TWENTY YEARS HENCE

In this age of rapidly advancing strides of science it is difficult to postulate what may happen within the next twenty years, but the writer offers a few suggestions which may briefly be stated as follows:

The talking and singing motion picture will become a more general feature factor where specific individuals, such as prominent political and other speakers, as well as prominent actors and opera stars, are concerned, but it is doubtful if any value will be added to the ordinary run of picture productions by adding voice to the performance. As a matter of fact the phenomenal success of the motion picture has been due in a large measure to its neutrality as far as language and color, outside of simple titles and tints, are concerned, excepting where scenic or certain spectacular productions are involved. It does not at all follow that the super-imposing of voice upon a picture will improve it—on the other hand the voice may annoy the audience and detract from the pantomime acting. Furthermore, it would limit the usefulness of many otherwise agreeable personalities featured by the picture considered valuable assets by both the producers of film and the public. In fact the general adoption of "voice" may seriously handicap production. In any case, much simpler and less expensive translating devices for general use in motion picture theatres must be invented, developed and employed before the talking picture can be economically operated in the average theatre even as a feature.

The orchestra, excepting in comparatively few large city theatres, will be a thing of the past. In its place there will remain perhaps the organ together with new orthophonic electrically amplified musical devices operated by means of the conventional phonographic or, more probably, by magnetic records.

It is quite probable that musical scores for feature films will be supplied, especially for thickly populated communities, through a central station where a master transmitter will send out the modulated energy through wireless, wired-wireless, or straight-wire systems in which instance the projectionist will cause the picture to follow the musical score and effects by manipulation of the speed control of the projector.

There seems to be no obstacle in the way of recording the various octaves composing the orchestra accompanying a feature picture upon separate master mediums and then sending out copies of the master mediums, or records, in as many octaves as desired with the film service, so that those theatres equipped with the proper series of translating devices, which may be for only one general group of octaves in the small theatres or for several independent octaves in the more important theatres, permitting perfect reproduction of the original score through amplifying devices and so-called "loud speakers." A system of this sort is a formidable competitor to the average orchestra and will become a great economic factor.

The motion picture projector with intermittent movement is a beautifully functioning mechanism, but it is hard on the film and is subject to considerable wear and requires skilful manipulation and care. We now have quite practical projectors under construction and development in which the film runs continuously and a comparatively simple optical system does all equalizing of the moving film image to the stationary view upon the screen without any strain on the film or projection apparatus, preventing wear and film breakage with consequent danger from film fire, besides considerably reducing the cost of maintenance.

Scientific optics will play a much greater part in the design, construction and operation of motion picture theatres than is now the case. The projection efficiency in relation to the average eye is even today extremely low and this must be changed by proper selection of the illuminating system, improved optical systems, judicious co-ordination of all reflecting surfaces, seating arrangements and, last but not least, interior design, ornamentations and the color scheme.

Broadcasting forms no part of the theatre program, but is a splendid publicity medium.

There is much to be done along the above lines even today and as soon as the producer and theatre owner gives serious consideration to these suggestions and puts them into effect they will meet abundant and thankful response by the audience, and millions of dollars now wasted on unnecessary and harmful construction, decorations, apparatus, current and accessories will be saved to the industry.

Confessions of a Movie Publicist

(Editorial Note: The author of this is a leading independent publicity man, who has asked that his name be withheld so that he can write freely about the changes in the industry with which this article deals.)

1920. "Hello, Smith, how soon can you get over to the X. Y. Z. projection rooms? I've got a REAL picture for you to handle. I want the campaign to start right away. Coming right over? Great!"

Or—

"Smith, this is Jones of Metamount. A picture has just arrived from the coast that looks like a special. Anyway, we want a special campaign and we want it quick. Come over at two o'clock and bring your ideas along."

There was enough of it in 1920 to support an "organization"—that is to say, the boss (me), stenographer, publicity writer (girl) and sometimes a field exploitation man (now one of the best known exhibitors in the Middle West). The average weekly overhead was, including the rent, phones, wires and incidentals, three hundred and fifty dollars. This was, exclusive of my own drawing account, around two hundred dollars. We could meet all this and have a nice surplus from office earnings at the end of the year.

We also had a few permanent accounts, such as directors and stars, whom we gave publicity representation. We stood aces with the trade papers, for instance, because we made our clients go into trade advertising, and a picture that "looked like a special" always meant special and extra advertising in the trade press. Business was easy to get, too, because it seemed to be a Day of Ideas and if you had them you were merely asked to "bring them along."

You gave service, in short, and you got the business, all you could handle. At times, even a little more.

1927. The "office" is now a small room in someone else's suite and the "organization" has also thinned out. The sole remnant, the steno, is on part-time purely; the major part of her time goes to other occupants of the suite. It doesn't pay her to devote more than an hour a day to the independent publicity man. Gone the directors and stars—whose contracts with the large companies forbid independent publicity representation. Gone the independent producers who had "a REAL picture for you to handle." Gone the organization advertising managers who wanted a special campaign on that big one from the Coast.

And so, writing sorrowfully, what does the independent publicity man see? Stereotyped publicity campaigns on too many pictures, lack of the big punch stunts of other days. Stereotyped product in many cases, the loss of individualism felt here, too. In trade advertising many firms seem to put their all into their inserts, and "drop dead" the rest of the year. Star publicity of a sameness—the angle being that if one star gets a "better break" the rest will kick, meaning trouble for the studio publicity head.

And you can't blame the studio publicity head if he shies at trouble.

Nor the "independent exhibitor" who got tired of waiting for "REAL pictures" from independent producers—they didn't come fast enough—and sold his theatre to one of the dominating firms, who shied from independent product for the same reason that the independent exhibitor did.

It is said that the large companies now dominating the business have deliberately frozen out the independent producer, because they would rather have the production cream one hundred per cent themselves.

But the new, large-capacity theatres had to have the protection of consistent product. I don't say they are getting it, but at least their chances are better under the new order than in the old, risky, "wide-open-booking" days.

Big Company Domination As Viewed by One Who Has Suffered From It—"The Good Old Days" Contrasted With the New

I say that the punch stunts are missing from present-day exploitation, but there is a reason here, too. Exploitation staff men attached to big companies fear to "pull" a trick that might get publicity but at the same time have reactionary effects. In the year 1920 almost any stunt went. We did not camp in a particular territory as does the staff exploitation man of today, and the sky was often the limit—we didn't expect to see that city again. Anyway, weren't we opening OUR client's picture in that key, and who was paying us, anyway?

Many "wild" stunts by irresponsible free-lance publicity men from New York soured lots of live-wire exhibitors on exploitation, except of the mildest sort, and that is why the individualism has gone out of exploitation. The staff men of today, with all their lack of creative method, fit right into the exploitation scheme of today; the Go-Getter type of 1920 wouldn't be welcome, and you can't blame the exhibitor who has been harmed by him, instead of helped.

In fact, if "the good old days" were so good, how is it that two or three pictures will now run a whole season on Broadway (without blowing the town up to advertise 'em!) while 1920 didn't show two that could run ten weeks?

It's been tough on the independent producer tougher on ME—but the elimination process has honestly made for Progress!

Chain Theatres

CHAIN theatres are by no means the recent development of the business they seem to be to newcomers. In the last year or two unusual emphasis has been given to their formation and development but they date back to the rough development of the store show, and the first important chain was established by B. F. Keith and F. F. Proctor around 1906.

Proctor at that time had three theatres in New York, one in Newark and one in Albany. Keith had houses in Boston, Providence, New York and Philadelphia and, through E. F. Albee one in Pawtucket, R. I.

One of the Proctor houses was the Fifth Avenue theatre, which, as most New Yorkers know, was not on Fifth Avenue at all, but at Broadway and 28th street. The property was owned by the Gilsey Estate.

Keith purchased the house shortly before the lease expired and this threatened to evict Proctor, but a working agreement was reached and the Keith-Proctor Circuit formed, chiefly for the development of the picture theatres, which presently dotted New England and New York and Pennsylvania. These were generally named the Bijou-Dream, the first having been developed in the Keith Bijou theatre, Boston, which Mr. Keith retained for sentimental reasons after the building of the new theatre, the first of the palatial structures now bearing the Keith-Albee name.

At about the same time Sigmund Lubin, a picture producer in Philadelphia, built a number of houses including what probably was the first really elaborate structure intended for picture exhibition. In addition he erected a number of "tin fronts" along Market street in Philadelphia, and for a time conducted theatres in other cities.

In 1909 Lubin sold his houses, declaring that the peak of exhibition prosperity had passed. Undoubtedly his action was a material aid in really developing the picture theatre, for Lubin was never a showman and his houses were conducted in accordance with the general slovenly practice of that day.

He sold out to Felix Isman, a real estate man with a fondness for theatricals, and he, in turn, passed them along to Stanley Mastbaum, and to Stanley Mastbaum probably more than to any other one man is due the credit for the vision to develop the purely picture palace.

Eventually Keith and Proctor had dissolved partnership. Keith through his general manager, E. F. Albee, gave most thought to the "big time" vaudeville, but Proctor, who with H. H. Jacobs, as Jacobs and Proctor had brought into being the "ten-twenty-third," saw more of a future for pictures with or without a small vaudeville program.

The "ten-twenty-third" or "10-20-30" idea, it might be explained, was a development of the eighties. All gallery seats were ten cents, the balcony was twenty and the bulk of the orchestra thirty cents, a few front rows being held at fifty cents. The attractions were the traveling road shows, and the houses dotted the eastern country, the idea being adopted by other managements. The cheap drama houses were given a jolt by the development of the continuous performance vaudeville idea, and finally killed by the growth of the picture houses.

Sylvester Z. Poli, of New Haven, was another to realize the trend of public preference. He had been developing a chain of vaudeville houses through Connecticut, and some of these were turned over to pictures, while others were added.

Up in Utica, N. Y., two young men had an upstairs house of limited capacity. Originally stage players, Sidney Wilmer and Walter Vincent had gone into vaudeville following the demand for dramatic sketches, and from acting to management had been an easy step. Today they go as far south as Virginia.

Other operators found that there was an advantage in being able to offer bookings in the block, and circuits sprang up all over the country.

Around San Francisco there came the Kelrleins and Turner and Dehnken, further north, in Oregon and Washington, Jensen and von Herberg established a chain, and maintained cordial relations with the Moore Circuit in Washington.

Swanson and Nolan had houses in Colorado, the Saengers pre-empted the Louisiana territory and the Hulseys put the Indian sign on Texas. In the southeast Lynch had the Southern Enterprises, part of which had been the earlier Montgomery string in Jacksonville.

A. H. Blank was prominent in Iowa and Finkelstein and Ruben regarded Wisconsin as their property, though Saxe shared the territory. Several circuits were in Chicago, including Balaban and Katz.

A little further East W. S. Butterfield reigned more or less supreme in Michigan with M. S. Commerford in Pennsylvania, the Schines in Eastern New York and Black in the New England territory, later to be succeeded by William Gray.

Most of these were by no means one-man enterprises, for often the houses were locally owned and many circuits were more or less in allegiance with some production company, generally on rather advantageous terms.

This might be expressed in the words of an official of one of the companies who outlined the connection with "If we make money we share it. If we lose—pays. Anyhow our exchange gets a percentage of the bookings, so we are sure to make some money."

William Fox had the only circuit of houses as an adjunct to a releasing company. Marcus Loew, who had a still larger chain, did not officially become connected with the production end until he found it necessary to acquire Metro to ensure a supply of pictures.

Gradually the booking situation tensed. If a manager or a group of men virtually controlled a certain territory, they could make or break a producing company's chances in that territory, and the producer could meet their ideas as to rental or content himself with the second and later run business which very naturally could not pay the highest rentals.

Sales managers began to worry about closed key cities and to make threats of building reprisal in those sections where their relations with the chain were not amicable.

And here is where the original weakness of the chain system became apparent. No chain could afford to fight too much. Each had its vulnerable spots. Collectively the circuit might be prosperous, but individually there were some houses being carried along by the chain. A few well planted houses might so weaken the entire circuit that loss would result. A machine gun can mow down a regiment in close formation where it would waste lead on the same number of men scattered over a few square miles of territory. The only thing to be done was to make the best possible terms.

Prove Again That There's Nothing New Under the Sun

This is not to be accepted as saying that the chain houses are now all under producer control, but there is room for reasonable doubt in most instances and no room whatever in others.

Naturally the inter-chain was the inevitable result. With a production company in virtual control of a certain territory, it could shut out the other producers. Some efforts were made, in isolated instances, to do this, but the same threat that was useful against the individual owned chains now became equally effective when made by one releasing concern to another. "Split or I'll build" sounded just as menacing to the producer owner as it did to the individual owner. "Working agreements" were developed according to the strength of the releaser, and this, in its turn brought on the mergers of the smaller companies that they might offer the united resources as an argument.

Just where it will end is still an interesting problem.

There are many advantages in the chain system—to the chain owner. Not only can better booking terms be arranged, but the booking itself becomes simplified. Production purchase of supplies, production purchase of accessories, production handling of staffs, all make for economy of operation.

On the other hand there is danger that eventually the standardization of systems will become so intensively developed that personality, the most valuable asset of any theatre, whether it seat 300 or 6000 will be lost. Standard systems of management will be developed only at the cost of general efficiency since each theatre will present individual angles to any given problem, and long letters of instruction, fervent pleas to cut costs, mandatory requests to increase receipts inevitably will take the heart out of the ambitious resident managers and render them mere automatons, performing the mechanical duties of management in a purely mechanical way.

That is when the condition will arrive that will make for so massive a loss that the chain system will break of its own weight. A chain of twenty-five to fifty houses conceivably can be conducted by a single directing head, but a chain of 500 or 1,000, even with district managers and conferences, will be something else again. Eventually many of the chains will sag of their own weight, and a poor production season for the owner-producer; and poor seasons do come, will break the chain. Then the personality era will return, provided that too many of the really live wires who will not become "janitors" have not drifted so far from the picture business that it is impossible to recall them to aid in the upbuilding of what has so senselessly thrown down.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers

F. H. Richardson

IN June, 1916, Mr. C. Francis Jenkins, one of the pioneers in the inventive field of the motion picture industry, called a meeting at the Raleigh Hotel, Washington, D. C., for the purpose of considering the possibilities for forming an engineering body, the purpose of which would be to attempt to bring order out of the pretty thorough chaos of non-standardization then prevalent in all sections of the industry.

The meeting had, as its final result, the formation of that now highly important body, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which has moved steadily forward and upward since that time, until it now boasts an international membership, and commands the respect not only of the industry itself, but of other scientific bodies as well.

The Society holds two meetings each year, one in the spring; the other in the fall.

Every branch of the industry is represented in the membership, and every manufacturer of supplies used in or by the industry lends active support. Active membership is confined to men not less than twenty-five years of age, who are engineers by profession, within the accepted meaning of that term, or who have been professionally connected with the motion picture industry for a period of not less than three years, and who shall have taken responsibility for the design, installation or operation of systems or apparatus pertaining to the motion picture industry, or persons who have fully qualified in other well defined ways. Active membership is closely guarded.

Associate membership, however, is available to any person not less than twenty-one years of age who is interested in, or connected with the study of motion picture technical problems, or the application of them. Associate Members have all rights and privileges enjoyed by the active members, except that they have no voice or vote in the official conduct of the Society's affairs.

In this connection be it remarked that theatre managers and motion picture projectionists of good character and standing are eligible to associate membership, and quite a number of both are enrolled. Associate membership costs thirty dollars for the first year, but only ten dollars per year thereafter. Twenty-five of the thirty dollars is the enrollment fee.

At the semi-annual meetings carefully prepared papers, the product of the brains of the best men in the engineering field of the industry, are read and freely discussed. Both the papers and discussion are thereafter made available to the industry in printed form through published "Transactions" sent free of cost to all members, both active and associate. These proceedings are sold to others at a price barely sufficient to cover the cost of their production.

Not only is this feature of enormous value, but an even greater, though not so generally visible measure of usefulness lies in the bringing together into personal contact twice each year of the men engaged in seeking to make improvement, or to solve problems in different sections of the industry.

The studio man thus obtains first hand information concerning the problems of other sections which may, in the final analysis, interlock with his own. The various engineers become personally acquainted with each other, as well as with the problems each seeks to solve, and thus the industry as a whole is vastly benefited.

The men of science meet the men who have to deal with actual practice, and learn that even science must perhaps walk around a stone wall of faulty practice which cannot be immediately made right. The practical man, on the other hand, learns to appreciate the men of science, and how science may be linked with practice to the enormous benefit of all concerned.

Then, too, before the formation of the Society there really was no such thing as a standard. Each manufacturer followed his own bent, and his own individual ideas as to what was best, often setting up a "standard" of his own merely with the idea of giving "individuality" to his own product, to the vast inconvenience of users. There were at least half a dozen varieties of sprocket hole shapes, and at least that many different dimensions, and the projector manufacturer, whose projector must handle the entire product, got blamed because the projector could not, in the very nature of things, do it with any large degree of success. Sprocket holes are merely selected as a convenient example for illustration. Nearly everything was in much the same case.

Nomenclature was confusion worse confounded. Taking the room from which pictures are projected, for example. It was variously dubbed the "Coop," the "Booth," the "Operating Box," the "Projection Room," or whatever name the fancy of men in different sections suggested.

Much of this absurd practice has been corrected, or is in the sometimes rather slow process of correction. The Society has, only after careful investigation and consideration, set up many standards which the industry either already has or is in process of adopting. It also went carefully over the nomenclature hodge podge and, after due consideration, officially adopted the names or title which seemed, all things considered, to be most fitting and appropriate. The confusion has thus already been very appreciably reduced, and will be entirely eliminated when the industry shall have finally accepted and absorbed into its practice all the various changes proposed.

But the good work nevertheless goes steadily forward. Already great good has been accomplished along many lines. Within the past two years the importance of the work of the Society has been more generally recognized than it was through all the preceding years of its existence.

In financial matters the Society is entirely self-supporting. It is moving steadily forward and is now one of the most, if not indeed the most important single body in the entire motion picture field.

Some of the more prominent names on the membership roll are C. Francis Jenkins, founder of the society; Williard B. Cook, President; L. C. Foster, Secretary; L. A. Jones, Past President; H. A. Campe, Past President; H. P. Gage, Vice-President; W. C. Hubbard, Treasurer; Raymond S. Peck, Director Canadian Governmental motion picture activities; J. C. Kroesen, Edison Lamp Works of the General Electric; Preston R. Bassett, Sperry Gyroscope Company; George A. Blair, Dr. C. E. K. Mees, L. A. Jones and John G. Jones, all of Eastman Kodak Company; H. A. Campe, Westinghouse Electric Company; Carl E. Egeler, National Lamp Works of the General Electric; Henry Phelps Gage, Corning Glass Works; John H. Hertner, Hertner Electric Company; Bernays M. Johnson, Westinghouse Lamp Works; Wm. V. D. Kelley, of Prizma fame; J. C. Kroesen, Edison Lamp Works of the General Electric Company; Wm. Kunzmann, National Carbon Company; W. R. Making Movies For Women

By Beth Brown

ENTERTAINMENT was conceived up in the Garden of Eden. Eve gave the first show the day she slipped into a fig leaf.

Adam, the audience, enjoyed himself so much, that he decided to go into the show business. From then on, shows were made by men for men—the Egyptian festivals, the Greek marathons, the Spanish bull-fights—all of them man-made entertainment for men.

And, when a new entertainment developed—the motion picture—it was still man-made entertainment for men. Justly so, because at first, the audiences, in the majority, were men.

Where were the women?

In the kitchen with the dishes, in the parlor with the broom, in the nursery with the children.

Then along came science bringing the electric dishwasher and the vacuum cleaner—and leisure.

And women straightaway took their leisure to the movie theatre.

That's how it happened that audiences reversed. Now we find that 83 per cent. of motion picture patrons are women. But they are still being served the man-made entertainment!

I don't argue that men can't make entertainment for women.

Men make fashions for women—and successfully—but they never forget that they're making them for women. Chefs invent pastries, and merchants operate department stores, knowing that their success depends upon their appeal to women.

But, with the motion picture, I've been surprised to notice that the preferences of the 83 per cent. are often overlooked.

Women's main interest lies in clothes, children and romance.

Man's main interest is in achievement, athletics and war. When you feed that as a steady diet, you're pleasing 17 per cent. of your audience—what about the 83 per cent.

Women prefer stories of young romance and high society, an opportunity to see the homes of the rich, the clothes of the rich, and the manners of the rich. They like photoplays with a pictorial outdoor tone to rest them from their own intense indoor existence.

Even with short subjects, their preferences are marked. Slapstick comedy with man-made laughs, and broad masculine humor seldom please the woman patron.

The reason that Our Gang comedies are such a great success is because here is humor that is gentle and that the feminine heart can interpret and enjoy.

The news reel is another instance of man-made entertainment—for men.

Cameramen naturally shoot what will interest men, forgetting that they are shooting for one man and four women. So we have parades and medal pinnings, train wrecks, aeroplane stunts, fires, machinery, professional athletics—with only an occasional baby show, fashion show and the like.

Assuming that the news reel is the movie newspaper, it ought at least to have an adequate woman's section for the women readers.

Women notice detail more readily than men, especially details of costume, homefurnishing, etiquette and love-making. They notice high-heeled slippers of satin on the kitchen slavey, the property man's "dish of dough" that resembles a mess of Portland cement, changes of costume when the story sequence does not permit time for a change, unbecoming hair arrangement of the stars—detail, detail, detail.

A college athletic coach was hired to supervise the accuracy of football details in a college photoplay—surely not to please the 83 per cent.

If woman's keen eye from the audience can scan the screen so critically, why not have a woman's keen eye at the studio supervise the details that women audiences notice?

This might have prevented the catastrophe that occurred to a certain star who had a favorite $10,000 coat which she wore in four successive productions. The men on the lot failed to notice it, but women in audiences did. They kicked so hard they stirred up the dust clear across the country. A law-suit followed. The star climbed down from her pedestal and is still sitting on the bottom rung.

Consider titling. Even titles aren't always written to entertain women or for women to even understand.

The man who thinks he knows all about women is a fool. Women themselves can only approximate what other women would say. Yet we find man-made titles such as the following written for the enlightenment of women audiences:

"Next to go—mighty American dreadnaughts to reinforce the British fleets mobilized to keep the North Sea open for Commerce essential to the Allies. . ."

The way a woman rewrote that title was:

"The first of the rough riders in that race to war. . ."

And women in the audience understood.

A man wrote this title:

"Give me that royal diamond Romanoffsky necklace!"

And the woman changed it to read "pearl necklace" because she knew that women audiences would notice that actually the jewels were pearls—and not diamonds!

When I give a certain twist to a scenario, when I add a seemingly trivial scene to a script, when I cut and re-arrange and re-edit a film, when I prepare a set of titles giving an entirely new slant to a photoplay—man eyes at the studios stare at me with doubt and wonder. Sometimes in the dark of the projection room, a man whisper rises up to question my methods and motives. But staunch defenders—men for whom I have worked—down the whisper with the hoarse retort:

"Remember the 83 per cent.! We're making the movies for the women!"

Then, even though they are man-made movies—they succeed because they are being made—for women!

Pictures Aren't Bought—They're Sold

By
Sidney R. Kent

WHAT the methods of distribution of motion pictures were twenty years ago I do not know, for I was not then in the picture business; but even in the last ten years the changes in the marketing of pictures have been many and radical.

In any review of the distribution of pictures over the last few years one must be struck with one very great and fundamental change. That is the change in the type of manpower. Today the distribution of pictures is on a much higher plane than it was years ago, chiefly because distribution is handled by men who have a different viewpoint toward the business.

Motion pictures are no longer a "game." The men who today are handling the selling of pictures do not look upon the business as something they can jump into to make a quick clean-up and then leave to take up some other get-rich-quick game. They realize that the selling of pictures is a vast important business in which they can carve out a great career for themselves. They are today uniformly serious-minded men who are putting into the selling of pictures every ounce of their brain and physical force, because it is upon proper distribution that the success of the studios rests, and from the studios comes the lifeblood of the business—pictures.

I think also that the selling of pictures today is marked by a better understanding between exhibitors and salesmen. The salesman realizes that the exhibitor who does not make a decent profit from his theatre is an unhealthy account; the exhibitor more and more is coming to an appreciation that if he is to hold his public with good pictures he must give the distributor a price which will not only insure him an adequate return on his productions but will also encourage the studios to greater efforts. In other words, the selling—and the buying—of motion pictures is today a business, not the cat-and-dog fight of a few years ago.

Naturally there are differences between the seller and the buyer. This is right and as it should be. I hope the day will never come when there will be no difference in opinion between the salesmen and buyers of motion pictures, because if and when that day comes then this business will be in a condition that presages disaster.

But after all is said and done on this subject we come right back to two things—pictures and manpower. Without good pictures the best distribution machine in the world will not make its quota; and without manpower the best pictures in the world will not get proper distribution, because pictures are not bought, they are sold.

Talking Pictures

By John A. King

EFFORTS to combine sound with pictures, or step-photography, takes us back beyond 1862, when the photography of sound vibrations due to the voice, or music, engaged the attention of many experimenters, among them being Czermak, in 1862; Blake, 1878, and Hermann. The first named secured photographs of the vocal chords in action.

Professor Blake, of Brown University, used a small mirror, which was caused to move by the vibrations of a telephone diaphragm. A beam of light was thrown on the mirror, and the movements of the latter was impinged on a photographic plate, kept in regular motion by clock-work mechanism.

Professor Hermann, a scientist, at an International Congress of Physiology, at Liege, Belgium, demonstrated the possibility of using a microphone in connection with a phonograph. The sound to be recorded entered the phonograph; the cylinder record was afterwards revolved slowly before a microphone furnished with a small mirror. A beam of light was thrown on the mirror, which vibrated in accordance with the sound given out by the record. This reflected the beam through a slit upon a revolving cylinder covered with sensitized paper.

Insofar as the foregoing experimenters had devious ways of approaching the problem, perhaps that of Hermann is of the greatest interest because of the fact that nearly fifty years later an oscillating mirror today remains one of the elements used in a method to produce voice recording on a sensitized material; in this latter case the material is a sensitized celluloid film. Hermann used a sensitized paper.

Demeny, in 1892, in Paris, France, successfully combined the voice and pictures in the "Chronophotophone." This device became a commercial possibility and for a number of years was in constant use. The same method is used today, with added refinements. Demeny, it will be recalled, was a member of the Marey Institute in Paris and was associated with Dr. Marey in many of the latter's early experiments. The leading scientists of Europe were associate members of the Marey Institute, one of the leading institutions of its kind in the world.

Demeny in his "chronophotophone" used a series of lantern slides for projecting the pictures on the screen, combined with a lantern and coupled the same with a disc phonograph record and mechanism, thus producing the first "talking pictures."

Several years later, in 1894, Thomas A. Edison announced his combination of the phonograph and the "peep-box" Kinetoscope, and called the combination the "Kinetophone." The Kinetoscope used short picture subjects in motion, and were viewed through an eye-piece. The sound effect was obtained by means of records, not synchronized with the picture. The listener used ear tubes. Although in use for some time, it is evident that this method did not meet with public approval.

Many years afterwards Edison used another method intended to achieve the same result. This device required a phonograph on the stage, with the projector in the booth, coupled with a wire drive belt. Although shown in the theatre for a few weeks, the idea was not permanent.

Very little progress was made until 1904, when Whitman, of New York City, produced the Cameraphone. This was, indeed, an ambitious effort to produce talking pictures, when we consider the means used to obtain the results. The film, in combination with a phonograph disc record, were synchronized. Short playlets (acts) were photographed and master records of the voice and music, taken at the time the picture was made, produced the harmonious effect. The Cameraphone was in use in many motion picture theatres over a period of many years, and in its day gave widespread satisfaction. Many exhibitors regretted the Cameraphone passing out. The end was due to business troubles, and other incidents of business.

Gaumont's "Chronophone," coincident with the Cameraphone, had a wide vogue in Europe, but not in the United States. The device used the same means as the Cameraphone: disc records, spring operated motor and short projected films.

The next ambitious effort was the appearance of the "Deutsches Vitascope," in 1905. Despite its excellence, this device, did not achieve commercial success in the United States. Poor business management is said to have been responsible for the failure of the "Deutsches Vitascope."

We now come to 1906. In that year, in England, the patent office in London received an application, filed August 11, by Eugene Augustine Lauste, an electrical engineer, for "a new or improved method of, and means for, simultaneously recording and reproducing movements and sound." This patent was granted August 10, 1907.

Lauste demonstrated his method in London, photographing the voice and music, recording the same on a sensitized negative film, on which also was photographed the scene in action. Lauste was the first to employ the selenium cell successfully in this art. Twenty or more patents were issued by almost as many countries, and a number of applications awaited action up to as late as 1914. Many patents have been issued since.

Lauste, one of the most indefatigable of inventors, with motion picture projectors, perforators, printers, etc., to his credit, is still active at 70 years of age. He was born in Montmartre, Paris, and is now residing in the United States. It is recorded of this inventor, that at the age of ten years he discovered a method of projecting toy pictures on a paper band, on the wall.

In 1867, young Lauste obtained some strips of printed paper out of a Zoetrope, which he made transparent by oiling, and pulling them through his toy magic lantern before the condenser in a series of jerks, covering the lens momentarily with his moving fingers during each movement phase, the result on the screen being sufficient to demonstrate that the illusion of motion in a projected picture was within the bounds of possibility. This simple experiment led the boy to later studies, which, in after years, brought him to "talking pictures," and to him was issued the master patent.

Referring to September 22, 1880, while on the subject of Mr. Lauste's invention, we find that a description of some experiments by Alexander Graham Bell, of telephone fame, on the transmission of sound by light beams, impressed itself on young Lauste. This same light beam is the basic element of recording the sound wave on a sensitized film.

In 1902 or 1903, there appeared in the London music halls an electrical novelty under the title, the "Singing Arc Light." In this device, the beam of light from the arc lamp was used to carry the voice. This device was offered for sale by catalogue and press matter but evidently did not progress financially or theatrically. The "Singing Arc Light" also was shown in New York City, in a store at Broadway and Thirty-ninth street, when it was offered to restaurants and dining halls as a special attraction. It did not meet with success.

About this time scientific journals and the press published accounts of the "Musical Magnetic Wire," a laboratory experiment, in which the voice was magnetically impinged upon a steel wire, and by suitable apparatus the voice was reproduced. This is set down here as a record of the means of retaining the voice, or sound, on material electrically, or magnetically.

Some years elapsed, and not much progress was made on talking pictures, although a number of patents issued. But none seem to have been commercialized.

In 1921, a disclosure was made by M. Sven Bergland of Stockholm of talking pictures. In August, 1922, the press and scientific journals had accounts of Valdemar Povelsen of Denmark and his experiments with talking pictures. Evidently the work of Bergland and Povelsen remains today in the experimental stage.

In June, 1923, it was announced that Dr. Lee DeForest had made talking movies an accomplished fact with his "Phonofilm," shown in many theatres. This process will appear in part to parallel the method of Lauste, of 1906-1912-1913, whereby, with the use of a selenium cell to imprint the voice light ray upon the sensitive photographic film, DeForest used the same means to make the sound record as Lauste, but differed in the method of reproduction. DeForest uses radio tubes for amplification of the light ray that electrically reproduces the light variations of the photographed voice, and, in addition loud speakers, to convey the voice and music in time with the picture projected on the screen.

Now comes another investigator and inventor, F. V. Madelar, of New York, with another original idea and method. He photographs the picture on the emulsion side of the film in the usual manner, but upon the unsensitized, or plain, side of the celluloid film strip, by the use of a diamond stylus, he engraves the voice in the form of a wave-line record, similar to the recording of the voice upon a disc record.

PROVISIONAL SPECIFICATION

A New or Improved Method of and Means for Simultaneously Recording and Reproducing Movements and Sounds.

WE, ROBERT THORN HAINES, Scientific Expert, of 26, Osaburgh Street, Regenta Park, London JOHN ST VINCENT PLETTS, Electrical Engineer, of "Ivanhoe", Clarence Road, Teddington, Middlesex, and EUGENE AUGUSTIN LAUSTE, Electrical Engineer, of 64, Strand, London, do hereby declare the nature of this invention to be as

The British patent issued to Eugene Lauste by the London Patent Office, on his device to combine movements and sounds simultaneously. (Dated, 1906-1907.)

The film appears not unlike an ordinary motion picture positive film, but a close examination with a powerful magnifying glass discloses a fine line, containing hills and valleys, so to speak, close to the perforation, and just outside the picture frame.

This is most remarkable when we consider that the film, including the emulsion, is but .005's of an inch in thickness. The engraved record line is only .002's deep. A speaker unit is employed, with an electrical circuit, to pick up the voice, or music record on the film, and is again reproduced with suitable apparatus, employing cone speakers.

In 1926, Vitaphone, one of the latest devices, was demonstrated in several theatres in New York City.

The Laustophone projector, developed by Eugene Lauste for reproducing his movement-sound combination film, dated 1916.

In 1927, the Movietone was demonstrated in a theatre, and several other devices also were disclosed.

Vitaphone is the result of years of research in the Western Electric Company and the Bell Telephone Laboratories, supplemented by the efforts of Walter J. Rich, now president of the Vitaphone Corporation, and the Warner Brothers.

In producing the results it was realized that the simplest way to keep the camera and the sound-recording machine in perfect synchronization would have been to drive both from the opposite ends of the same motor shaft, but that as the camera must be free to swing, two motors were used, and an electrical gearing device held them at exactly the same speed. The motors were interlocked electrically by tapping at three symmetrical points on each armature and by interconnecting the two motors through slip rings. Thus the motor driving the sound-recording equipment and the motor driving the camera are independently supplied with electrical power, but through the slip ring circuit there is enough interchange of power between their armatures to produce synchronization while starting. When they reach the desired speed they are converted into synchronous motors, one of the triumphs of electrical engineering, and continue to run as independent synchronous motors, the speed of both being determined by the frequency of the power supply.

The recording machine gathers the sound by a special microphone which translates into voltage fluctuations the vibrations caused by sound striking the diaphragm. These minute fluctuations are amplified by a vacuum tube amplifier until they are of sufficient power to operate the device which cuts the permanent record, a disk of soft wax, by means of a needle, just as phonograph records are made. The disk, a very large one, like each reel of film, runs for approximately fifteen minutes.

When reproducing, the film and the sound record are set in their respective machines, with a given marker, indicating the starting point, in place. They are coupled to opposite ends of the same motor, the speed of which is held constant by means of a vacuum tube regulator. It is essential that the mechanical gearing be so designed that mechanical vibrations and irregularities of load in the projector should not cause fluctuations in the speed of the phonograph record. To avoid this a flywheel and flexible connections are placed between the last gear-driven shaft and the turntable of the sound apparatus, which iron out the ripples in speed.

The sound is brought to the audience by an electrical reproducer that converts the movements of the needle in the grooves of the disk into electrical vibrations, which pass to an adaptation of the Western Electric public address system of the type used at conventions and other events.

The Movietone, controlled by the Fox-Case Corp., was successfully demonstrated. Standard motion picture film is employed, the picture and its sound-accompaniment being recorded upon it by the photographing of light variations, and is accomplished by collecting sounds through a microphone which changes sound variations into electrical variations. These electrical variations are amplified, and in turn, vary the intensity of the recording light. This recording light, or aeo light, called thus because of an alkaline earth oxide deposit on the filament, is high in actinic values.

The aeo light, contained in a glass tube, is inserted at the back of the camera, so that the variations of light intensity fall directly upon an edge of the negative film on which the picture is being simultaneously recorded. A developed film shows musical notes in terms of lighter or darker horizontal bars, the variations being due to magnitude of sound.

The presentation of the film is the reversal of this process. A standard projection machine, to which a reproducing unit has been added, is used, and the picture is shown in the usual way. The reproducing unit includes a light focused through a slit on to the sound record of the film. As the sound record passes this slit, the constant flow of light shining through it is interrupted. Light variations are thus made, and these are changed into electrical variations, which are amplified and reproduced through loud speakers.

The telephone apparatus necessary, according to officials of the Fox-Case Corporation, are the devices acquired by Vitaphone in an exclusive license from the Western Electric Company, and the use of which are covered by an agreement between the Vitaphone and

"The Voice Record."—Reproduction (enlarged six times over normal size) of the Lauste film for recording movement and sound simultaneously.

Fox-Case corporations. This includes microphones, loud speakers and amplifiers, both in recording and reproducing, it was said.

It was said that reproducing attachments for both systems, the Vitaphone and Movietone, are being designed for one projection machine, the telephone equipment being the same for both. This would enable the exhibitor, after installation, to use either of these systems in his theatre.

The Photophone—the new name given to a device previously called the Pallophotophone—concerning which recent disclosures were made, is a combination of the usual motion picture projector and the pallophotophone, an invention of Dr. C. A. Hoxie of the General Electric Company's research staff. By means of a vibrating beam of light produced from impressions alongside the pictures on the film photographic sound is re-translated into audibility and the sound is amplified by a loud speaker.

Dr. Hoxie has been assisted by others of the General Electric staff, most notably by Dr. C.

W. Hewlett, whose powerful auditorium public speaker is an indispensable unit of the new system.

In Hoxie's machine a mirror that is smaller than the head of a pin and as thin as tissue paper is set to vibrating by the fluctuating current from a radio microphone. It casts a vibrating beam of light upon the edge of a moving picture film within a space one-tenth of an inch wide. The developed film carries a zigzag tracing of the voice vibrations. This is transferred to the film carrying the pictures, which have been taken simultaneously.

The photo-electric cell accomplishes the marvel of turning this line back again into electrical vibrations in the reproducer and radio amplifiers and the loud speaker recreate the sound. The recorder is a sound camera, timed to move step by step with the action camera. The reproducer is a unit, easily lifted in the hands, that fits upon a motion-picture projector.

One of the great advantages claimed for the whole device is that the sight and sound records are together when completed on a single film that can be "played" as well as projected on any projector fitted with the relatively simple reproducer.

The Voiceophone, of John Hanover, is a disc apparatus, for quick installation in smaller theatres.

In setting down a record, however brief, of the inventors and experimenters in this branch of science, mention must be made of Ernst Walter, Dr. H. Thirring, Prof. J. T. Tykociner, Grindell Matthews, Dr. Rankine and Rührmer.

Television By William Karlake Jones

IF and when television becomes a commercial success, it may spell the doom of existing motion picture projecting devices. It undoubtedly will eliminate the film, the projectionist, accessories, the reel boy, the booth, electrical installation, etc., requiring only the prepared screen with the additional ray-propulsion apparatus in the theatre. The ray-projecting apparatus will be controlled, doubtless, from a distant broadcasting station, say 200 miles or more.

At this time the foregoing facts may appear to be illusionary. But is it not a fact that less than thirty-five years ago a similar condition existed, when the motion picture was taken out of the peep-box and placed upon the screen? Time alone will tell the story of the new science.

Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson, consulting engineer of the General Electric Company and the Radio Corporation of America, recently demonstrated his television projector.

Television is virtually distant vision. Light vibrations are changed to electrical vibration for transmission and retranslated into light at the reception point. This light is reflected upon a screen by means of mirrors. These mirrors paint the entire light portions of the screen with light in the brief duration of approximately 1/16 of a second. The light is so faint that seven mirrors are now employed by Alexanderson to light the screen, which gives seven times the amount of light. The present difficulty is getting the vibrations over with sufficient rapidity to cover the screen in the allotted time, and repeat sixteen times a second. This would require 300,000 electrical impulses in one second. Right now the limit seems to be in the vicinity of 40,000. When this can be speeded up, the aim of the inventor will be achieved. A faint picture can be attained with the present speed, but it is merely a scientific curiosity. When speed is attained, as undoubtedly it will be, then the television becomes a commercial practicality and no longer merely a scientific toy.

Television, by no means a recent thought, has been engaging the attention of such experimental engineers as Korn, Baird, Belin, d'Albe, Swinton, Rosing, Petersen, Ranger, Jenkins, Zworykin, Karolus, Schroter and Stockberger. Partial disclosures of units of complete apparatus have been made from time to time. The necessity for achieving 300,000 "brush strokes" per second, necessary for the reproduction of about 16 pictures in that fraction of time, is engaging the attention of the electrical engineers. Reports indicate that the Germans, Schroter and Karolus, and Alexanderson, the distinguished Swedish inventor, are seeking to reach the goal through experiments that vary widely in comparison.

John L. Baird, the young Scotchman, uses the televisior with his invention, the full details of which invention have not been disclosed. Baird's invention calls for the infra-red ray energy application, and he has achieved a distinctive measure of success.

Prof. Donald C. Stockberger, of the Department of Physics of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, employs a violet ray receiving set to receive sounds and motion pictures, which become visible only when thrown upon a fluorescent screen. The amateur may try this experiment by coating his own screen with an adhesive upon which a fluorescent Tungstate of calcium or barium platinum cyanide in powder form has been dusted.

Dr. Schroter, of Liepzig, Germany, recently announced a new system of transmitting electrical impulses within a few seconds. Dr.

Karolus, also of Liepzig, is said to have achieved television by a unique process.

Fournier d'Albe's scheme of television is based upon the use of the selenium cell, having found that by using intermittent lights of many different musical frequencies, each corresponding to a separate portion of the original picture, it is possible to transmit these portions simultaneously by use of the same selenium cell.

In the foregoing, mention is made of some of the men who have devoted their time to experiments in television, but as this is based on wireless contact, we here set down the fact that as early as 1865, J. C. Maxwell, when prosecuting his researches in mathematical physics, made the prediction that visible light consists of electric waves in the ether.

It was in 1887 that Heinrich Hertz proved Maxwell's theory by practical demonstrations. He showed that the ether of space will transmit electric waves, and he indicated how these waves may be produced and detected. Hence, the Hertzian waves. Came Branly (1890), with his "coherer," and Popoff, Marconi, Lodge, Arco, Slaby, Braun, Castelli, Dunwoody, and Picard, with their additions to the science of wireless telegraphy and telephony, of which television is one of the off-shoots.

Nineteen twenty-seven.

Mr. J. F. Chalmers, Pres.,
Moving Picture World,
516 Fifth Ave.
N. Y. City.

Dear Mr. Chalmers:

The twentieth anniversary of MOVING PICTURE WORLD is well worth celebrating. You have seen the industry grow up and helped it in the process.

I do not think, now that the industry is so well established, that it can therefore get along without its trade papers. The great expansion of all works allied with the motion picture has also widened the field in which you work and we all expect you to do the same measure of good these next twenty years as you have done in the ones you are about to celebrate.

With sincerest regards and best wishes for a prosperous future, I am,

Yours very truly,

Natural Color Moving Pictures

Their History And Advancement

Some Interesting Facts About Arthur Hernandez, Inventor of "Color Pictures," and the Process Which He Evolved in the Early Days of the "Movies"

By
Charles Edward Hastings

Arthur Hernandez, inventor of the process for "color pictures."

FROM the very beginning of motion pictures it was thought that their life-like effect would be greatly enhanced if shown in the colors of nature.

Some of the first experimenters in cinematography turned their attention to color work, notably LePrince (1887-1888), who incorporated references to color in both his United States and British patents in cinematography. William Friese-Greene, the contemporary of LePrince, also experimented in color work, using a three-color process, and achieved a certain measure of success.

And others, further back than "Kinetoscope days," labored with the intricate study. Some of the early "Kinetoscope" pictures were frequently tinted by hand to approximate the colors of nature. This method of hand-tinting, or stenciling, has been continued to the present day, and has been more frequently practiced by French manufacturers.

In the early days of the Edison laboratories at Llewellyn Park, N. J., the first hand colorist was Mrs. Edmund Kuhn. Other colorists in the early days were Miss Martini, of West Orange, N. J.; Miss Sarah Levy, of New York City, and Miss Tompkins, of Brooklyn, N. Y. These famous hand colorists brought their art to a high degree of perfection, and displayed remarkable patience in working out their results. Some faint idea of this exacting work is suggested by statistics that show that an eight-reel feature contains 128,000 image areas to trace! These figures also furnish the basis for computing the extremely heavy cost of hand-coloring.

It was in order to overcome the disadvantages of mechanically tinted pictures, and to utilize photo-chemistry as a substitute, that Friese-Greene, and later Urban and Smith, produced color pictures thrown upon the screen by persistence of vision (first one colored image and then another), so rapidly, so highly illuminated, and in auditoriums so darkened that the impression upon the observer was that of colored images in motion. And particularly so of subjects which originally were an orange or a green color.

This process consisted of taking alternate red and green record negatives on the same film tape, at about 32 pictures a second. The positive is projected, similarly, through interposing rotating color screens. The process was commercialized under the name of Kinemacolor. The first exhibition of Kinemacolor, the Urban-Smith process, in the United States, was given under the direction of Charles Urban, in the concert hall at Madison Square Garden, December 11, 1905. An American company was formed to exploit Kinemacolor, with indifferent success, for a number of years. It failed, completely, about 1914, due to poor quality in the effect, and also because it required special projectors, or projector attachments.

The disadvantages of the Kinemacolor process have been removed in the natural color motion pictures produced today. Each of the images of the film, today, appears in the exact colors of nature. The film, also, is projected at standard speed on any standard projector, the same as black and white subjects. This was the invention of Arthur Hernandez, of New Rochelle, N. Y. In this process, the positive film is "double-coated," having a sensitized emulsion on both sides. On one side are printed the orange-red color record images, and on the other side are printed in registry the blue-green images.

Briefly described, the process is as follows: By means of a special camera, pairs of identical negatives are taken of the subject through screens of complementary colors, as orange-red and blue-green. These sequences of pairs of negatives may be either on a single film tape, or on separate film tapes. Prints are then taken from the negatives upon the opposite sides of the double-coated positive film, with the images of each pair in registry. The images on one side of the film, taken with the orange-red screen, are then converted, by any suitable toning or dyeing action, to a complementary blue-green color while the images on the opposite side of the film are changed to a complementary orange-red color, whereupon the pictures appear upon the film in their natural colors, ready for projection.

Hernandez invented this process in the early days of motion pictures, and, beginning with 1911, he maintained an active laboratory, in which he developed the invention, and worked out mechanism and methods for manufacturing color pictures on a commercial basis. As was the case with many inventors, Hernandez was hampered by limited capital and the intrusion of infringers. When he was on the verge of taking up the manufacture of the natural color films, death overtook him, in the Fall of 1920. He was 53 years old when he died.

The records show that Hernandez filed the application for his generic patent in June, 1912, and the same issued as No. 1,174,144, on March 7, 1916. Since which time several other patents were issued to him for improvements relating to his process.

The Independents

An Interview and Some Comment

By

By Fred Baer

THE editors of MOVING PICTURE WORLD assigned me to interview a leader to discuss the Independent question for readers of the 20th anniversary issue of their journal. They left the choice of interviewee to me and I chose Samuel Zierler, because he is so intensely active both in production and distribution in the Independent field.

Mr. Zierler, as probably the entire industry knows, is president of Commonwealth Film Corporation, probably the leading State-Right Exchange in the country; also president of Excellent Pictures Corporation, which in its comparatively short life has made a most unusually successful record.

He was an outstanding sales executive for Universal many years ago, right up to the time he founded Commonwealth which was back in 1919, eight years ago this coming Autumn. Only now is he getting to an age where he is willing to be honest about it. He came into the business about the time MOVING PICTURE WORLD did. He had just turned 24 when he launched Commonwealth. He celebrated his 32nd birthday anniversary the early part of this month and for the first time in his life admitted the actual number of his years.

In the interview which produced the material for this article we went back a considerable number of years, long before the present situation as regards Independents existed.

"This word, 'Independent,'" said Mr. Zierler, "really is a misnomer. It would be much simpler to say 'States-Rights' or 'Territorial Distributors.'"

"In the long-ago days there were no such distributors, nor did we hear anything about 'Independents.' You might say everyone was an 'Independent' then. Before 1910 many pictures were imported from abroad; in the early years I should say the proportion of imports was almost 90 per cent of the total.

"Competition of a sort which would appear ridiculous obtained then. Firms even competed with themselves. In such a territory as Metropolitan New York it was not unusual to find as many as ten exchanges handling the same film. Nor was it unusual to find two or three or four branches, owned by a single firm, competing with each other. General Film, Kessel & Bauman had three and four branch offices in a single territory; Universal had two, Mutual three, and so on. They would not only fight each other tooth and nail, but the branches would fight between themselves, trying to take each other's trade away.

"Films were sold outright by the manufacturer in those days; sold on a footage basis and the world was your oyster. There were no territorial limitations laid down.

"Later there developed the system of distributors dividing their merchandise into several groups, each group being identified by a particular brand name. It all seems so silly today to think of a man setting up competition in his own house, operating one branch to sell a brand of pictures which might be called 'The Red Series,' another to sell 'The White Series,' still another to sell 'The Blue Series.'"

Samuel Zierler

"I am making up these names at random, but the names are the only inventions. Everything else actually existed, as most of us well remember. The theory that actuated this procedure was that if an exhibitor soured on the branch that sold, say 'The Red Series,' his trade usually could be retained through one of the branches that sold either the White or Blue series.

"It was a foolish procedure, but natural enough for its time. And it did accomplish a forward step, nevertheless. While it still maintained self-competition, it marked the elimination of one branch of a producer-distributor undercutting another. Before the brand-system came in, the branches used to handle identical product and work against each other. Under the brand-system, they at least did not do that; they confined their efforts to a single brand.

"While Carl Laemmle was the man who really initiated the use of the term 'Independent'—this was during his marvelous advertising campaign when he was fighting the so-called Trust—it was Adolph Zukor who was the first 'Independent' as we understand the term today. His Famous-Players were the first producers who sold their pictures on a States-Rights basis. The organization of First National was a similar experiment on State Right lines, though the nomenclature employed was slightly different and we heard the name 'franchises' for the first time in the motion picture industry. Metro's foundation was also along the same idea.

"The motion picture industry is really too young to make necessary a detailed history of any of its chapters. The great majority of the men in it can recall unaided all the periods of its development. But I do like to dwell on one of the reasons for the great development that attended the Independents shortly after the formation of Famous-Players. Most of us recall this period; how States-Rights producers and exchanges flowered, prospered for a few years, and then began to perish as in a drought.

"The State-Right method of production and distribution is fundamentally sound. It was and is and always will be the theoretical best method. In practice, it will be so again.

"The State-Right method rests on the one best basis for success. Each State-Right owner is a business man who has his own capital invested in his business as well as his services. No matter how you approach any business proposition, the man who invests his own money is usually superior in result-getting than the man who merely invests his services. Not that there is any difference between the men as such, but simply because the man who invests his money is a harder worker, a keener thinker than the man who risks nothing but his time. He makes himself such.

"The national method is too stereotyped; it tends to kill initiative, it tends to reduce managers to the status of clerks. The bigger the national organization gets, the more true this becomes. No more in the moving picture business than in any other, can you kill the desire of men to get into business for themselves.

"For some time now the trend away from the States-Rights plan has been evident. Up to a year ago one heard on all sides that the States-Rights method was doomed. Many believed it. I never did. About a year ago the currents in the air changed. A new spirit began to come over distribution. Men began to believe that maybe after all the States-Rights plan would stage a come-back.

"There is no longer any doubt of it. The States-Rights plan reached its lowest ebb late in 1925. Exchanges dropped out of business like flies. Producers began to despair of finding a market for their Independent productions. Exhibitors, who wanted to play the game with the Independents, felt their support was being wasted. Then the change came. It has been coming ever since. The States-Rights market now appears to be one of the brightest in the whole industry.

"Certainly the house-cleaning which the depression produced has not been without its value. There were marks on the States-Rights structure that were not particularly clean. The industry is better off without them. But there is no doubt that it is stronger, more ambitious, better established than it has been in many years. One of the chief reasons for its comeback has been the practical elimination of the big-city first run from its consideration. States-Rights men used to spend a fortune in time and money trying to break into this group. They found it cost a lot more than it yielded.

POSTERS

Facts About The Big Paper

THE earliest of the store shows were just store shows, with a banner over the front reading "Moving Pictures," and perhaps, a little later on, an automatic piano. Not much decoration was needed. The novelty brought them in, though more often it was the price rather than the novelty.

When the novelty wore off, a few of the more enterprising exhibitors dressed the front with hand lettered signs announcing a few of the fifty foot titles.

The next step was to post the front. The only lithographs available were the "stock" paper to be had of all lithographic concerns. Stock paper was lithographic material ordered for some theatrical attraction and not taken up, either through the failure of the show or because too large an order had been given. This was used by repertoire shows and cheap one night stand attractions to save lithographic costs. The date strip was pasted over the original title. If the title was too long, you pasted two date strips. It was very simple. The sheets cost six cents each.

The exhibitor wanted the most for his money. He wanted something striking. He got it. For sixty cents you could buy the violation of the entire ten commandments. Sometimes you could get the ten fractures with only 42 or 48 cents.

The cheapest houses had canvas drops made, as wide as the front, as high as the first floor and with only two small openings, one for entrance and the other for exit. These were completely covered with battle, murder, sudden death and the plague. A bill stayed up until it washed down or got too flyspecked. Generally it took a strong rain. When they were washed down, more of the same sort went up.

There were two places on the south side of Union Square which used a display two stories high, with a lot of 28-sheets, then the standard size.

Patrons knew that the bills were not true to the pictures. They were only subconsciously influenced by the lithographs. They meant no more than a red and white striped pole does to a barber shop. It was just a sort of trade mark.

But the reformers did not know this. They shuddered with horror at the terrible movies. They visioned rivers of blood, murder at wholesale, seduction in gross lots and assault and battery used for punctuation. They never went inside to investigate. They were willing to take the exhibitors' word for it and if the Board of Review; then known as The National Board of Censorship, had not volunteered to perform the function, the clumsy police censorship would have been inevitable.

All of this does not mean that there had been no film posters up to this time. Vitagraph got out what probably were the first true-to-film posters along about 1900. "Pop" Rock was running a show circuit upstate somewhere, and he had one sheets printed up in stock design, with ornamental lettering for the title of the company and a series of blank spaces, laid out much as the photograph frames of today. If we remember correctly the color scheme was blue and yellow. Halftones were made of production stills and a limited number would be printed up on the stock base. Vitagraph mostly used double titles in those days such as "The Haunted Hotel or the Drummer's Strange Adventures." They had to have plenty of space for the title, but there were no electric signs, so the managers did not complain. Oddly enough, the first colored posters on a Vitagraph title came from Italy. They had made The Life of Washington in five parts, released a week apart. In Italy these were offered as a five reel show and a special three-color poster gotten out.

The Hennegan Company had considerable ready print material including "Always a good show," "Great Show Today" and "Twenty Degrees Cooler Inside."

When the Patents Company was formed, one of the first moves was to seek to remedy the lithographic condition. Arrangement was made with the A. B. See Company of Cleveland, known as A.B.C., to make one-sheets for all licensed releases. These were made from photographs sent by the companies, and were supposed to be touched up by the lithographers. As a rule, however, all they did was to add the title and the trade mark.

It will be remembered that this was just about the time the censorship agitation had almost boiled over, and the companies were warned to be careful of what they sent to A.B.C.

The natural result was that about eighty per cent of the posters showed the hero and heroine in loving embrace. Now and then some daring soul would slip in one showing the villain choking the hero or the heroine; generally the former, and once every so often the hero would get a gun poked into his ribs, but the "Clutch" was the favorite way of playing safe, and, anyhow, that worked up well into the sheets, for most of them were made with the longest side for length.

These posters were paid for by the production company, or rather the company paid the difference between the standing orders and the standing order sales.

The standing order was the order for the minimum number of posters the lithographer was to print. The other was the exhibitor order. In those days there was block booking carried to the extreme. If you had a theatre you bought film by release days. Perhaps on Monday you would use the Lubin first run for that day, with the Vitagraph for the preceding Friday and the Essanay for Tuesday of the week before. All you knew was that you would get a Lubin, a Vitagraph and an Essanay. You might get three dramas, three comedies or even three scenics, but whatever the companies released on those days you got. Your standing order for that day would be for a Monday Lubin, a Tuesday Essanay and a Friday Vitagraph. If you ran three reels a day and used paper for all, you bought the entire output of eighteen posters a week. They cost you fifteen cents a sheet.

Generally the advertising man was also the scenario editor, perhaps the scenario writer, too, and even the title writer and film cutter. And not the least important of his jobs was persuading the exhibitors to use a lot of posters. Some of the publicity departments of today think they have a tough job selling accessories to the exhibitors. They don't know how much better off they are than we used to be.

Selling posters was a tough job for two reasons. The chief trouble was the price. You could get five stock sheets for the price of two A.B.C. posters. As a sample of how it worked, we recall leaving Keith's Union Square Theatre one afternoon, having witnessed a Selig drama in which the big scene was the leap of the hero from a bridge to

Censorship of Motion Pictures In America

By Wilton A. Barrett

Executive Secretary, National Board of Review

MOVES towards censorship began almost with the first appearance of the motion picture as a shadow on a screen which gave the semblance of life in action. Was it the gregarious instinct of man prophetically awakening once more to protect him against something that threatened the telling of his secrets, the setting forth of his habits and tribal customs, of his very nature, but this time a medium more directly expressive and far reaching than any other he had invented and which, if developed, would make for his too great revelation to the masses of his kind? Perhaps the grandmothers of the race, confronted by the flint-carved portrait of themselves, the work of some lonely primitive artist on the walls of his cave, felt the same kind of foreboding so that in their breasts swelled the genesis of the suppressive emotion. But the artist's conception did not startle or shock with movement of the human body. As long as the picture remained inanimate, it did not offend. It is against life in motion, against living art, that the Puritan, early and late, has called forth the law.

The propulsion toward censorship with regard to motion pictures on the basis of this objection, is indicated by the first document in evidence. This is a letter from an exhibitor in Atlantic City written in the Nineties reporting a complaint on a picture of an Oriental dance screened in his theatre. The famous May Irwin "Kiss," soon forthcoming, was the cause of future germination of the censorship idea. During the next decade or more as the motion picture gradually threw off its crudity and increased its scope both as a carrier of information, as a possible weapon of propaganda, and as a popular entertainment opposition grew with it.

In 1907 a city ordinance was passed in Chicago setting up a municipal censorship board. This was the first move to evoke special law for regulating the screen. For a time this ordinance seems to have remained practically unenforced, but in 1909, because of local agitation over pictures, in which were involved objections to certain pictures being shown to children, to films in general being shown to widely diversified audiences of all ages, and to the system of booking all pictures without the community having advance information as to their character, it became effective under operation of a police board. It is recognized at once that these were real problems, not wholly solved today; it should also be recognized that to deal with them fairly thorough study and time were required; but repressive movements are never noted for patience on the part of their leaders; censorship, repressive, blundering and arbitrary, was the quick resort. Chicago got censorship and still has it today. The results, both social and as far as the pictures go themselves, have never been such as to arouse enthusiasm.

Elsewhere, by 1909, affairs had gotten to the state where the whole future of the motion picture was in doubt. The then Mayor of New York City, McClellan, because of alleged conditions in the motion picture theatres and the alleged character of some of the films

The only states in the Union in which censorship now prevails are New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kansas, Maryland and Virginia. It has shown a rapid decline. In 1923 censorship bills were introduced in 18 states. None of them passed. In 1925 the number was eight, with none passing. In 1927 the number is three, with none expected to pass.

New York jurisdiction over the screen has been transferred to the Department of Education and Governor Smith has recommended repeal of the bill. Kansas repealed part of its law in 1925 and a bill is now pending to repeal the balance. The members of the Maryland and Virginia boards in their annual reports say there is less and less reason for censoring. In Ohio the Commissioner of Education controls censorship, and he has several times echoed the words of the Maryland and Virginia boards. Pennsylvania is cutting less and less each year.

The only exception to the trend is Chicago, where censorship is distinctly a political football. Charles C. Pettijohn remarks sarcastically that the city must have a board to eliminate, as it has been doing for twelve years, all references to crime, hold-ups and firearms. The results are apparent, he says—Chicago now is the most orderly village in the world.

exhibited, closed all local picture houses in the city—a ban which constituted a brand such as in early days was placed upon the wanton woman and a stroke delivered directly not only at the reputation but at the very life of the young motion picture. The People's Institute of New York City, a citizen bureau of social research and activity, felt itself justified in trying a solution, believing as it did that the motion picture was the great, new medium of expression of untold potentialities as a recreative, educational and artistic force, and that it must be protected as such from any ill-advised effort to hamper its growth or smother it before it could confer its benefits on the American people. An increasing number of foresighted people all over the country also approved this enlightened point of view.

Under the name of the National Board of Censorship, the present National Board was therefore organized in 1909 by the People's Institute under its founder and director, the late Charles Sprague Smith. Its business was the volunteer examination of films in order to sponsor them to the public and in return, to give to the motion picture the intelligent public's support and encouragement of a growing art.

In spite of such pioneer efforts and not a little progress in pointing out to producers what seemed unwise to inject into motion pictures, in the latter part of 1912 an ordinance was introduced in New York City providing for a city censorship of motion pictures. In a letter of December 26, 1912, Mayor Gaynor expressed to the Board of Aldermen his reasons for vetoing the proposed ordinance. This letter remains the classic utterance of the case against censorship.

"In our fundamental instruments of government in this country, which we call constitutions," wrote Mayor Gaynor, "we expressly guaranteed from the beginning free speech and a free press, and prohibited the passing of any law abridging the same. The provision in the constitution of this state on that subject, which is substantially the same as the like provision in the Constitution of the United States, and also of the states generally, is as follows: Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press."

Censorship was thus killed in New York City, but agitation was crystallizing in many other sections of the country with censorship as the threat. The writer in an earlier article, at the risk of some reiteration here, had this to say with regard to this crystallization which swiftly became country-wide:

"To explain the situation further, the following facts of paramount importance must be considered in reaching a just conclusion regarding both the moral character of the films and some of the extreme criticisms that have been voiced. The Puritans, on the one hand, had found as an object for their fears and intolerance a new kind of devil-machine such as the printing press had at one time appeared to them to be. The professional reformers, on the other, had discovered a fresh evil to inveigh against with great possibilities of publicity for themselves and additional justification for their jobs and the rendering up to

The "Star System"

What Makes Them Glow and Why

By Epes W. Sargent

SOME OF THE EARLY STARS

Bottom Row—James Kirkwood, Pearl White and Maurice Costello.

PROBABLY the first star of the projected picture was "Annabel," whose Kinetoscope film was used for experimental purposes by Armat and Jenkins, but Annabel was by no means the only Kinetoscope star, for a number of well-known vaudeville acts were used as material for the old Black Maria. It just happened that Annabel was the first used in projection.

Annabel was sometimes a showgirl in musical comedy and sometimes a serpentine dancer in vaudeville. Her other name was Whitford, though sometimes she was known as Annabel Moore, as her stepfather was a vaudeville agent of that name. Annabel's chief claim to fame was not through her stage connection but because she had caused a police raid on a bachelor farewell dinner at the then most aristocratic Waldorf Hotel.

Another advertised star was the "Lucille Stigis," whose name is thus misspelled on the throwaways used by Wainwright and Rock for their show in New Orleans. This was Lucille Sturges, little vaudeville violinist and dancer who had scored a minor hit in Oscar Hammerstein's ballet of "Marguerite" at his Olympia, now known as the New York Theatre.

Not many stars followed these pioneers into the field on the perfection of the projector. John C. Rice and May Irwin gave their still famous kiss from "The Widow Jones," and shortly after Joseph Jefferson did the toast from Rip Van Winkle for the Biograph. Probably no money could have coaxed this beloved veteran of the drama to pose for the pictures, but his son, C. B. Jefferson, was a member of the Biograph company, and not only did Joe Jefferson offer to toast to you and your family, but Willie, who frequently understudied his father, played in scores of the fifty-foot comedy interludes of that day. This probably was around 1898. Cal Stewart, a Yankee impersonator, and Gilbert Sarony, an "old maid," were minor stars, and many Biographs with mischievous office boys showed the son of the General Manager for Biograph. Later he became a sure-enough star, for Wallace McCutcheon came into his own around 1912. It was at this time that Roy L. McCordle learned the ropes, for he left the Morning Telegraph to write and stage the Biograph shorts.

The real rise of the star system came in the summer of 1909. This writer had been hired to do the press work for Vitagraph, and that included writing the bi-monthly Bulletin of releases. In those days the stories were written from the produced film and not from an advance scenario that was likely to be completely changed around. Each week the completed pictures would be run off on the screen.

The sight of the boy with the cans heading for the cellar was the signal for all who were not working to flock to the cellar projection room. It was Commodore Blackton's habit to keep up a running fire of comment on the action such as "Florence goes to meet Maurice," "Maurice leaves his boat and comes up on the beach," and similar scraps of information. It was after one of these speeches that we asked Florence who? Why not use the full name?

There was a moment's pause, then Blackton asked "Is it all right, Florence?"

"Sure," came the prompt reply from the stairway where the players were perched and Blackton repeated, "Florence Turner." The next bulletin carried the names of Florence Turner, Maurice Costello, Leo Delaney, Adele De Garde, a child favorite, and several others, the first instance of the players being named.

It might be remarked in passing that a recent history states that in the general doubling up of duties Miss Turner also served as wardrobe mistress. As a matter of fact, she was the general factotum, dispensing the petty cash, interviewing callers and making herself generally useful around the office. And if you were invited to stay for lunch, it was Miss Turner who brought you the cheese sandwiches and tea which was the invariable menu at Vitagraph.

Eight weeks later the writer had passed on to the Lubin Manufacturing Company, where he repeated the practice of using the actual names of the players, after he had combatted Mr. Lubin's protest that the players would demand more money if they became known. It was not long before the other members of the Patents Company followed suit, with the single exception of Biograph.

It is probable that Biograph had another reason for withholding names. Even in 1910 stage players were averse to lending the use of their names to the pictures, even while they appreciated the five dollars a day that was paid for jobbing. Biograph used many well-known players. They feared it would be more difficult to obtain their services if names were used.

Of course, that made the fans all the more eager to obtain the names, and that, again, made the Biograph officials stubborn. Even when

B. Nichols, their English agent, insisted that he must have named postcards to compete with other companies, they refused to permit real names to be used, and Nichols used his own judgment. Only one name lingers in memory. We recall that Blanche Sweet was known as Daphne Wayne.

For this reason the names of Mary Pickford, Owen Moore, Marion Leonard, Kirkwood, John W. Cumpson, Fred Mace and Mack Sennett were not known until they had passed to the management of the then growing independents, and it was not until the independents obtained these names that they really began to gain prestige.

As usual it was Carl Laemmle who led the way, and he took pages to announce that Biograph's "Little Mary" was none other than Mary Pickford, who would be seen in Imp productions. In the same way Florence Lawrence, sometimes known as "the other Biograph Girl," got her name when she and Arthur Johnson went to the Lubin company. It was not until Biograph produced its first regular two-reel picture that the names were given out, and meanwhile most of the famous names had become known through association with other companies.

It was the star system that helped to raise present day salaries to what in 1909 represented a film company's weekly income—often more—but on the other hand, it was the star system which not only saved the pictures from the chute but put them ahead many years.

The public had found its own names for the players, but the "really and truly" names gave the actors a new appeal. A year and a half later, conducting the "Answers" department for the Motion Picture Story Magazine, the writer was better able to judge the fan reaction.

It was Eugene V. Brewster's idea that a fictitious department purporting to answer questions would give opportunity for the putting over bits of personal and studio gossip. Neither of us had any idea of what the result would be.

The first department was, of course, entirely fictitious. When gossip ran out before the limits of the department, a few names were taken from recent casts. By the time the third department was sent to the printer, the flood

WHAT are the major improvements in camera design and camera work in the last twenty years? This is the question we are asked to answer for the anniversary number of MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

As far as the cameras are concerned, this can be summarized in two words—accuracy and standardization. Doubtless, most of you will remember the confusion that existed in the early days owing to the different frame lines and the different perforations that were being used. To such a state did matters develop that the whole industry was threatened with a serious setback.

The Bell & Howell Company early recognized the need of some definite standards, and a large amount of experimental work was done. After a careful consideration of all the factors involved, the company announced their findings and immediately proceeded to develop the special machinery necessary. It is interesting to note that the select committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers adopted the B. & H. perforation and frame line as standard in 1917, thus setting the seal of approval on the pioneer work of this company.

The first step, of course, was to design the famous B. & H. perforator. The great exclusive feature of this machine was the registration of the film by pilots during the perforating. By this device and with remarkable accuracy of the construction of the perforator, it was possible to supply perforated film to the trade that could absolutely be relied upon to be correct. This was accomplished in 1910. At the same time, the well known B. & H. professional camera was designed using the same system of pilot registration. In the design were incorporated features that made it possible to do the most elaborate trick work. Even then, without the accuracy of registration in both the perforator and camera, these features would be of little use. As it was, producers and camera men early found out that they could produce the most mystifying effects, with the result that some very ambitious work was done along these lines. While today several attachments are available for doing some of this kind of work more easily, the original design of the camera has not been changed.

The most important problem in handling film is in the taking care of shrinkage. As everyone knows, motion picture film consists of sensitive silver salts in a gelatine emulsion which is spread on a celluloid base. Now gelatine is a most peculiar substance and the vagaries of its behavior still causes worry to the best minds tackling the problem. This is more or less aside from the subjects, but it is mentioned to show that the various branches of the industry are so interwoven that it is not possible to separate them.

The next step in the advance of cinema machinery was the advent of the continuous type of printer as distinct and separate from the step printers formerly used. A rather different problem was presented here in that a shrunk negative was being printed on an unshrunk positive. In the step type of printer, this small variation was automatically compensated for each frame. This was not possible in the continuous machine, so a new method had to be found. This was finally taken care of by making the aperture curved, the positive film, of course, travelling on the outside. Incidentally, side shrinkage was taken care of and perfect registration assured by making the sprocket teeth fit the perforations of the film exactly on one side only. This printer was put on the market in 1911 and immediately speeded up production.

Now to turn to some of the more recent improvements in cameras and camera work.

Possibly the outstanding achievement in camera construction was the design of a special shuttle mechanism that could be used interchangeably with the regular camera. With this device the standard camera could be used for taking pictures at the rate of 128 per second. By installing shutters and special rollers this speed could be increased to 300 per second. When one realizes that the film has to stop, take the picture, start up again and stop 300 times every second and do it so accurately that the picture on the screen would not be jumpy, one begins to realize just how valuable a contribution this was.

Probably the most radical improvements in camera design are the small spring driven portable cameras that are so conspicuous now. While many small cameras of this type had been placed on the market from time to time, none of them really met with the serious consideration of the producers.

The first developments started by this company were the use of standard film split down the middle. This was never pushed and was allowed to rest until the introduction of the 16 m/m substandard film in 1923. The 16 m/m film utilizes the reversal process developed by the Eastman Kodak Company. By this outstanding advance in film technique it is possible to produce pictures at less than one-sixth the cost of standard film. As the item of expense interests the amateur as much as anything, the importance of this process can hardly be overestimated.

The Filmo Automatic Camera has created a sensation wherever it has been introduced, and it is not saying too much that this remarkable camera has made amateur cinematography popular with the public. The success of this machine was largely responsible for the widespread interest in amateur cinematography. The amateur can now reproduce most of the work done by professionals within, of course, certain limits. The result is that amateur clubs, cinema leagues, etc., are springing up all over the country.

The obvious step from the amateur spring driven camera is to the professional spring driven camera.

At first it was thought that no professional would condescend to use anything of this nature. However, the portability and convenience of this type of camera is so obvious that this machine made good over night. It is noteworthy that some of the biggest news scoops in history have been obtained by this camera.

Keeping step with the improvements in camera and camera accessory design, the methods in the studio have kept pace also. The greatest change is in the growing use of artificial lights of all kinds as opposed to the old glass

"hothouse" studios using sunlight. Not only are the producers independent of weather, but special effects can be produced so easily. One may safely say that the styles of lighting adopted by the cinematographers have set the style all over the world. A large part of the fascination of modern pictures lies in the remarkable lighting effects. After all is said and done, what is a motion picture but a play of form, light, and shade?

Largely related to the control of light is the amount of light used. There is a fast growing tendency towards the use of faster lenses. Not only do they economize in light, but their use also eases the strain on the actors' eyes. The importance of this need not be stressed as everyone knows what is meant by "Kleig eyes." Another advance in the studio is in the use of soft focus lenses. By a discreet use of these lenses the atmosphere of mystery, romance and exquisite beauty are readily portrayed. Incidentally, the discreet manipulation of these lenses has made it possible to photograph entire productions without the actors using make-up—or at least as much as usual.

Talking about make-up, you know that the actors have to make up on account of the usual film not giving the same effect on the screen that the eye sees. This is caused by the difference in color sensitivity of the film as compared to the eye. Panchromatic film is coming to the fore, now that there is a growing recognition of this principle, and bids fair to supplant the regular film ordinarily used. As a matter of fact, several pictures have been taken entirely with this film and the actors did not use any make-up, except possibly for a few close-ups. The advent of talking pictures is fresh in the minds of everyone, and the huge success of this new venture is going to bring surprising results. The "Black Pirate" was a picture far in advance of anything previously shown, and the forerunner of many more entirely in color. Just now, many keen minds are working on the problem of stereoscopic pictures. While these problems are baffling, sooner or later they will be solved. Still pictures are now regularly sent by wire and even by radio. It will not be long before moving pictures will be sent the same way.

In a brief and sketchy way we have outlined some of the principal advances in camera construction and technique. It is not possible to mention all the things that have contributed to the fast progress of this youngest of the arts. From the old Black Maria to the huge studios of today is a big step, but who can foresee the studios of the future when every home will have a projector of their own and when the family will show a picture rather than read a book. Possibly they may connect the projector to a socket in the wall and witness a stereoscopic life-like reproduction in color to the music of the world's best orchestras.

THE influence electric light has exerted in bringing motion pictures up to the present high state of perfection cannot be commercially estimated, unless all phases of the industry be grouped under one head and electric energy given credit for all.

It is, of course, possible to produce the motion picture without the use of electric light, but the cost per unit picture would be considerably greater than with our present method. Therefore, assuming that motion pictures may be photographed without the aid of electric light, of what value would any motion picture film be to any theatre with a seventy-five to two hundred foot throw if other than electricity was used in the motion picture projector? Therefore, electric light is the only light source that may be used to reproduce the picture on the theatre screen with satisfaction, regardless of what source of illumination could be used in the manufacture of the same.

You might inquire what is satisfactory motion picture projection. In my judgment, no one can reply to this, in that the industry, because of the lack of standardization, has various degrees of brightness and quality which are classified as satisfactory pictures and this is the standard set by some individual or local groups, visibly or otherwise, on which no data or technical information is had for comparison. Therefore, what may be a standard in one section is not in another section, contrast or the lack of contrast may have some bearing on the appearance of the screen or various theatres in the same community.

Were it possible to have for comparison sections of positive exposed and developed film (taken from ten subjects or even ten sections of the same subjects, and different prints,) various densities of positive printing might be found, automatic apparatus will eliminate this to some extent but not entirely.

It is readily discernible that although electric light has been the prime factor in the development of the motion picture industry, the motion picture industry has grown in such leaps and bounds that the engineers have not been able to keep up with this rapidity of growth and because of the speed with which the industry has grown, a great many refinements have been omitted. Some of the many refinements have been overlooked which may have a great bearing on the future quality.

A large percentage of the motion pictures photographed up to this time had been printed dark—all that could be said of it was that it was an image photographically recorded on a film. The next step apparently, was a combination of non-chromatic light units and arc lamps, filters, etc.—then the high intensity gradually found a place in the studio—now the demand again is for the better negative quality, one with finer quality and gradation of film intensity. The superseded sensitive negative film with color screens in the camera to balance the spectrum also found its place in the studio.

The picture of the future, if present trend may indicate what the future demand will be, will permit of a much higher quality of negative, with the possible elimination of screen for the camera, for other than color work—and the adoption of pan-chromatic negative stock exclusively with the use of the combination of mercury vapor, incandescent lamps of high wattage and the high intensity arc, with the result that by this method it will be possible to register the proper film density for the higher grade black and white and color photography.

You might ask, what has this to do with the influence that electric light has had in bringing the motion picture to its present standard? Every step in the development of the industry, must be preceded, or directly followed by some development or improvement in the lighting apparatus. Film emulsions require the attention of the chemical engineer but research and knowledge of the quality of light emitted by the lighting equipment, must be had before the chemical engineer can proceed to any great extent. Such developments often require the manufacture of special carbon electrode for the arc lamp, new mechanisms for operating and controlling the arc, incandescent lamps of special nature using tungsten ribbon instead of wire tungsten, and special fixtures for control devices for operating the electrical lighting apparatus and a hundred and one other minor electrical developments must be developed to obtain a certain desired photographic result.

As the film negative quality is improved, changes in light sources are therefore necessary, to correspond with the negative which is used in the camera.

Again, electric light has been the influencing factor in increasing the quality of the motion picture.

Studio electric lighting apparatus and photographic materials are always running a race toward improved quality. With all the research in the studio and producing field, assuming that the negative and story produced be of the very highest quality, the unfortunate condition exists, that the positive film printing and projection might not be of proper quality and standard and might require a large amount of research engineering. From the projection standpoint, electricity has made practically the only advancement in the last several years, and as for motion picture projectors; projectors that were available several years ago, are practically the same projectors which you now have today, with but few minor improvements. The advancement or improvement in the projection field has been primarily made by electric light and confined mainly to the lamp house. In the future a motion picture projector may be developed that will more efficiently utilize the light emitted by the light source and standards may be sent for projectors, screens, printing of positive film. When this is accomplished, electric light will have standardized the screen and will give the exhibitor the proper screen results at the minimum cost of operation. Such a move is coming, is on its way,—but the period of its arrival will depend on the co-operation of the theatre owners, projector manufacturers and lighting engineers. The industry must have standards created, and must be operated along these standards.

Salesmanship and engineering may have been thought to be synonymous at one time in the motion picture field,—they are now, if you place the proper apparatus in the proper place and do not oversell your product.

From every angle electric light either directly or indirectly has been the influencing factor in making and raising the present motion picture industry standard.

You may find that new experiments such as are now in progress will produce superior results to our present method.

The electric light is one of the predominant factors in every apparatus now used in the motion picture industry, the studio, editing room, printing and developing room, projection, wired and wireless transmission of pictures, talking pictures, and general decorations in theatre lighting. Electric light cannot be dispensed with. It will always be found in some form or other.

Without electric light the motion picture industry could not exist. Its influence has raised the standard of photography, brought the industry up to the present high standard and will carry the motion picture industry on to a higher standard. The old cut and dried methods should no longer be tolerated—it is now engineering and standardization wherever possible in every theatre, studio, and laboratory—and the influence of electric light and electricity will do the rest.

The Volunteers

By Van Powell

SELLING seats isn't so hard. But keeping them sold, holding a gain while fresh conquests are made in patron territory is a constant battle. The biggest gun and most effective ammunition is found in exhibitor reports.

Naturally the men behind the gun are volunteers. No paid troops could put the essential sincerity, spirit of aggressiveness and generous championship of a cause into this service. It takes men vitally interested, honest, imbued with a spirit of fair play. And that type, voluntarily, unselfishly, has suggested, built up and maintained in Straight From the Shoulder Reports, a clubby good-fellowship combined with real exhibitor service which prompted one of the group of contributors to christen them "Our Gang."

Away back in the early nineties, the idea of an exchange of reports had its real start in the Opera House Reporter, a publication that had its home in Estherville, Iowa, out in the sticks and catering to the managers of the houses and the troupes that played them all through that section. Theatre managers used the columns to tell each other about the quality of the acts or shows they played and the company managers, in their turn, came through with their experiences with various theatres and managers. Naturally there were "knocks" and often enough when a house manager "panned" an act and the road manager came back the printed comments came pretty near melting the type.

The idea of reports, minus the come-back-at-you angle, had such real value that exhibitors adopted it as a system of letting each other know the box office value to them of pictures played.

In response to the request of many exhibitors, MOVING PICTURE WORLD instituted the Straight From the Shoulder Reports service in 1921 and since its inception the form in which the reports came has gradually changed as exhibitors suggested the addition to the report of information calculated to make their box office estimate of the picture value to them more certain. Started for exhibitors, supported voluntarily by exhibitor contributors, used by a host of exhibitors, the reports have reached their present adequate form.

But though the form has undergone a gradual improvement, the spirit behind the form has never altered. From the start the men who send the reports gave to this generous service a sincere sense of fair play to the productions and to their fellow exhibitors. The reports were to be a statement of the effect they had on the box office, the audience reaction to them, little tips on patron comments, on the star's standing with the audience as a result of work in that particular picture, perhaps—but in the main essence, a simple statement of picture performance in that theatre.

The honesty and lack of bias which is the basis of the exhibitors' state of mind when making these reports, has made them grow in popularity as a box office barometer, and exhibitors use the reports as a guide in booking pictures, in estimating the exploitation effort to put behind a certain picture, in going back and picking up a "good bet" they may have overlooked.

E. W. Collins, when he was reporting pictures before he became President of the M. P. T.

O. A., put in a nutshell the best method for getting the most out of the use of the reports. "Study the reports and discover exhibitors whose opinions agree with your experience on pictures you both have played. Then follow the future reports of these exhibitors," was Mr. Collins' advice. Thousands have taken this advice and they find reports to be of the utmost value when used in this way.

So the volunteers have put Straight From the Shoulder Reports into a position where, in the battle for patronage, they make a bullseye every shot and go a long way toward putting the patronage drive over the top.

Motion Pictures in War Work

By Sumner Smith

THE lights had just flashed on in the Broadway theatre. A Liberty Loan speaker took the stage for an allotted ten minutes and wasted no time in beginning his oratorical campaign to stir the enthusiasm and loosen the purse strings of the audience.

Soldiers and sailors in all parts of the theatre obeyed while the audience applauded. Most conspicuous of all was a short, rather spunky looking chap. He stood alone in the front row of the first balcony, visible to all. The speaker, with an eye for the dramatic, decided to reserve him for last.

Pointing at the service man in the orchestra nearest to him the orator demanded, "Who will buy a $100 Liberty bond for him?"

The challenge was met and the service man, having fulfilled his part in the proceedings, sat down. His compatriots followed suit as the speaker, working rapidly and forcefully, won a bond for each of them. The service man in the balcony got tired of waiting and sat down.

"Now," shouted the orator, "we come to the last man. He is standing in the gallery, plainly visible to all. Who will buy $500 in bonds . . . ?"

The orator's voice trailed off.

"Where's that man gone?" he finally demanded.

A woman next to the soldier nudged him. "Get up," she said. "They want to see you."

"Like hell," replied the soldier in a voice that all could hear. "I don't like standing out like a lily in the field or a sore thumb."

While the audience roared, the speaker's time elapsed.

None can estimate the value of the co-operation given the government during the World War by the motion picture industry. It was easily one of the outstanding agencies in promoting enthusiasm and raising funds.

Propaganda films gotten out by the U. S. Bureau of Information were run without question in every theatre. News reel pictures helped enlistments. Theatres were thrown open to speakers, "Four-Minute men," like the man above, who sold Liberty Bonds. Army encampments got free film.

Most notable of all was the contribution of the screen stars. Theirs was a wonderful spirit of service. Jealousies were put aside for the common cause. Stars who hated each other as the mongoose hates the cobra stood side by side on the New York Public Library steps and personally sold bonds. And they did sell them! Like hot cakes. Not only that, but several of the most famous stars consented to appear together in a couple of films.

Films From Across The Sea

WHILE it is the general belief that all good things cinematic have had their origin in the United States and the UFA and other productions are now pointed to as evidence that at last the European directors are commencing to overtake—and possibly overpass us, film history shows that we owed much, even in the early days, to the European experimenters, notably the French and Italian producers. Our first really fine film productions came from the Pathe Freres, though they acted merely as handlers for the French artistes who produced the "Films d'Art."

This was really the first film guild. The best players of the French stage; not all of them of French birth, produced artistic plays and sold them through Pathe, content to "break even." Standard drama, old legends and an occasional experiment made up their repertoire, and to them may be credited the first film version of the legend from which Max Reinhardt developed his presentation of "The Miracle." The story was precisely the same. Reinhardt merely added scenic effects and mob backgrounds.

For the American market these pictures suffered somewhat from being cut to the iron-clad "one reel" limits. Abroad the system of handling was different, and a more natural development as concerned footage was permissible.

Both Eclectic and Eclair sent to America versions of "Les Miserables," one in four and another in eight reels, but when Edison and Vitagraph decided to make the same subject, they were forced to release the story in "parts" of one reel each, extending over a period of six weeks, just as Tolstoi's "Resurrection" was utterly spoiled by being condensed into the thousand foot limit.

Most of the early product came from France, but in Italy an artistic development was happening that resulted in the importation of a fourteen reel version of Dante's "Inferno" which was carefully edited to eight reels for local release. Some condensation was necessary, since there existed no Italian board of censorship and there was naturally much nudity, as was proper to the subject. This was eliminated before the public showings here. This was offered at as much as fifty cents "top"; an almost unheard of thing in those days of the five cent shows.

Now that the ice was broken, other big pictures followed such as "Les Miserables" again and "The Last Days of Pompeii" and in 1913 "Quo Vadis" was given an extended run in a legitimate theatre on Broadway and then roadshowed and this was repeated by "Cabiria" in 1914.

It will be seen that with one stroke, the foreign producers not only broke the single reel hoodoo but inaugurated the big spectacular super-feature. Nor was that all, for, having smelled blood they even sent over pictures in color such as the ancient Greek tragedy "Oedipus Rex" and the up-to-date offering by Kine-macolor of "The Durbar" in India on the occasion of the coronation of King Edward. The news reel also was first inaugurated on the other side.

Now let's go back to about the time that the late J. P. Chalmers founded MOVING PICTURE WORLD. We find that competing successfully with the home product that was fast getting on its feet, were a number of regular releases of European films, such as Great Northern, George Melies, Urban, Lux, Gaumont, Pathe, Roma, Milano, etc., representing the product of Norway, France and Italy. In many respects these pictures were an advance over the American product and they enjoyed popularity, but as the domestic picture continued to improve by leaps and bounds under the impetus of Yankee ingenuity, foreign competition grew less and less and by the beginning of the World War was negligible.

In justice to the American producer, it should be said that economic conditions worked to the advantage of the foreign product when it came to making the big spectacles, particularly the much lower labor cost for the big mob scenes, but once assured that there was a market, the American producer leaped into this field and began making super-spectacles regardless of expense or low-cost competition.

Necessarily, the World War acted as a serious set-back for the foreign producer and by the time it was over, America had taken the lead in this great industry. It was not long after peace was restored and the scars of war began to heal that the German-made picture began to make its effect felt in this

Films Of France Making Strong Bid For World Market

*Societe des Cineromans and Other Leading French Producers Now Making Pictures of Outstanding Merit—
New Productions Being Watched With Interest*

Paris, France.

FOR the first time since before the war, French film producers begin to feel confident that France again is to have its place in the sun as an important contributor to the art of the cinema. With the government's fullest co-operation and with ample finances French motion picture makers are making tremendous progress in restoring the French film industry to the place in the world market, which it enjoyed previous to 1914.

The variety of important contributions to the screen which French studios have recently made or which are now in the making is impressive. It ranges from the big, spectacular multiple reel features like "Les Miserables" and "Casanova" or ("Don Juan de Venise" as it has also been temporarily titled) made by Le Societe des Cineromans of the Pathe Consortium, to films of the type of Nathan's "La Rue De La Paix," which as its name implies portrays the up-to-the-minute world of fashion.

"Les Miserables" is already in America, and will be released by Carl Laemmle of Universal. "Casanova" has been completed and has already been viewed privately the first cutting bringing it to about fourteen reels.

It is said to be a most sensational production, both in its vivid dramatic episodes and in the big spectacular effects secured. Jean Sapene, head of the Societe des Cineromans, and Louis Nalpas, his production director-in-chief and art director, are elated over what they declare will prove to be the screen sensation of the year in France.

Nathan's fashion film will show the newest creations from the Paris coutouriers, built around a story which presents the showrooms of the famous Rue De La Paix in all their glory and feminine loveliness, together with the great summer fashion display at Deauville. Andree Lafayette and Suzy Pierson, two popular French actresses, are the women stars.

At Joinville, where the great studios of the Societe des Cineromans are located, Marcel l'Herbier, the distinguished producer, is working in association with Louis Nalpas on "Le Diable Au Coeur," a satiric comedy drama, that promises to be a masterpiece of exquisite Gallic humor and near tragedy.

Another feature recently finished here also, of which great things are expected is the elaborately staged and artistically directed "Princess Masha," a dramatic story of Russian high life and the intrigues which networked it in the days of the Czars. Like "Michael Strogoff," the Louis Nalpas production already seen on the screens of America, the "Princess Masha" has many superb and luxurious settings, vividly contrasting with the sordid environment of the Russian peasants of the period. The theme of the story is said to be most melodramatic.

The French public regard Jean Sapene, who is the publisher of the Paris Le Matin, as well as being the head and front of the Societe des Cineromans, as the savior of the French film industry. Since his name has been identified with the Pathe Consortium, originally the owner of the Societe des Cineromans, film production activity in France has taken a tremendous stride ahead.

A dynamic personality and a tireless executive, M. Sapene, is a power in French government circles and it is largely because of his efforts that French film producers are receiving the fullest official co-operation and support in re-establishing French motion pictures in the world market.

Louis Nalpas, eminent French regisseur and art director, who is M. Sapene's chief of staff and upon whom the responsibility for the activities at the big film-making plant at Joinville largely rests, has long been one of France's foremost creative film producers. It is to him that M. Sapene looks most importantly for the results, which it is his ambition to bring about for the French film industry and to date the progress made has been surely satisfactory.

When they are ready to show "Casanova," which has taken many months of painstaking work in the studio and which necessitated taking the entire company to Venice, where, with the Italian government's co-operation, eight days alone were spent in photographing scenes in the famed Place de St. Mark in front of the historic cathedral, it is no secret that M. Sapene expects to give his confreres in the industry here and abroad something of a surprise.

Gorgeous and supremely dramatic are the words which have been used to describe this picture by those who have been privileged to see parts of it privately. Certainly it should do much to attract attention to France's growing importance as a factor in the world film market.

A recent announcement that M. Natan, director of Le Rapide-Film, is to produce a picture depicting the life of France's beloved heroine and martyr, "Joan Of Arc," has aroused much enthusiasm. Jean-Jose Frappa, the novelist, is writing the scenario, upon which he has been busy for upwards of a year. He is the first of eight prominent French authors, who have banded themselves together to write for the films. The cast will be entirely French.

The producer of "Joan of Arc" will be Marco de Gastyne, the noted artist who won the coveted Prix de Rome for painting. He previously produced Pierre Benoit's "La Chatelaine du Liban," which was very popular in France, and at present is engaged in making two films, "Mon Coeur au Ralenti" and "The Madonna of the Sleeping Cars" for International Films.

A film on the life of Frederic Chopin the composer, is also under way for the Societe des Films Historiques, which has already produced the French successes "Le Miracle Des Loups" and "Le Joueur d'Echecs."

In Indo-China, Jacques Feyder, another noted French producer, is making a film adaptation of Pierre Benoit's "Leper King."

The revival of the French film industry would amaze anyone, who had not kept closely in touch with its most recent developments. America will do well to observe its future progress with a sympathetic eye. A closer contact and more intimate understanding will bring rewards to the film industries of both nations.

Foreign Representation

How Motion Pictures Are Marketed and Handled Abroad

By Edward Auger

CONDITIONS in the European market at this time, with the definite trend away from American pictures, if there is indeed not a positive prejudice against them, makes it seem not inadvisable to present some facts about foreign organizations and their methods in the presentation, sales and distribution of motion pictures.

These facts, of course, are familiar to all who know the overseas market, but may be more or less informative to the rest of the industry.

Great Britain, unquestionably, is today America's biggest market outside its own confines, both in the number of theatres, nearly 4,000, and in its gross revenue to the distributor.

The customary practice here is to ship a print of a picture to England almost concurrently with its pre-view showing in the United States.

There it is given a careful viewing by the technical staff of the British branch or agent of the American concern and is prepared for presentation to the British showmen. This presentation generally is made in a first class London theatre before an invited audience of English exhibitors and critics of the various trade papers.

Some of the more important distributors customarily immediately arrange other trade shows in other exchange centers like Liverpool, Manchester, Glasgow, etc.

Pictures are sold under the "block booking" system a series of ten or twenty pictures, and in some instances, even more, ordinarily being sold at one time. This practice has come into general usage because of the economies effected for all concerned.

Selling costs in England, just as they are here, are extremely high and anything which will tend to reduce them is welcomed. Block booking is one of these things and though the practice has doubtless many disadvantages, its benefits both to the distributor and exhibitor are such that only something revolutionary will probably be sufficient to change it.

Under these conditions a film presented today may not be released for a year or more. The only exception to this rule is in the case of the super-feature. This type of production always finds a ready market and generally may be assured of a release within a few months of its premiere showing.

Rental first run prices range from one to two hundred pounds sterling, per picture. Specials are usually sold on a percentage basis with a minimum guarantee.

Oftentimes a special will receive early bookings on the condition that the exchange consents to cancel one of their dates or pay for the picture replaced.

As many as fifty prints are often used on a high class special feature.

Instances of specials grossing from fifty to one hundred and fifty thousand pounds may be cited, but are by no means frequent. Ordinary feature productions will gross around two thousand pounds or about $10,000. The British market may be said, conservatively, to represent two thirds of the entire foreign gross earnings of any American distributing organization.

Short subjects are still regarded as "fillers," much the same as here, and do not bring in the revenue to which they are properly entitled.

Sales and the methods of recording, follow-up, accounting, booking etc., in vogue in England are about the same as here.

In Germany on account of the "Kontingent," barely forty per cent of American pictures find their way to the screen of the German exhibitors. The presentation and sales policy followed out here, however, otherwise is closely akin to that followed in England, which already has been described.

Edward Auger, American representative for many important foreign firms.

This market undoubtedly could be as profitable as the British market were it not for the heavy quota imposed. The gross business certainly would be as good.

Germany has something like 3,500 theatres and operating expenses there are generally lower than in England.

Specials frequently gross more than 400,000 gold marks or close to $100,000 with other pictures in proportion. Owing to the limitations which the quota imposes, however, only the pick of American productions are shown.

In France, which has over 2,500 motion picture theatres, the population are not overly enthusiastic picture fans. As a matter of fact in many of the smaller towns theatres only operate seven or eight months in each year. Fifteen hundred theatres are open only once or twice a week.

In most French theatres a bar is run in connection with the screen entertainment and frequently shows a larger revenue than the theatre. Apparently, in many instances, the theatre is used to draw customers to the bar, rather than the reverse.

In handling American pictures the sequence followed, begins with the re-editing of the sample prints and the titling of same for French consumption. A story is often completely changed around and cut so much that its makers would never recognize it.

This is necessitated because of the different viewpoint of the French people about a given subject or theme from the American. On this work being done intelligently depends the success or failure of the pictures in centers where the largest revenue is to be derived.

As a rule all pictures are shown to the exhibitors at a trade showing held in one of the Paris theatres before any effort is made to sell them. If the picture is a "special" it may find its way into one of the "Boulevard" long run theatres. Otherwise, it is released to the Pathe Consortium Fournier group for a simultaneous run in eight or ten theatres in various parts of Paris.

This group of French distributors is the only one which can give a picture a large number of bookings and thus can afford to pay fairly good prices.

All prints are thus used in Paris first and then are sent out to the other exchanges. Branches are operated in Lille, Marseilles, Lyon, Strassbourg, Bordeaux and also Algiers.

After selling the larger centers on a "screen and pick" basis at the higher rentals, the picture is then booked to the smaller houses on a "programme" schedule. This "programme" may consist of 10,000 or 15,000 feet at so much per foot. It generally consists of a feature, a comedy drama, a two reel comedy and a one reel filler, either an educational, travel or news reel.

Special productions have netted exchanges, when run indefinitely on the "Boulevards" from 50,000 to 200,000 francs.

Programmes have been sold for as low as 100 francs for two or three days. Certain specials, of real box office quality, have grossed as high as 500,000 francs. Ordinary features will gross around 50,000.

When it is recalled, however, that the franc today is worth only about four cents the figures are not so impressive.

United States standard systems are used by all American distributing organizations in France. However, it is found necessary to keep two sets of books, one for the French officials for the purposes of taxation, and the other to take care of the home office requirements.

Although most American companies are not getting a revenue in dollars and cents out of their French offices, commensurate with their investment, at the same time when it is considered that the majority of the theatres have not increased their admission prices in propor-

What Veteran Exhibitors

Think of the World

WHILE the proof of the pudding may be in the eating, an even more definite proof is the number of encores taken on the delectable dish, and Moving Picture World is proud of its Old Guard of loyal friends, many of whom have been subscribers almost since the inception of this publication.

There is perhaps no business in this country in which the "mortality" is greater than in the moving picture field. It is pretty close to the facts to say that in any hundred houses forty of them will have changed managers within a twelvemonth, and a considerable percentage of these will have dropped completely out of the business.

The exhibition field is a case of the survival of the fittest. Only the bred-in-the-bone showman can survive the competition and comparatively few can date their history back ten years.

For this reason Moving Picture World feels that the supreme compliment is the presence on its circulation list of so many who have been with us for periods varying from ten to nineteen years, and it appreciates the good wishes expressed in the letters appended here. Anyone can say they like Moving Picture World, but when they prove it by repeated subscriptions, it means more to us than even they realize, and we thank all those good friends who have taken the time and trouble to contribute their good wishes. These letters are from only a handful of the five hundred odd who were on the books when the tenth anniversary number was published in 1917.

Here's A Veteran

You always will be to me a friend, as for the past decade I have always been vitally interested in your wonderful talks on the theatre and projection. I feel that the moving picture public owes you an eternal debt of gratitude for the improvements which you have suggested in the showing of moving picture plays.

My first acquaintance with the Moving Picture World was in 1907, and I venture to say that you have no subscriber on your books, who has derived as much benefit from your magazine as the writer, not only from a trade's point of view, but also from a news standpoint.

"Pearsons Perfect Pictures" was started in Somerville twenty-to years ago. We started in the old Odd Fellows Hall on Winter Hill, with a seating capacity of six hundred. The theatre is still running, and making money. In the early days of our shows, we were compelled under the Massachusetts State Laws to have an intermission at the end of each twenty minutes, to allow the people's eyes to rest. As this compelled running a single reel which we dragged out for the twenty minutes, during the five minutes it was the usual thing to run illustrated songs. I think the most popular song ever put on at our theatre was "Take Me Out to the Ball Game." One night we had twenty-two encores on this particular song. That was, I think, in 1909.

The great improvement noted in pictures today from twenty years ago, is the backgrounds, setting, and photography; at that time using almost all professional theatrical stars one cannot find improvement in the acting today.

Today Somerville has eleven theatres with a seating capacity of fifteen thousand. Our newest theatre is directly opposite the Pearson's Theatre, with a seating capacity of twenty-two hundred. The populations of Somerville is about one hundred thousand, an increase of thirty-five percent in twenty years. The seating capacity of amusement houses has increased in that time, three thousand percent.

Perhaps the only thing that Somerville people regret is, that we have no Sunday shows. It has been said that from twelve to fourteen thousand people attend movie shows in adjacent towns and cities every Sunday night, who reside in Somerville. Wishing the "World" continued success.—Arthur G. Pearson, Pearson's Perfect Pictures, Somerville, Mass.

One Big Factor

In all the fourteen years that I have been reading your valuable weekly, The World, I wish to state that it has been a wonderful help to me giving me the important knowledge that we exhibitors demand.

That it is one big factor in the industry is a foregone fact.—Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

Since 1910

Your records show we have been a subscriber of the Moving Picture World since August 1, 1914. You will have to go way back of that. We started in the business in May, 1910, and a short time after that started taking the Moving Picture World and have kept it up until the present time. I have all the copies on file today. I pulled one out from the dust covered pile which showed the date of October 12, 1912, which I am mailing to you under separate cover for proof. I have taken several other picture trade books in the past, but like the Moving Picture World best as it is better suited for all purposes.—William L. Shelton, Kansas City, Mo.

Note: W. L. Shelton, is owner of Ashland Theatre, 24th and Elmwood Avenue, Kansas City, Mo. The Ashland Theatre started in a tent May 10, 1910, which was gradually changed into the present building which seats two thousand on one floor, has three stages, center stage fully equipped for any kind of acts, baby buggy garage, cry room, own emergency electric light plant. Sides open up and makes open air theatre for Summer. Free parking station for 500 cars in front of theatre.

Never Missed a Copy

For fourteen years I have been a subscriber of the Moving Picture World and for fourteen years I have been receiving very valuable information and instructions from this magazine. It is indeed a very great pleasure for me to congratulate the Moving Picture World on their 20th Anniversary.

Each week I look forward to my copy, and would certainly be lost if I did not receive it, however, I must state that during these fourteen years I have never missed a single copy.—A. R. Powell, Pollard and Highland Theatres, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

Bought, Stole and Borrowed

I want to congratulate the World on your Twentieth Anniversary. I hope the World, with the aid of Sargent and Richardson will in due time celebrate its fortieth anniversary of unexcelled service to the industry.

I am enclosing a few little exhibits just to show you that I am no spring chicken in the show business. I believe I started reading the World just about the time Richardson started his department. And I have missed very few copies since. Most of the time I have been a subscriber. For a while, I bought copies on the stand in Waco and San Antonio, stole a few copies, and borrowed a few. Missed a few during the war with France, beg pardon I mean Germany, but caught up with part of this with the aid of a file of back numbers. But have been a regular subscriber for the last seven and a half years. And nine tenths of what little I know about the business has been learned from the Moving Picture World and the various textbooks put out by the Chalmers Publishing Company.—A. W. Larmour, Manager National Theatre, Graham, Tex.

Lost Without It

Just thought I would like to congratulate you on the Twentieth Anniversary of the Moving Picture World.

I have been in the picture game here for the past fourteen years and have had the World coming every year. I have taken other trade papers, but I always stick to the World and I must say I find something helpful in every issue. Every department has something useful. I would feel lost if I didn't get the World every week.

My best wishes to all those that must work hard to get out this best of trade papers every week.—T. S. Laidman, Savoy Theatre, Birtle, Man., Canada.

An Aid to Success

Having been a subscriber to your valuable magazine for fourteen years, I wish to take this opportunity to extend my congratulations on your Twentieth Anniversary.

I have always found your criticisms fair and your information very valuable. In fact, consider my success in the motion picture business in a way due to the aid rendered by the contents of your valuable magazine.

I wish you all future success.—William H. Mack, Endwell Theatre, Johnson City, New York.

The One Best Bet

Congratulations on your 20th Anniversary. May the next twenty be even better than the past. Your paper has been a wonderful help to us for the past twelve years or more and we expect to continue to be a subscriber as long as we are in the picture game. We believe the World is the one best bet of all the trade journals.—H. B. Wells, Opera House, Newberry, South Carolina.

A Business Guide

Having opened the Palace Theatre at Gallatin, Tennessee, fourteen years ago, without any experience in the business whatsoever, I subscribed to Moving Picture World, therefore, have been a continuous subscriber for all these years. I have depended on the Moving Picture World as a guide in my business career and feel this is an opportune time to express my appreciation for the information I have received through its columns.—May Allen Roth, Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tennessee.

Keeps the Files

We are pleased to know that you are preparing your 20th Anniversary issue.

We have almost a complete library of the Moving Picture World starting with 1915, and are thus enabled to trace the development of the picture industry to the present date.

The World is much prized by us, we find it very reliable, and its criticisms correct and fair.

We wish you every success.—J. L. Stewart, Manager, Victoria Theatre, Saskatoon, Sask., Canada.

Intensely Interesting

This firm and its predecessors, as subscribers of fifteen years standing, wish to take this opportunity to congratulate Moving Picture World on its twentieth anniversary.

We keep a complete file on Moving Picture World and find its pages of paramount importance in keeping up with the news of the cinema world, while its tips on new pictures, reviews of features and comedies, and advertising and presentation aids are invaluable. Above all, Moving Picture World, is interesting, intensely so.—Harry C. Arthur, Jr., President Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., Seattle, Wash.

Oldest Woman Exhibitor

I have been a constant reader of your magazine since 1909 and it holds first place in mind for any information I might need or want. At one time I had every book for a period of 7 years. I also believe I am the oldest woman exhibitor having been in the same spot for 18 years.—(Mrs.) Georgiana V. Higgins, Elite Theatre, Crawford, Nebraska.

More Real Help

My husband, A. W. Moore, subscribed for the Moving Picture World eighteen years ago, and since his death ten years ago, I have renewed the subscription each year.

The World is a wonderful paper and a great help to me. Of all the trade journals I subscribe for, I get more real help from the World than from any other. It has played an important part in the success I have attained in the moving picture business in Grimsby.

I also extend my congratulations to the World on having reached its 20th Anniversary. All best wishes for the future success and welfare of the paper.—Bessie K. Moore, Moore's Theatre, Grimsby, Ontario.

Of Great Benefit

I note in your news columns that you are preparing an anniversary issue to be brought out on March 26.

I wish at this time to say that I have been a subscriber to the Moving Picture World for the past sixteen years, and have taken great pleasure in watching this magazine grow.

It certainly has been of great benefit to me during all those years, and I am sure that I could not get along without it.

Allow me to congratulate you on your Twentieth Anniversary, and sincerely trust that you will have continued prosperity for many years to come.—A. L. Couture, Manager, Paramount-Crown Theatre, Manchester, N. H.

From a Leader

The undersigned is pleased to be advised that he has been a reader of Moving Picture World almost from the date of the first issue, and that he has been a regular subscriber for nearly if not quite fifteen years.

He desires further to say that he holds Moving Picture World in the highest regard as a reflector of the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth in the great motion picture industry; that he has been enlightened as well as entertained by reading its contents—advertising matter as well as news, editorials and features—and, lastly, that he feels that suggestions that have come to him from time to time while reading, has enabled him to further his own business interests to such an extent that his returns on the money invested in subscriptions, must be figured—in percentage, of course, way up in the thousands.

Here's to Moving Picture World on the eve of its twentieth Anniversary. May it keep on living and prospering is the wish of George J. Schade, Owner and Manager, The Schade Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio.

An Accessory Man

Having been a subscriber to the Moving Picture World for fourteen years, I believe is sufficient evidence of my high esteem of this trade magazine. Fred C. Griswold, Griswold Machine Works, (Film Splicers), Port Jefferson, N. Y.

Still the Mainstay

To be advised by your circulation department, that I have been a subscriber to Moving Picture World, for a period of thirteen years, takes me back to the time of the old Biograph and Vitagraph days, when your publication was the mainstay of the exhibitor, as it is today.

During these years, I have seen your journal grow in magnitude and scope, without noise, clatter or clamor, to the high position it maintains with the exhibitors.

Hoping Moving Picture World may continue to grow and give the good service it always has to the exhibitor.—Chas. F. Kear, Opera House, Minersville, Pa.

An Early Help

You inform me that I have been a subscriber for the past 19 years.

I note by your letterhead that J. P. Chalmers founded it in 1907 so I must have missed the first year.

Perhaps I did not miss very much as the first copies I received were about only eight pages, but believe me those eight had more value than the present larger issues, for at that time it was about the only aid to be had.

When I read of some of the scary things that appear from time to time regarding how the big producers are "gobbling" up the small ones and soon we exhibitors will be at the mercies of the large organization, I wonder what they would have thought of the old Pictures Patents Co. (or Old General Flimco) as Mr. Carl Laemmle called it at that time.—C. B. Burkhardt, Pastime Theatre, Homer, Ill.

From a Mayor

Have just returned from New York and was reading about your Anniversary issue. February 1st, 1910, I read your first copy of Moving Picture World and I haven't missed reading an issue since this date which covers a period of 17 years.

I have always considered the World as the leading journal as to moving picture information and I send in my check every year before time in order to never miss a copy and I keep your journal on file for a whole year for reference to anything I want to know about pictures.

When I started in the moving picture business I quit the drug business of which I was a graduate in pharmacy and my friends thought I was making a big mistake as they didn't consider this a legitimate business. I thought it was so I proceeded and I proved to the community that it was and I have held all the offices in the city that requires honor, etc., such as President of the Chamber of Commerce, Boy Scout Council, Rotary Club, and many others and have just been elected to Mayor of our city and I have been serving as Alderman of my ward for some time.

The point I was making is the change of conditions as to when I started in business and what it is today. I know you well remember these times as I have read in your paper many times where you were encouraging every exhibitor to take active interest in every community affair and I have lived up to this and I have made a big success in my show and have varied other interests in my city.—Sidney M. Nutt, New Central Theatre, Hot Springs National Park, Ark.

A Business Proposition

I note that on March 26, this year you will issue an Anniversary issue completing your 20th year. Being one of your oldest subscribers I want to tell you that during the fifteen years that I have been getting the World each week not missing one copy. It has been not only a pleasure each week but a good business proposition as you have had at times articles that were a big help to my business. I have been an exhibitor here in Russellville, Kentucky, for 15 years, and I hope that we can both remain longer in our different occupations. This reminds that the years are slipping along. Here's wishing you all the luck possible in the future.—A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Ky.

Makes for Success

It affords me great pleasure to be able to congratulate you upon this your 20th Anniversary of your wonderful Moving Picture World.

I have been a constant reader of the "World" for the past twelve years and couldn't think of being without a copy on my desk, handy, at all times.

Your success has been the success of many a theatre manager. That the Moving Picture World continue to be with us for another twenty years is my sincere wish.—E. G. Gidley, Manager, Georgia Amusement Enterprises, Athens, Ga.

Really Essential

Accept my sincere congratulations on the Twentieth Anniversary of your valued publication.

I have been a subscriber to the World for at least fourteen years, and I believe, to keep alive to current conditions, a careful study of its pages, is really essential. In a word, we regard it as indispensable.

All good wishes for continued success.—F. G. Spencer, F. G. Spencer, Ltd., Amusements, Saint John, N. B.

For Eighteen Years

I do not know of any better way of expressing our opinion of your publication than to state we have been a regular subscriber for almost 18 years.

Had it not been of material assistance to us in the conduct of our business, I certainly would not have been interested to this extent.—F. C. Smoot, General Manager, Smoot Amusement Co., Parkersburg, West Virginia.

None Can Compare

I have been connected with the moving picture business and have subscribed for the Moving Picture World sixteen years out of its twenty years of life service to the profession.

I started in business at the very bottom with nothing but nerve and a determination to succeed and through thick and thin have stuck to the game till success has crowned my efforts. I attribute my good fortune and business success greatly to the guiding spirit, information, and enthusiasm received from the "World" magazine. And by persevering from the bottom, I venture the assertion that today I am an outstanding professional and financial success second to none in Ohio.

I wish to say that I have critically read and compared several other moving picture magazines with the World and can truthfully say that none of them compare with the World in my estimation for a single moment. In general news, artistic display, high character dependable advertising and general detail information connected with the motion picture business Moving Picture World stands unrivaled, a glorious past of unparalleled usefulness to the progress of high class and a clean moving picture world. And as the past is, so may the World's future be bright and prosperous. We have every reason to believe the future work of the Moving Picture World will continue to serve the public in a high class, sincere, and honest manner.—Henry L. Binder, Orpheum Theatre, Xenia, Ohio.

Is Always Welcome

As you are about to issue your 20th Anniversary number of the Moving Picture World I would like to say a few words in regard to your magazine.

During all the fourteen years which I have been a subscriber I have always found it a great pleasure to receive and read your magazine as it contains good sound information in regard to the motion picture business.

516 FIFTH AVENUE, N.Y.

TWENTY years ago the copyrighting of a motion picture was a matter of considerable expense. There was no provision for the copyright of motion pictures as such, and entry was to be had only as a "photograph," and this required the production of a bromide print of the entire subject, special long rolls of sensitized paper being provided by the Eastman company for this purpose.

Then some brilliant legal mind evolved a new idea. Copyright was merely the record of priority: evidence upon which a suit might be based. Invasion of trademark was something more readily punished, and for a long time the familiar A-B in a circle, designating Biograph, the Vitagraph eagle, the Lubin bell, the Essanay Indian and similar devices were placed in some more or less inconspicuous place in the set and photographed on every frame. Palace and hovel alike included the trademark in its furnishings and the same device grew on the desert sagebush and on the trees of the formal Italian Garden. The only trouble was that even in the most inconspicuous place the trade mark stuck up in the picture like a bandaged thumb.

Meanwhile there arose a terrific demand for copyright for the motion picture scenario. Authors seemed to feel that "Copyright" was a magic word that would prevent all stealing of ideas, and they stormed the Copyright Office, only to be met with the courteous explanation that there was no provision made for copyrighting manuscript before publication. Many authors used the word anyhow, and editors only laughed when the accompanying letter solemnly warned them that the story had been copyrighted and could be stolen only on pain of Governmental intervention.

Generally, the stories thus protected were not worth stealing, for intelligent writers knew the bulk of the studios to be honest, and only the illiterate sought this tenuous protection. Some few important scripts actually were copyrighted in the only possible way, as "books."

Later on there sprang up for a brief period publications which professed to give copyright through publication of a hundred or so scripts as an issue of a magazine under blanket copyright. Just how much protection this offered is problematical. The matter never was put to legal test, for none of these published stories ever were stolen, though it is probable that they served to freshen the imagination of the studio hacks.

Always watchful to give the public the fullest possible service, Mr. Thorvald Solberg, the highly efficient Register of Copyrights, was working upon a scheme of registration for authors when the bottom suddenly dropped out of the scenario market and the demand for copyright as quickly subsided.

This was to have taken the form of an official identification of the script, which was then to be returned to the author, since the Copyright Office is so badly overcrowded that every device is being employed to conserve space. The yearly output of the scenario writers of that day would have completely swamped the office.

But meanwhile Mr. Solberg, realizing the need for better protection for produced plays, taking counsel with those whose advice could aid him, had worked out a system for the copyright of produced film under a dual classification.

In the revised copyright law provision was made under classification L for "Motion picture photoplays" and under bracket M for "Motion pictures other than photoplays." There was further provision made for motion pictures "not reproduced in copies for sale."

Copyright

The Facts About the Law And Its Provisions

How well this work was planned is best evidenced by the fact that no changes have been made in the law and none seem to be demanded.

In the first classification the film can be sent to the Copyright Office, there marked for identification and returned to the maker after the proper records had been entered.

Pictures not reproduced in copies for sale are even more simply entered. This bracket calls for a description of such a photoplay with one frame from each scene for the purpose of identification, while in the case of film used to illustrate lectures the procedure merely required a description and two cuts from the film.

Under the law, provision is made for the return to the custody of the holder of copyright of the identified material, and this procedure is followed in the case of motion pictures, not only because of the inflammability of the film but because of the woeful lack of storage space.

Under Mr. Solberg's direction the Copyright Office has been acutely sensitive to public demand, and the requirements of the film producers were met as soon as the demand became apparent. Mr. Solberg even went out of his way to seek to aid the scenario writers, but he naturally cannot traverse the essence of the Copyright Law which requires publication as a preliminary to registration, and "publication" in the case of the picture is film production and not the preparation of the scenario.

There is no red tape around the Copyright Office and the copyright requirements were met; and met fully some fourteen years ago.

Two bills have been introduced in Congress designed to change the entire system to conform to that obtaining in European countries where copyright obtains on the creation of the work without any formality whatever. Such a bill will give entrance into the Copyright Union which requires this proviso.

Registration then becomes a legal formality to protect a title already created, affording legal evidence as to date. Both of these bills, neither of which was able to reach the floor, provide copyright for "scenarios," further described as "motion picture continuities."

It is provided in these that where Copyright transgression has unwittingly been committed, nominal damages are awarded. The more radical of these two bills, that presented by Representative Vestal, provides that "for the purpose of avoiding imposition and so-called literary blackmail," no damages will be awarded where it is shown that the infringer was not aware of infringement or where he has been imposed upon by someone other than an employee. In such a case an injunction issues without assessed damages. This does not apply, however, where copyright has been entered for registration.

Probably no bill, when passed, will materially alter the present efficient procedure of the copyright office. Legal phases will still require the usual registration, though this is no longer made obligatory.

Short Subject Takes Its Place in Pictures

THE motion picture industry was founded upon the popularity of subjects less than a reel in length. Twenty years ago the one reel standard seemed a fixed quantity of subject measurement, but natural growth and improvement in subject quality presently begot venturesome experiments with longer footage per subject. As the two-reeler gave place to the three, and that, in turn stepped into the discard as a standard, the five-reel length for features caused the old standby, the single and two-reel picture, to become a "filler" important rather as a reel or so to enable the exhibitor to round out his show to an ordained length. But far-seeing leaders realized that the opprobrium of "filler" was no criticism of the short film's popularity and men like E. W. Hammons and the Pathe organization began building into these brief comedies and dramas the same standards of quality that held sway in the feature and super-feature classes, with the result that the "filler" has again disappeared, the short subject was often proved to be the more important feature of an entertainment, and the public, far from accepting the short subject as so much extra film, has accorded to it the popularity it enjoyed in the days before there were any features of the multiple reel variety.

From Will H. Hays

My heartiest congratulations to the Moving Picture World upon its twentieth birthday anniversary. Your constructive support of the motion picture industry through these twenty important years has contributed much to its success. May you have happy returns of the day.

WM. H. HAYS.

When The Picture Star Rose In The East

"GIDDAP!" shouted the first "movie" director, and the first star on record—a stallion—cantered down the race track which was the first "location," to break the series of strings which snapped the lenses of a line of still cameras in the "studio" alongside the track, and thus record his own "action." In this way, about 1872, Muybridge took pictures of motion and gave new impetus to the effort to achieve pictures in motion from which has grown an industry whose studios are now vast cities with complete electric lighting plants, with bungalows for stars, veritable wonderlands dedicated to that same effort—making pictures depicting motion.

At first in black draped recesses wherein whitened figures moved, then out in the sunlight, the experimenters made little runs of motion, developing their processes to the point where, when it became commercially possible to record on continuous strips of celluloid the immature forerunners of our modern photoplay, they found it necessary to displace the laboratory with a less restricted environment.

The motion picture camera evolved from the still camera; it was quite natural for the first studios to follow the lines of the photographer's light-room and laboratory. Of these, the earliest in this country was that built by Thomas A. Edison at his plant in the Oranges, in New Jersey. "Black Maria" it was called, sombre in aspect, simple in furnishings, though complete for that early time, the Black Maria had one feature which was an innovation; it was built on a turntable so that the entire structure could be turned to follow the sun and control the light.

Other producers of the simple little runs of action which satisfied public demand in early days were content with simple floorings set up in laboratory yards, such as Dave Horsley (the first real Independent producer) had in Bayonne, New Jersey. A little steel hut to house (and hide) the camera was the only addition to the simple "flat" that constituted the production ensemble of that day.

Light was the great need and sunshine its source. Rooftop studios became popular. On such a spot J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith produced some of Vitagraph's finest early films. Their studio, atop the building at 140 Nassau Street, was duplicated in general by the American Bioscope and Mutoscope Company's set-up on a roof at Broadway and 13th Street, and by Edison's rooftop plant on 21st street. From adjoining buildings an absorbed office audience with spyglasses proved to be the forerunner of the modern "visitors gallery."

But the New York climate in winter was treacherous and sunless, sleety, slushy days were pretty hard on the production forces, and as soon as inventive genius adapted indoor light sources, the indoor studio became a reality, if more the realization of a nightmare than of an aesthetic dream.

Biograph, the outcome of the Bioscope-Mutoscope organization, began its career before simple flats lit by rows of mercury vapor lights in an old mansion at 11 East 14th Street, where, in the ballroom of the once social center, some of the present time stars began their careers. Dressing rooms were few and scantily furnished but a great improvement over the "location" dressing room of that era, which was often, for the men, a screen of other players in front of the one who dressed, or for the ladies, a room in a handy farmhouse, begged for momentary use from a kindly resident.

Kalem had an apology for a studio in the Kodak Building on West Twenty-third street, but this was so inconvenient and so awkward of access that little work was done there. Most of the pictures were made wholly outdoors until Kalem House was erected in Jacksonville, for Winter use, the only studio on record to be fully equipped with fly screens. They worked in the south during the Winter and in the Rockaway Valley, in New Jersey, in the summer, where most of their railroad plays were made. It was a long time before they poined the Pacific squadron.

So firmly rooted had the demand for photoplays, real stories as opposed to the former "chases" and trick subjects, become by 1906 that Vitagraph established the first genuine motion picture studio, that is, a building both designed and equipped for the purpose. In this studio in Flatbush, Brooklyn, New York, the latest improvements in light, dressing rooms, laboratory equipment and scenery manipulation were incorporated, even though costumes were still hard to get and a director once resorted to the expedient of simulating men's tights for a mob, by the use of brown paint.

Edison followed the studio urge by putting up a magnificent structure—for those days—in the Bronx, to be followed by Lubin in Philadelphia, and not very long afterward Biograph erected a still larger building in upper New York. The equipment was improving steadily, although glass was still hard to get and Thanouser, when he built his New Rochelle plant, had to face a glassless studio for some time in the heart of winter. He found his studio snow-filled one morning and decided to capitalize the white mantle on his sets by inserting in the film a title, "In Siberia"—but Old Sol melted the snow during the day and the balance of the action had to have a quick shift to a warmer clime, at least in a subtitle.

Indoors or out, the simple "sets" of that time began to emphasize its inadequacy. The steppes of Siberia on a flat back drop looked wierd enough with the shadows of some careless players showing on them, as is said to have happened in a Biograph production. For some time past the producers had been using the Fort Lee Ferry to get to New Jersey, where complacent householders or estate owners could be coaxed to loan or rent the use of their homes for exterior shots, where the tide-flattened seashore made a wonderful western desert, where cows, farmland and jungle could be had handily. Coytesville and Fort Lee, at first popular as day's excursion jaunts, soon grew to the proportions of a young producing center with studios of their own. World Film, Universal and many others established plants in one or the other town.

But in the meanwhile, to be exact in the Fall of 1908, Kalem had decided to have real sunshine all winter and new backgrounds: a full producing unit was sent to an estate near Jacksonville, Florida, and so popular did the move prove that Lubin followed and Florida soon became the winter Mecca for the producers.

But Florida suffered from two handicaps. The country was too flat, and there was too little scenic variety. They were miles of seashore, but no rocks, a trip to the Carolinas was necessary for mountain shots, the flora was entirely too tropical, there was a dearth of city locations, with less than half a dozen tall buildings and mostly wooden structures.

Music and The Movies

By Major Edward Bowes

Managing Director, Capitol Theatre, New York

IF there still remains any doubt of the established fact that motion pictures and their presentation to the public have made magic and gargantuan strides during the past two decades, one has only to cut back to the simple, crude 1907, and then return to presentation of films in the elaborate de luxe form which it enjoys today. The motion picture itself in those early pioneer days was sufficient of a novelty and a wonder to draw to itself a new and interested public. In the twenty years of its development the art of presenting the motion picture to the public has, of necessity, made similar strides forward, until today we find institutions and organizations created and maintained on a scale and standard never before dreamed of.

The picture itself remains, as always, the nucleus of the program, but surrounding it is a program carefully worked out in its maze of intricate details, having as its backbone a symphony orchestra; a ballet corps; soloists of distinction; film editors; musical arrangers and copyists; and an extensive and comprehensive music library upon which to draw.

An important milestone in the artistic development of motion picture entertainment was recently passed by the Capitol Theatre when sixteen additional musicians took their places in the orchestra of the Capitol Theatre. For a long time the world's largest theatre orchestra, the Capitol Grand Orchestra, under the direction of David Mendoza, now assumes the ambitious and proportions of the standard symphony orchestra.

The engagement of soloists of distinction; the dropping of hackneyed compositions from the orchestral repertoire; the inclusion of finer and less popular compositions mark some of the steps which have led to the present development.

The encouragement of musical taste in our audiences is something to which we have dedicated all the resources of our organization and it has proved a gratifying and absorbing study. In the earlier presentation of musical programs, it was necessary to make a certain appeal to audiences through compositions which were easily digestible or those which possessed a rousing climax through the complement of brass and percussion.

Gradually we outgrew the old standards. On a chart which I keep, is recorded a list of the overtures played, with my rating of their popularity. Soon those which were least popular were given an increased percentage and those which at one time were sure-fire successes were discarded as being too hackneyed.

I have found that audiences are no longer content merely with being emotionally stirred by music. They are becoming cognizant of the potentialities of the orchestra. They recognize the relative values of the various sections and combinations; the importance of balance and unity.

It is in recognition of this esthetic appreciation that we have increased the personnel of the Capitol Grand Orchestra so that it reaches symphonic standards.

Our policy of offering to motion picture audiences supplementary entertainment conceived and executed along the highest artistic standards has been further strengthened by the increase of the ballet corps to a permanent membership of forty-five dancers. These weekly ballets represent the evolution of a new and individual ballet form which I have worked out with Chester Hale, our ballet director, whose extensive study of the ballet in this country and under European masters make him ideally qualified for this post. The execution of these ideas; the development of versatility and adaptability in the dancers; the perfection of a unity and precision by the performers have been made possible by the creation of a ballet school conducted in conjunction with the theatre. Here young dancers showing the native requirements necessary for the diverse and strenuous nature of the work, are trained by Mr. Hale along the special lines of the theatre's ballet and from here recruits are taken for the stage performances. It is this constant ensemble practice and study in conjunction with their performances on the stage that has developed the versatility in the dancers necessary for the changing nature of the ballets from week to week. It has likewise made it possible to present after only a three-day rehearsal a new ballet each week that is complete in every detail of conception and performance.

Playing Tunes for the Cutting Room By Mac Cullum Ferrell

SOME years ago motion picture directors and producers had a fetish to which they paid blind devotion. This fetish was a word—and to most of them it meant no more than the mere word—whose name was

"tempo." Indefinitely, tempo was supposed to be the contrast in the speed of the action of a picture between scenes of varying meaning and a certain acceleration in the action that culminated in the climax.

A director was supposed to have a God-given gift for feeling "tempo" and injecting it into a picture, whereupon the film was a big success.

I suppose that D. W. Griffith had many a quiet smile up his sleeve when he heard some of the wise talk about "tempo." To him "tempo" was an exact science. It was the technique which he developed to make his pictures live and breathe not only to the life of his characters but to the pulse of his audience.

More recently a new fetish has been hailed by motion picture producers.

Again it is a word—"Rhythm."

Apparently it means just a little—actually it means just as much as "Tempo."

Many reams have been written with the word

"Rhythm" scattered promiscuously here and there on subjects pertaining to motion pictures. Exponents of "Rhythm" have appeared with pictures. And these pictures have violated every principle of rhythm. Possibly they have worked on the theory that exception proves the rule.

Any way these proponents have talked this "Rhythm" so knowingly that they have sold the idea to highbrow critics and to the public—although what "Rhythm" in motion pictures actually is, is away over their heads.

Well, D. W. Griffith's original axiom that the scenes of a picture may be synchronized to a certain beat, or measure, which may be accelerated or retarded to sway the emotions of the spectators is still the true foundation of all "Rhythm" in motion picture production.

With this principle as a foundation "Rhythm" is actually capable of as many different developments as any other manifestation of rhythm.

Some four or five years ago I became interested in the study of rhythm as applied to motion picture production when I discovered, more or less by accident in editing a picture, that rhythm may be made so pronounced that "audio-delusion" may be obtained through a proper grouping of the various elements of causative, characteristic and objective motion, timed to synchronize to its associated sound.

"By 'audio-delusion' I mean that the perception of the rhythm is so strong that an audience will actually believe they hear the sound. This is not so strange when it is considered that the ancient Greeks, several thousand years ago found out that they could imitate by the rhythm of their verses, numerous sounds—the babble of brooks, the thunder of storms, the clash of battle, etc., etc. In fact, these same ancients so perfected rhythm, that they were able to imitate the several human emotions in addition to the rhythmic sounds of nature, or of industry. My own experiences show that this is similarly possible in motion pictures.

So much of motion and sound is rhythmic in itself that this is possible. Rhythm is movement or sound characterized by the regular recurrence of beats. Rhythmic effects in motion pictures are obtained, then, through an analysis of the several Rhythmic Motion Cycles which characterize the movement or sound, and the comparative timing of their beats. In practice, the elements of the motion or sound are separated into their "causative," "characteristic," and "objective" elements and these are timed to synchronize with the comparative length of the beats of the Rhythmic Motion Cycle.

A Rhythmic Motion Cycle must be as mathematically definite as the revolution of a wheel. In fact, if the revolution of a wheel is a part of such a cycle, then the wheel must turn to

Film Boards of Trade

FILM Boards of Trade are the field organization of the motion picture industry.

By C. C. Pettijohn

All the way from Calgary where Hoot Gibson made a picture not long ago down to Havana, Cuba, Film Boards of Trade are in operation. Thirty-two Film Boards of Trade in the United States, six in Canada, one in Mexico, and one in Cuba, are busy, working out the problems of distribution and exhibition of motion pictures through the exercise of the greatest of economic principles, "commonsense methods."

Four hundred and eighteen men compose the membership of the 32 Boards in the United States. Add 59 to the number for Canada, 10 for Mexico and 7 for Cuba and you have the total membership of 557, a right good number of branch managers to represent the national producing and distributing companies, the national distributors, and the State-rights distributors in handling the countless details of mutual interest arising from the daily job of motion pictures.

When anyone asks me why Film Boards of Trade, why Arbitration Boards, why Uniform Contracts, I go back five years for my answer. At that time, every distributing company had a contract different from the contract of every other distributing company. It was impossible for theatre owners to keep familiar with the terms and conditions of many of the contracts. There was unnecessarily confusion, misunderstanding, and lost motion. Now we have the uniform exhibition contract, which has evolved from patient conferences between distributors, and exhibitors, a working, sound contract of value to both the distributor and the exhibitor. The machinery has been set up, kept oiled, and is working.

We used to have countless disputes. We still do. But the difference now is that we have machinery set up and working to handle them without resorting to law courts with the necessary delays and costs, and bad feeling resulting.

Thirty three joint Boards of Arbitration are functioning before which all disputes and misunderstandings growing out of any of the terms of the uniform exhibition contract may be quickly, economically, and pleasantly settled.

Each Board of Arbitration is composed of three exhibitors, appointed by the local Exhibitors' Association, and three distributors, appointed by the Film Board of Trade. In case of a tie vote a seventh arbitrator is elected by the Arbitration Board itself.

Law suits have been reduced to a minimum.

Last year 12,566 trade disputes involving approximately $3,000,000 were kept out of court by the use of the arbitration clauses and thus the industry was insured against the acrimony and ill will, all too often engendered by law suits, as well as against the cost of trials. Motion pictures are perishable goods in the sense that their success is largely dependent upon timeliness of presentation. The public wants the picture immediately after it is ready for the screen. Arbitration speeds exhibition and meets this requirement.

Out of the vast number of cases involved—and this is proof enough of the character, ability and integrity of the arbitrators—only 25 called for the seventh arbitrator. In other words, the original boards made 5,451 awards in 5,476 cases which actually reached the arbitration boards without being previously and amicably settled.

The opinion of the American Arbitration Association as reflected in the statement of Lee J. Eastman, chairman of the Trade Board of that society, is illuminating. Mr. Eastman says: "For the third year, the motion picture is setting an example to other organizations and to the business world generally, of the most inexpensive and speediest way in which to keep their business relations in an equitable and amicable basis. No other single trade organization approximates the volume of cases arbitrated by the motion picture industry."

The Film Boards of Trade now devote themselves to their own business. They have their committees, each with its specified work. They bring more cordial relations to the motion picture industry's inner forces, they are constantly at work raising the standards of business practices, protecting all parties to the contracts, and doing together all that is of mutual benefit. Committees on fire prevention, on public relations—an increasingly important work which these field workers are performing excellently—on free pictures for charitable institutions and public welfare generally are now operating.

Notable progress has been made by the Film Boards of Trade throughout the country along conservation lines. Safety to life and safety to property are fully provided for in the activities of the Safety Committee of the Film Boards of Trade.

These committees composed of members of the Film Boards rotate in such a way that all members serve at one time or another.

They inspect once each month each and every motion picture exchange in the United States and Canada. This is done scientifically and systematically.

The policy of the Film Board of Trade? Frankness, I'd say. "Put your feet under the table, argue this matter out." That is the big thing. Let the pros and cons fly. When you do that petty bickerings melt away like snow flakes in front of the blast furnace. Confidence and trust supersedes suspicion and misunderstanding. Everywhere men are coming to the realization that disputes can be amicably adjusted without dragging in outsiders. The distributor wants a pleased customer, the exhibitors wants to deal with a satisfied wholesaler. Both realize that without the other he is helpless. Exhibition and distribution are inevitably linked together, each directly dependent upon the other.

The pride I feel in the motion picture industry is based upon a decade's connection with it. And nothing gives me more pride in it than the consciousness of increasing spirit of professionalism that is coming—a sense through the rank and file of the industry that this is a great institution, and that we are custodians of one of the greatest forces for good in the world.

We are in the entertainment business. That's a business of paramount consequence and importance to the world. We keep the world happy. Do that well and many of the world's ills are forgotten. What is more we have the chance to help the unfortunate of the world. The Film Boards of Trade are doing that.

Hundreds of institutions for the unfortunate shut-ins, helpless little children, old men and old women, prisoners, the sick, the halt, and the deaf are getting motion picture service regularly. Many of them get pictures without cost; others at only costs of transportation. The value of this service cannot be estimated in dollars. Without added cost to our operation, it has been made possible in every state. The motion picture industry today, because of this service, is probably the greatest private charity provider in America.

A thousand words of mine would not tell half so well what this service means to the unfortunates as two letters which recently have come to my desk. One is from the boys of St. Vincent's Home in Denver, Colorado, addressed to Duke W. Dunbar Secretary of the Denver Film Board of Trade and it reads in part: "You know we could never see a movie if it wasn't for you. Movies cost money. We haven't any papas to give us nickles like other little boys. The weeks we don't have movies seem like months, with thirty one days, too."

The second is from Holy Cross, Alaska, from people who travel fifty miles through snow and ice for a glimpse at the great world beyond. A sentence reads: "Who would not appreciate the productions of the historic and current events that took place thousands of miles from our snowland homes and which we would never have imagined had we never seen them on the screen? We enjoyed the review of the West Point Cadets almost as much as the Prince of Sweden himself. We were also very much honored to meet Mrs. Coolidge of whom we had heard so often and read but whom we had never seen, etc."

Yes, sir! Film Boards of Trade are a great institution.

UNIVERSAL PICTURES CORPORATION

Q On the occasion of Moving Picture World's Twentieth Anniversary of publishing service to the motion picture industry, Universal is celebrating its Twenty-first Year of vital importance to that industry.

Just as the history-studded pages of Moving Picture World speak in clear and unmistakable language of the part played by Carl Laemmle and Universal in the growth of this amazing industry—

So, too, will future volumes of this publication abound with brilliant chapters of Universal Achievement, Universal Pace-Setting, Universal Independence.

For Universal Pictures Corporation, twenty-one years old, is only on the threshold of its greatest accomplishments.

And remember—

There's a Twenty-one Year RECORD OF PERFORMANCE back of every Universal statement!

THE STEADINESS

(No. 526—Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle)

THE more I see of other pictures, the prouder I am of Universal. Most pictures are pretty good nowadays. The percentage of really poor ones is quite small. Now and then some company lets a terrific lemon loose upon the market, but that is a rare event compared with the records of former years.

Several companies turn out consistently good pictures, but the vital point is that Universal's are BETTER and more CONSISTENTLY SO.

I make it a point to see other pictures as often as I can steal the time. Very, very seldom do I find myself saying "I wish that picture had come from the Universal studios."

The steadiness of Universal in its product, the year in and year out delivering of the goods is, to my way of thinking, one of the greatest safeguards for exhibitors. It is an insurance policy—an asset!

The importance of this achievement is emphasized by the fact that Universal produces and distributes every kind of picture from the very greatest of super features down to the "short stuff." So great is the variety that hundreds upon hundreds of exhibitors, especially those in the smaller communities, live and thrive by the showing of Universal pictures and NO OTHERS.

OF UNIVERSAL!

nmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation)

We have standardized our business to the very highest point to which we dare to standardize it!

The quality is always sure and steady. The quantity is always ample and steady. And yet there is an infinite variety of subjects and themes—a very careful mixture of drama, comedy and all other desirable elements.

Universal is not an "in-and-outer." It is something you can always put your finger on.

I wish you would take the time—even you regular Universal customers—to see other pictures. I know of no better way to keep you delighted with the supply you are getting from Universal.

I wish you could compare—as I do—the reception given by the fans and by the critics to Universal pictures and then to others. Then you would say—as I do—that the more you see of other pictures the prouder you are of Universal.

In a business which tosses and upheaves every week or so—a business which contains more of the unexpected than any other business—it is a good thing for the exhibitor to know about the unswerving steadiness of Universal!

Away Back In 1909

Universal Began With The World

THE twentieth anniversary of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD not only calls attention to the accomplishments of the first trade paper, but throws into vivid relief the history and accomplishments of the film companies who have used its advertising columns from the beginning. Universal's first advertisement in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD was taken out in April, 1909. It has been a consistent advertiser ever since. It has grown in size, importance and solidity with the paper.

From the standpoint of the number of moving pictures made and released, Universal leads by a wide margin all moving picture companies ever organized. No company in the history of moving pictures has released anything like as many pictures, or sold anything like as much footage as Universal. Furthermore, it has such a running start that it is highly improbable that any company in the future will ever release as many individual pictures as Universal, which is piling up its footage in a constantly increasing crescendo with the years. Last year, for instance, it released 359 subjects, including Supers, Jewels, Blue Streak Westerns, Serials, Series, Stern Brothers Comedies, Gumps, Two-Reel Westerns, Bluebirds and News Reels. This coming year it will release 372 subjects, an increase of 13 productions.

The first producing company of Universal was the old Imp, organized by Carl Laemmle in 1909, three years after he had opened his first theatre on Milwaukee Avenue in Chicago. Its first picture was entitled "Hiawatha" and was made partly in Milwaukee and partly in New York. Today it would be classed one of the shortest of the shorts. It was a one-reeler. Nevertheless, it was a feature and it started Carl Laemmle on his producing career. The Imp Company developed into Universal which was formed in 1912, and with that Universal pictures took on some semblance of their present form and size.

The entire industry felt quite important when Laemmle sent King Baggot and company, under the management of Julius Stern and the direction of Herbert Brenon to England to make "Ivanhoe," a gigantic feature in four reels.

The "Uncle Tom's Cabin" feature of approximately this period was also an outstanding production of its time. It was made in 1913 at the first Universal studios, located at Sunset Boulevard and Gower Street in Hollywood. Its ice scenes were made at Mount Wilson and artfully designed and linoleum covered soap boxes were utilized to help out the fading powers of King Winter, routed from this impressive stronghold. A few facts in connection with it may be of some historical interest at the present time, in view of a gigantic super-production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" which Universal is rapidly bringing to completion this summer at the new Universal studios located at Universal City on the Los Angeles River.

Harry Pollard, in addition to directing, played the role of Uncle Tom. It was the last picture in which he appeared as an actor. From then on he devoted his talents exclusively to directing. It was also the first picture in which Robert Leonard ever appeared. He played the role of Simon Legree. Marguerita Fischer, who plays Eliza in the present super-production, was cast in the role of Topsy in Universal's four-reel Super of thirteen years ago. Eddie Lyons played Marks the Lawyer, a role played in the present production by Lucien Littlefield. Jack McDonald was Haley, the role played now by Adolph Millar. Harry Tenbrook played Harris the Slave Owner, in which Seymour Zeff is at present cast. George Siegmund in the 1927 production plays the role of Simon Legree. Ivar Shepherd, one of the stars of yesteryear, played the role of Cassie thirteen years ago. This year it will be played by Eulalie Jensen. Edna Maison, one of Universal's first women stars, was the Eliza of the earlier production; while Gertrude Short, then a wee bit of a girl, played Little Eva, which Harry Pollard this year gave to little Virginia Gray, the daughter of the Universal City librarian. Harry Pollard's own role of Uncle Tom has been assigned to James B. Lowe, who is proving a revelation in the dramatic intensity and picturesque verity which he is putting into the role. Where there were twelve in the cast of the 1913 "Uncle Tom's Cabin," there are over fifty in the 1927 model.

The sets of 1913 were crude and unconvincing. The cotton fields, the St. Claire mansion, the Mississippi River steam boats, were painted drops. The whole production cost less than ten thousand dollars. Nothing about "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the present year is crude or painted or inexpensive. The company has been all over the United States photographing actual locations and a tremendous amount of substantial building has produced the permanent settings which are now a feature of Universal City. Its cost will be very close to two million dollars, and the production will have occupied a year and a half in the making, as opposed to three weeks for its progenitor.

The older generation of picture goers will remember such production efforts as "Traffic in Souls," "Samson," "Damon and Pythias," "Neptune's Daughter," and "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." They were Universal's first spurt toward leadership in production activities. In the middle distance and more easily remembered are the von Stroheim group of pictures—"Blind Husbands," "The Devil's Pass Key" and "Foolish Wives." Others of this period which were outstanding in their day were "The Virgin of Stamboul," "Merry Go Round," "The Storm," "Outside the Law," "The Heart of Humanity," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," and, more recently, "The Phantom of the Opera."

With the coming year Universal points with pride to its picture line-up for 1927-1928. It includes such supers as "The Cat and the Canary," "Les Miserables," "The Big Gun," "Show Boat," "Love Me and the World is Mine," "The Man Who Laughs," and Reginald Denny in "Out All Night," "The Third Party," "The Best Policy" and "Painting the Town." Its Jewel line-up includes "Alias the Deacon," "Back to God's Country," "The Chinese Parrot," "The Small Bachelor" and "The Crimson Hour."

Universal goes on and upward.

Mr. Laemmle Presents—

*A Few of the Stars Who Shine
For Universal*

IN eighteen years of motion picture production, Carl Laemmle has had the honor of introducing to the motion picture public a number of stars, players and directors of whom he feels very justly proud. The twentieth anniversary of the establishment of MOVING PICTURE WORLD affords an opportunity of glancing back historically over these figures of the past and of chronicling as well those who seem likely to make their mark in the future.

Mr. Laemmle has always felt very proud of the fact, for instance, that it was in a Universal picture and through the Universal organization that the beloved Wally Reid received his apprenticeship and his start along the road to the popularity which ultimately came to him, a world-wide adoration, which has never been equalled in the moving picture business. It is also a matter of pride to him that it was through his organization, through his own faith in the man's personality, that Erich von Stroheim had the opportunity to exploit the tremendous talent he possesses as a director. Louise Fazenda and Pearl White started their careers in the old Eclair Company, which was released so many years through the Universal distributing system. J. Warren Kerrigan began his conquering career as a film hero in Universal pictures. Ben Turpin first showed his countenance in a Universal picture, and before that he was a "prop" boy in the Imp studio. Larry Semon left an A-1 cartoon job on the Evening Sun to embark on a picture career in the old Imp studio on Eleventh avenue. Lon Chaney spent at Universal City the first eight years of his film career in preparing himself for the eventual stardom and tremendous popularity which has since come to him in many pictures.

Lois Wilson is the only remaining star of a number who were picked by Carl Laemmle in the first and still the greatest motion picture beauty contest ever held.

The stars and directors developed or given their major start by Carl Laemmle, if assembled in one gigantic company, would represent a present salary list remarkable even in this industry. See the list below.

The Universal organization has introduced several personalities of other lines of endeavor. It brought Jack Dempsey, James J. Corbett and Jess Willard from the prize fight arena to the screen. It gave Anna Pavlova, celebrated Russian ballet dancer, her first and only opportunity on the screen in "The Dumb Girl of Portici." It presented Lulu Glaser, Lawrence D'Orsay, Effie Shannon, Cyril Scott, David Belasco, Florenz Ziegfeld, Constance Binney, Annette Kellerman, Marie Tempest, Henrietta Crosman and Helen Ware exclusively on the screen.

Carl Laemmle has developed as stars Mary Pickford, King Baggot, Louise Glaum, Kenneth Harlan, Carter De Haven, Mildred Harris, Priscilla Dean, Raymond Griffith, Jean Hersholt, Marie Prevost, Jack Holt, Herbert Rawlinson, Louise Lovely, Mary MacLaren, Cleo Madison, Hoot Gibson, Carmel Myers, Betty Compson, Rudolph Valentino, Laura La Plante, Mary Philbin, Reginald Denny and Norman Kerry, and it intends to develop this next year such personalities as Conrad Veidt, Ivan Mos-kine, George Lewis, Dorothy Gulliver, Fred Humes, Ted Wells, Hayden Stevenson, Al Wilson, Ethlyne Clair, Marian Nixon, Barbara Worth, Barbara Kent and June Marlowe.

Universal has discovered and brought to popularity such directors as Rupert Julian, Hobart Henley, Jack Ford, William A. Seiter, Henry MacRae, William Beaudine, Erich von Stroheim, Clarence Brown, Edward Sloman, Edward Laemmle, Stuart Paton, Emory Johnson, Mel Brown, Edward Sedgwick, the late Lynn Reynolds, Harry Pollard, who is now directing "Uncle Tom's Cabin"; Herbert Brenon and the late George Loane Tucker, and it was the first to present an American picture directed by A. E. Dupont, "Love Me and the World Is Mine"; and by Paul Leni, "The Cat and the Canary."

Important figures in the business end of the moving pictures who owe their start to Universal are Irving Thalberg, William Siström, Joe Brandt, Jack and Harry Cohn, M. Henri Hoffman, Ned Depinet, E. J. Smith and the late Thomas H. Ince. Dozens and scores of others of only lesser note might be named who owe their start to fame to Universal and Carl Laemmle.

Scenes from "The Cat and the Canary," one of Universal's Big Next Season Pictures.

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, recently outlined the production schedule for its twenty-first year. The program will necessitate an expenditure of $15,500,000. This will make 1927 the greatest production year in the twenty-one years' history of the company by several million dollars and some five productions.

Eleven Broadway plays and eleven popular novels will be presented in the schedule of eleven special productions and thirty-three feature pictures. Twenty-two thrill dramas will complete the sixty-six full length pictures now in the process of production and adaptation.

One-third of the total appropriation will be expended in the production of short subjects which will include "The Collegians" series, five serials, one and two-reel comedies and westerns and the International Newsreel. There will be 600 reels of individual releases on the short subject schedule.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" heads the list of special productions. When it is completed in July it will have been in production two years, will have a cast of forty-five and represent an investment of $2,000,000. It has earned for Harry Pollard, the director, a five years' contract.

Other equally important special productions will include the adaptation of Edna Ferber's popular novel, "Show Boat," which will be directed by Pollard upon his completion of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "The Big Gun," by Richard Barry, will star George Lewis; "The Cat and the Canary," already completed by Paul Leni; "Love Me and the World Is Mine," in which Mary Philbin and Norman Kerry co-star; "Les Miserables," soon ready for release; "The Man Who Laughs," to be made with Conrad Veidt in the title role and four Reginald Denny productions titled "Out All Night," "The Third Party," "The Best Policy" and "Painting the Town."

Of the eleven plays purchased for production "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and "The Cat and the Canary" will be in the special class. The others are "Alias the Deacon," by John B. Hymer and Leroy Clemmens; "We Americans," by Milton H. Gropper and Max Siegel; "Cheating Cheaters," by Max Marcini; "A Pair of Silk Stockings," by Cyril Harcourt; "The Four Flushers," by Caesar Dunn; "Polish Blood," by Leo Stein and E. Cuevo and "The Third Party," by Mark Swan.

The eleven books will include "Les Miserables," "Show Boat," "The Big Gun," "The Affairs of Hannerl" (now "Love Me and the World Is Mine"), by Rudolph Hans Bartsch; and Victor Hugo's "The Man Who Laughs,"

Universal Plans to Spend $15,000,000

Among the well-known authors who have prepared original stories for production are William Dudley Pelley, Edwin Justice Mayer, Byron Morgan and Stewart Lake.

The stars and featured players in these productions will be Reginald Denny, Laura La Plante, Marian Nixon, Mary Philbin, Conrad Veidt, Jean Hersholt, Ivan Moskine, George Lewis, Hoot Gibson, Raymond Keane, Renee Adoree, Betty Compson, Barbara Worth, June Marlowe, Barbara Kent, Al Wilson, Dorothy Gulliver, Fred Humes, Rex, the wild horse, and Dynamite, the police dog.

The directors who will make these pictures will include Harry Pollard, Paul Leni, Mel Brown, William A. Seiter, Edward Sloman, Irvin Willat, Sidney Olcott, Wesley Ruggles, Emory Johnson, Edward Laemmle and Henry MacRae.

Twenty Years Ago

The principal picture makers were Vitagraph, Edison, Lubin, Miles Brothers, Melies, and Selig. The studio locations were New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia. Hollywood was not yet dreamed of nor the golden California sunshine transmuted into even more golden dollars. Admissions were five cents and the "chase" picture was the favorite entertainment. Those were the happy days.

The Shelby mansion, built for Universal's "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and two scenes from that master production.

A Story About Youth and An Immigrant of 1884

ON St. Valentine's Day, 1884, a young man lugged a heavy telescope valise down the gangway of the Steamship Neckar, just arrived in New York from Hamburg, and eagerly set foot in America, the land of opportunity. He had only $50 in his pocket and his entire material goods and chattels were included in the telescope valise which carried his clothing and the few personal articles he had brought with him from his little home in Laupheim, Germany. But he had the fire and enthusiasm of 17 years and unbounded confidence in his own ability in this new land.

A few days later found him in his first job in America—handy boy in a little drug-store in lower New York, running errands, making deliveries, and sweeping the floor. It was an inauspicious beginning for an ambitious youngster. Neither did it appeal to his sense of hope and progress. He did not find the foreign quarter vastly different from any European city.

As soon as he could save railroad fare, he passed the drug-store broom on to less ambitious hands and started for the Great West. This time he got as far as Chicago. Again, stern necessity halted his craving for adventure and he was forced to sign his name to the payroll of a Chicago department store.

Several months later he moved on, this time to South Dakota, where he became a full-fledged farmer's helper, in a land that was only a few brief years removed from Red-skin raids and uprisings. For his daybreak to dark work, vying with men twice his size and hardened by experience, he received the gigantic sum of $4 a month and board. The hard work made a valiant ally of his appetite, which helped him to even up that $4 a month proposition.

The following year found him back in Chicago, where he obtained employment with Butler Brothers. He began to develop a wizardry at figures and accounting that was to stand him well in the future.

Two years later he became an expert bookkeeper, and for the next six years he was engaged in that capacity by several Chicago concerns. In the meantime, he had thoroughly made up his mind that America was his land henceforth, and as soon as his five year period was up, completed his naturalization.

In 1894, just ten years after landing in America, he went to Oshkosh, Wis., to fill an important position as bookkeeper in a big department store. Four years later he was made general manager of the company, a position he occupied for eight more years. During the latter part of this time he began to take an interest in motion pictures—not a personal interest, but a more than usual interest in this new and uncanny amusement.

In 1906 he took stock of his success. He found to his credit $2,500, a good steady but unprogressive position, plenty of ambition still left, and the health and vigor of a man in his prime, 39 years old. On the other side of the ledger was the fact that he was getting in a rut.

He decided to "move on" again. This time back to Chicago. There he started to look around for a business where his $2,500 would double, treble and pyramid. He thought of a five and ten cent store, and while he was looking he found the opportunity to visit several new motion picture shows, such as the now famous Hale's Tour.

What astounded him the most, however, was not the pictures, but the stream of people who marched in unending line up to the ticket window, paid their dimes, marched in, saw the picture and were out again in a few minutes. Here was a five and ten cent idea for you!

Right then and there he decided that the sure road to success, the short cut to fortune was in operating a moving picture theatre. After consulting with a young Chicago advertising man whose advice he esteemed, he acquired a store in Milwaukee avenue, Chicago, and on February 24, 1906, opened the White-front Theatre, store-front, camp chairs and everything.

The day of Carl Laemmle's decision to forsake the clothing business in Oshkosh and to launch his ship upon the moving picture sea was a momentous one, not only for him, but for the industry. Almost every progressive step taken in the industry from that day to this bears the stamp of his initiation.

Two months after his first theatre was opened, he opened another one, also in Chicago. The young advertising man was constantly at his right hand and in his councils. He has been so ever since. His name is R. H. Cochrane, now vice-president of the vast Universal interests to Laemmle's president. The industry offers no parallel to such continued and successful team-work on the part of two men.

Laemmle's rise to position and power in the moving picture industry since that eventful day in 1906 has been continuous and along epochal lines. Opportunity never had to knock on Laemmle's door but once. He always answered promptly.

The ascendancy of Carl Laemmle may be readily catalogued. An analysis shows the definite steps of his growth. His second great step, and it was epochal for him, occurred in October, 1906. As an operator of two theatres, he found great trouble in obtaining good and sufficient films to show. So he established the Laemmle Film Service, in Chicago, to provide a proper supply of films for his own theatres and to add to his profits by supplying others.

The new venture grew by leaps and bounds. He knew the problems of the exhibitor because he was one himself. Other exhibitors found his service best calculated to their needs. In 1907 he increased his service by establishing exchanges in Evansville, Memphis and Omaha. The next year saw new Laemmle exchanges in Minneapolis, Portland, Ore., Salt Lake City, Montreal and Winnipeg. The exchange activity dwarfed his theatre interests, but for a time he continued to hold onto his original houses for the purpose of keeping his fingers on the pulse of the exhibition game, the better to serve his exchange customers.

It was about this time that the great Patents fight began to come to a head in the film industry. The Patents Company was very exacting towards exhibitors, charging them fees for the privilege of using projection machines and threatening those using independent pictures not made under the paternal wing of the Patents Company and its patented cameras.

Laemmle took another big step—a daring step because he pitted his puny power against the might of the Big Money interests in the industry. He severed his relations with the Patents Company and declared himself an Independent.

This was in April, 1909. Immediately Laemmle became the rallying point for the independents. He soon was their recognized standard bearer. In May of that year, Laemmle took another great step. He became a producer of films. This step was forced by his desire to get a proper supply of pictures for his exchanges. It was a move similar in motivation to that which forced him into the exchange field to get a supply of pictures for his theatres.

Entry into the producing field was brought about by the formation of the Independent Moving Picture Company by Laemmle—this name abbreviated to IMP, the brand of pictures which led the vanguard of the Independent forces struggling against the General Film Company. The first picture made by the Imp concern was "Hiawatha," which had the astounding length of 989 feet, a long picture in those days. This initial production was released in October, 1909. A second, "Love's Stratagem," 954 feet in length, followed several weeks later.

The next three years saw that epic battle between the Independents, led by Carl Laemmle and IMP pictures against the Film Trust, in which fortunes were made and lost and the entire industry at stake time and time again. This war, month in and month out, saw that novel and brilliant series of cartoon advertisements and statements evolved by Laemmle and R. H. Cochrane, which pounded, ridiculed and deeply wounded the "General Flimco," as the trust was amusingly depicted in the campaign. This campaign forced a Federal investigation of the trust and ultimately led to its dissolution by the Government, although by the time the decision was handed down the Independents had won their battle and the industry had taken a new lease on life.

The next big step taken by Laemmle was the formation, in May, 1920, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, composed of six of the leading independent producers, controlled by such veterans as Laemmle, Charles Bauman, David Horsley, P. A. Powers and W. H. Swanson. Offices were opened at No. 1 Union Square, New York City. During the summer of this same year, Laemmle initiated another important move in the industry. He established the first European exchange for Independent American pictures.

The history of Universal from 1912 has not been without its struggles, its bitter fights, and its perilous periods, but nevertheless it has been one of continuous progress and rapidly rising prestige. Struggle for control of the company existed over a number of years, one after another of the original incorporators dropping out. The control finally narrowed down to Laemmle and his ally Cochrane on the one hand and P. A. Powers on the other. This status quo existed until 1920, when Powers sold out to Laemmle and Cochrane and the corporation was reorganized into the Universal Pictures Corporation.

In the production field, Laemmle's forward steps were, in turn, the moving of his production unit to New York, early in his fight with the Film trust, and shortly after Universal was formed, the beginning of production in California, in a studio in Hollywood, more recently known as the Stern Brothers studio, which burned last summer. In 1914, Universal bought a large tract several miles from Hollywood, and in 1915 Universal City, the first big production plant, was opened as the wonder of the age. Today this plant stands unique in the production field as the most elaborate and complete production center in the world.

Although Universal later built a studio and a factory at Fort Lee, N. J., the bulk of production has continued to be handled on the West Coast. Laemmle has never swerved from his belief that California and his Universal City plant offer the best opportunities for picture making. The Fort Lee studio long has been used by Universal solely for renting purposes. The factory, however, is going at full blast, turning out the millions of feet of positive supplied to Universal customers throughout the world.

Even in its physical moves, Universal led the way to the industry. It was the first company to move up-town from the Union Square section. This move made late in 1912, was to 1600 Broadway, and shortly was followed by other companies, until that section became the recognized film center. In 1924 Universal again moved, this time to the beautiful Heckscher Building, Fifth avenue and 57th street.

In 1925, the Universal Pictures Corporation issued its first stock to the public and became established upon the New York stock exchange. This year also saw another big move on the part of Laemmle. During the years between his first theatrical venture and the final entry of Universal into its full strength, power and prestige, Laemmle's theatre holdings were nominal, being merely enough to enable him to keep in touch with the exhibitor's problems, and to serve Universal pictures in a few of the key centers, not only in the United States and Canada, but also in other parts of the world, where the far flung Universal banners were rapidly being pushed to complete the encircling of the globe with Universal exchanges, now an accomplished fact.

Late in 1925, Laemmle launched upon a gigantic theatre enterprise, with 1,000 theatres as the first objective. Since that time, by construction and purchase, Universal interests have acquired about 300 theatres throughout the United States and Canada. Others are going up in various parts of the world. With keen perception, these theatres have been obtained in localities where Universal formerly suffered by reason of insufficient outlet for its product. Also, they are strategically located, and the Laemmle organization now finds itself in an enviable position by reason of its combined producing, distribution and exhibition facilities.

Laemmle's Twentieth Anniversary in the industry last year was celebrated far and wide by film men, exhibitors and others in the industry. His ever-fluttering banner of "Give the Exhibitor a Fair Break" has made him the best liked producer in the industry. Thus, when he was stricken with appendicitis on his trip to Europe last summer and barely escaped with his life, undergoing a severe operation and weeks of recuperation, bulletins from his bedside were eagerly read throughout the cinema world.

He recovered, returned to America, and bought the Thomas Ince estate near Hollywood, announcing that henceforth he would spend most of his time near the Universal City studios and personally supervise Universal's great output of pictures for the future. The occasion of his 60th Birthday recently was the signal for a celebration in Hollywood such as never before was accorded to a man in the film industry.

It is a far cry from the little immigrant boy of 1884 and the venturesome theatre pioneer of 1906 to the Carl Laemmle of today, with an organization extending into every civilized country of the globe and a prestige such as never could have been dreamed of by him in his early days. The answer is simple and it will be found in any lexicon. It is summed up in the words—ambition, determination, daring, far-sightedness, and, above all, humanness.

SHORT TALKS

ON

SHORT FEATURES

—Enthusiasm

No worth while success is ever achieved without enthusiasm. The finest theatre in the world would be a "flop" without it. No studio could hope to produce good pictures without it.

Enthusiasm is contagious. The exhibitor's keener interest in good short features, so evident everywhere, is reflecting itself in the studios. The result, as it will affect your box-office, is obvious.

I have just returned from Los Angeles, where the Educational Studios will soon be in full swing on their 1927-1928 comedy schedule. Educational has always been an organization of young men, with the enthusiasm of youth backed by experience. But I have never seen a more inspiring display of enthusiasm and confidence anywhere than was given by stars, directors and the whole studio staff. After seven years of steady progress they are determined to make 1927-1928 their biggest year. And they'll do it, to the profit of the thousands of exhibitors who always rely on Educational for the spice of their programs.

E. W. HAMMONS
Guiding Spirit of Educational

Educational Enthusiastic

PLANS for increased production activities at Educational Studios were announced this week by Mr. E. W. Hammons on his return from a flying visit to Los Angeles where, as president of the newly organized Educational Pictures, Inc., he launched Educational into the production as well as the distributing field.

For some time the units working at Educational Studios have produced the bulk of of the comedy product released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. Under the plans just completed by Mr. Hammons and the studio heads—Jack White, director-in-chief, and E. H. Allen, general manager—the Educational Studios' units will add several pictures to the established brands already well known as important features of Educational's program, and it is probable that another series will be announced shortly.

Lloyd Hamilton and Lupino Lane, star comedians at the Educational Studios, have been signed for new series of Hamilton and Lane Comedies with an increase in the number of Lane pictures from six to eight for the season. Hamilton also will make eight two-reel laugh subjects, which is the same number he has made for the current season.

The rapidly growing popularity of the three-year-old star, "Big Boy," whose work in Juvenile Comedies has brought forth the most enthusiastic praise everywhere during the last year, has called for an increase in the number of pictures in this series. "Big Boy" has therefore been signed up for eight Juvenile Comedies for the next season instead of the six to which the Juvenile series has been limited since its inauguration.

Johnny Arthur Re-Signs

Another of Educational's popular stars who has recently been re-signed for the 1927-1928 season is Johnny Arthur, whose fine work has added much to the popularity of the Tuxedo Comedy series, in which he will be seen again next season. Practically all of the stars who have contributed to the laugh making in the Mermaid Comedy series will be seen in these Jack White productions again next year. There will be eighteen pictures in this group of two-reel laugh makers. The single reel rough and tumble Cameo Comedies will also keep their big group of comedy favorites, who will be seen in twenty-six of these pictures.

Negotiations are now under way with a popular stage performer who has appeared occasionally in special comedy productions for Educational during the last few years and it is probable that Educational will soon announce a series with this star, who is known not only throughout this country but all over the world.

"Production on comedies for release this season at Educational Studios is practically completed," said Mr. Hammons. "The last camera work on this year's product should be finished within a couple of weeks. After this there will be only a very brief shut-down at Educational Studios for necessary work in preparation for next year's production and the new producing season will get under way at the earliest period in the record of these producing units.

Mr. Hammons Enthusiastic

"I found the greatest enthusiasm evident throughout the entire studio organization, reflecting the great attention that is being paid to short subjects by the entire industry. Not only the directors and stars, but every last man in every one of these producing units is encouraged by the industry's new attitude toward short subjects and is right on his toes to take advantage of this and to make the next season the greatest in Educational Pictures history."

Charm and Color Beautify Romance Films

DESCRIBED by newspaper and magazine critics as well as by exhibitors and educators as exceptional subjects, gems in color and revelations as novel pictures, the three Romance Productions released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., have met with remarkable success ever since "The Vision" was released in May, 1926. Finished in natural color by means of the Technicolor Process, each picture of the series has been based on Arthur Maude's interpretation of the story of what inspired world renowned masters to do their famous paintings.

In the instance of "The Vision," Maude gave the story underlying the painting, "Speak! Speak!" In this two-reel production, Julianne Johnston, who was leading lady for Douglas Fairbanks in "The Thief of Bagdad," and John Roche, who played in "Marry Me," "The Man Upstairs," and other feature productions, took the feature roles.

"The Vision" was probably more extensively exploited and better received than any previous picture of this length. As the initial two-reel picture to be done entirely in Technicolor, it aroused comment as to the possible use of this process in feature length productions more generally and hinted at the probability of combining new lighting methods and the Technicolor Process to obtain the illusion of depth in pictures.

The Better Films Committee of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures voted it an exceptional photoplay and said of it, speaking through its official publication:

"The Vision" deserves attention both as an illustration of a serious attempt to make short pictures of outstanding merit and because it is one of the most successful examples of the new Technicolor Process yet produced. This picture certainly shows a great advance in the natural reproduction of color on the screen and perhaps foreshadows a much wider use of colors in motion pictures."

"The Blue Boy," which was the second picture of the series, was based on Maude's conception of what inspired Sir Thomas Gainsborough to paint "The Blue Boy." The third, "The Mona Lisa," was Maude's interpretation of the story back of the "Mona Lisa," Leonardo da Vinci's immortal painting.

On each of the Romance Productions, exhibitors were supplied with newspaper or tabloid newspaper size press sheets in eight pages. In addition to an unusually large number of newspaper mats and electros, advertising layouts and cuts and publicity stories, special exploitation ideas and tie-ups were outlined in detail in the press sheets. A special mat, giving the outline form of the painting on which the production was based, was supplied to exhibitors for one exploitation stunt. A remarkable array of reproductions of the famous paintings and a complete list of accessories also were made available to exhibitors. Special suggested presentation ideas as well as Thematic Music Cue sheets also were furnished with each picture.

Christie's Educational Packed With Fun

WITH "Dumb Belles," a Billy Dooley Comedy, completed, Harold Beaudine starting a new Jimmie Adams Comedy, and Jack Duffy nearing the end of production work on a new Christie Comedy, "Queer Ducks," the Christie Studio is the scene of exceptional activity for this season of the year, and is entering the final stages of production work on its program of comedies for Educational release this season, with the fun valve wide open.
